Says Report On Israel Crisis False

NEW YORK — The Israel Office of Information has received the following information from Tel Aviv concerning the present economic situation in Israel:

"During the last few days, economic matters have been in the forefront of public attention in Israel. Following detailed statements on the economic situation which were made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance at the Mapai Party conference last week, an erroneous report over the Swiss radio ascribed to the Prime Minister the intention to freeze bank accounts and introduce compulsory government loans.

"These false rumors aroused considerable disquiet, particularly as they coincided with the introduction of clothes rationing and certain tension over the international situation.

"A limited volume of withdrawals of bank deposits took place, amounting in all to $2,500,000. These withdrawals represent only about two percent of total bank deposits in the country, and there has already been a marked tendency towards redepositing of these funds.

"Public nervousness also expressed itself in a further considerable rise of the free market price for gold sovereigns. It should, however, be borne in mind that these quotations have no influence on, and no relation to, exchange rates and essential commodities. Foodstuffs and utility goods are available as usual."

Morgenthau Given Service Award

MINNEAPOLIS — Henry Morgenthau, Jr., of New York, former Secretary of the Treasury, is the 1950 recipient of the Annual National Service Award of Phi Epsilon Pi social fraternity. It was announced here by Louis D. Traurig, Waterbury, Conn., national president of the organization.

Mr. Morgenthau, now general chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, was selected as the person who, in the past year, has made "the richest contribution to the essential Jewish life of America." The 16th prominent American to be cited by Phi Epsilon Pi for outstanding public service, the noted statesman-philanthropist was given the award in absentia at the fraternity's 46th annual convention in the Dyckman Hotel here.

GJC Initial Gift Affair Sept. 14; Large Crowd to Hear Barkley

Billion Bond Issue Urged for Israel

JERUSALEM—Most American Jewish leaders conferring here with Israeli officials and Jewish agency representatives appeared this week to favor an Israeli government bond issue to raise $1,000,000,000 in the United States. The money would be subscribed to finance the settlement of 600,000 Jewish immigrants in Israel in the next three years.

Robert R. Nathan, American economist, told the conference that American Jewry should lend "the greater part" of $1,000,000,000 to help Israel carry out its immigration plan.

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion earlier declared the cost of settling 600,000 Jews from Europe, Africa and Asia would be about $1,500,000,000, two-thirds of which has to come from abroad. Moses A. Leavitt of New York, executive vice chairman of the joint distribution committee, raised a voice of caution, however. He urged Israel to reconsider its policy of unlimited immigration "to avoid economic disaster."

His views were opposed by Judge K. Morris Rothenberg of New York, Palestine appeal chairman, and Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, director general of the joint distribution committee.

Schwartz said immigration cannot be reduced unless Israel sends immigrant ships back to Romania. He explained that 8500 European Jews are being embarked in Romania each month, "a movement over which the Israeli government has no control."

To Address Initial Gift Audience

GOV. JOHN O. PASTORE

Stang to Feature GJC YAD Affair

Reservations are already pouring in for the Young Adult Division, GJC Initial Gift Affair to be held September 19th at the Ledgemont Country Club. A full day and evening of entertainment has been planned with golf and swimming the order of the day, and dinner and dancing the plan for the evening.

Arnold Stang, famed radio, television and moving picture comedian will be the guest of honor. Stang was seen on television last year on the Milton Berle show where he popularized the famous "Hi-ya Shloime," satirizing the hand waver in the live studio audience.

In line with the expected increases in attendance over last year, the dinner section of the program will be held in the tent erected at Ledgemont for the GJC affairs. Last year's attendance of 240 people overflowed into the porches around the dining room, causing the committee to decide to hold this year's dinner in the tent.

Dancing will be held in the club house following dinner.

Invitations have been sent out, and all desiring to attend are urged to make their reservations as soon as possible. Reservations may be made by calling the General Jewish Committee at Gaspee 1-4111 or mailing the return postcards inclosed with the invitation.

State, City Officials at Campaign Opening

An avalanche of reservations, following the announcement of Vice-President Alben W. Barkley's presence as guest of honor at the Sept. 14 Initial Gifts Dinner of the General Jewish Committee of Providence, has resulted in a strong plea from GJC officials for immediate return of outstanding invitation reservation cards.

Alvin A. Sopkin, GJC president, pointed out this week that "to assure everyone of seating facilities, we must know at once exactly how many persons are planning to attend."

At the same time, Sopkin expressed regret that the large attendance and space limitations would preclude inviting women guests. Numerous inquiries have been received at the GJC offices regarding the possibility of male members bringing their wives.

Sopkin explained that, as in previous years, the dinner and meeting would be staged in a large canvas tent, which will adjoin the clubhouse at Ledgemont Country Club.

"Physical limitations," he said, "prevent us from inviting additional guests. I might call attention to the fact, however, that the Women's Division is staging a gala Initial Gifts Dinner of its own on Sept. 18, at which a number of outstanding personalities will be present."

Ilika Chase, star of stage, screen and radio, and Mrs. S. Alexander Brailove, chairman of the National Women's Division of the United Jewish Appeal, will head the star-studded program being arranged by the Women's Division for its Sept. 18 affair.

Governor, Mayor to Attend
Joseph W. Ress, campaign chairman, stated this week that word had been received from both Gov. John O. Pastore and Mayor Dennis J. Roberts that they will be present at the Sept. 14 affair. Present arrangements indicate that Vice-President Barkley will arrive late in the afternoon of Sept. 14, at Hillsgrove Airport where he will be greeted by a delegation of GJC officials and, provided with a police escort direct to Ledgemont.

The reception in his honor will begin at 6 o'clock.

Ress called attention this week to the advent of the Jewish high holidays and stated: "As we cross the threshold of another year of destiny, we are reminded that there is no greater means of expressing our appreciation for the favors we enjoy than by dedicating ourselves to wholehearted

Ranting John

Remember communism is Yiddish. I understand that every member of the Politburo around Stalin is either Yiddish or married to one, and that includes Stalin himself.

No, you did not read this outburst of nonsense in your daily newspaper. Thank goodness for that! Nor did you hear it over the radio. Fact is, it was not uttered at all. But taxpayers' money was used to print that and thirteen additional columns of similar balderdash in a recent issue of the Congressional Record. At this writing no one knows how many reprints will be distributed.

Yes, you have guessed it. It is an excerpt from the ranting of the Dixie Demagogue, John Rankin.

Says the eternal optimist: Gam Zu Yaavor—that too shall pass.

All to the Good

All that can be said at this time by way of comment relative to the recent action of the American Medical Association in eliminating designations of race, creed and color from the advertising columns of the Journal is: so much, so good. Truth is, the Journal never should have been a party to this type of discrimination; it should not have been necessary to invoke the law in order to accomplish something that should always have been in effect. However, in this as in so many other instances, better late than never.

Webster's dictionary defines youth as "the period when one is young."

To the Jewish community of Pittsburgh, however, the word also means utilizing this period to develop the maximum potentialities of young people. It means participation in Jewish communal service... instilling a knowledge and understanding of Jewish life... and finally, developing future leaders of the American and Jewish communities.

The Pittsburgh program to achieve these objectives started four years ago when the Boards of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies and United Jewish Fund created a joint Youth Advisory Committee to serve as the policy-making body for communal activities carried on by young adults. As a result, the community reaped great dividends in this brief span of time. Operating under the concept that the Federation and Fund are one entity, the Youth Advisory Committee scored tremendous achievements in these areas:

Fund Raising — The total amount of contributions made by young people grew from $10,000 in 1946 to $60,000 in 1949. Similarly, there was an increase in the number of contributors in the 18-30 age category from 2,190 to 4,282.

Community Service — Young adults are serving as volunteer workers in health and welfare agencies, camps and other Jewish local agencies. Through this service, they obtain first-hand knowledge of the agencies' programs and develop a sense of the intergration of community activities and the role of the central community organization.

Leadership — Many young people have developed to such an extent that they have been elevated to responsible positions on various committees of the Federation and the Fund. In addition, some are serving on the boards of local agencies.

Education — A number of seminars on the scope and purpose of community organization, community relations, Zionism, etc., have been held since 1946. As part of this activity, four annual weekend conferences provided workers and leaders in the Youth Advisory Committee with an opportunity to discuss major problems in Jewish life which concern them; and to stimulate their thinking on these issues.

Supplementing its educational program, the YAC publishes one of the finest young adult newspapers in the country. True to its name, the "Reflector" mirrors latest news of the youth groups and their activities.

In Pittsburgh, the accent is definitely on youth!

Community Briefs
Marking the first addition to its building program since 1923, the Jewish Welfare Federation of Oakland has started the construction of a Home for Jewish Aged. The new building, in addition to meeting the individual and social needs of the 40 residents, will also serve as a center of group work activities for all the aged in the community.

"One Man's Opinion"

By BERNARD SEGAL

Bigger Than You Are

He was a slight man, and his voice was soft, and he said:

"You can be bigger than yourself by extending yourself into the lives of other people."

That was months ago, and I hardly remember what else the man said on that late afternoon when I sat in the back row of a darkening auditorium listening to one speaker after another. But this one phrase lingers with me, and I can think of no better text to use for this opening column of the new season.

In a few short weeks the drive for the United Jewish Appeal will begin in our community. Already committees are mapping plans, and officers are gearing machinery for a campaign to equal the needs. You can remain in the sidelines, if you wish, and await the ringing of your doorbell for a contribution.

But you could be bigger than yourself! How? Very simple.

You call the office of the General Jewish Committee, and you offer your help. You are assigned to do some work on a committee of your choice. You do more than just contribute. You become a door-bell ringer in your neighborhood, among the members of your trade or profession, at your club or social group. You extend yourself into the lives of millions in Europe and in Asia. Your hand and your heart reach out into distant places and toward unknown homes.

You become bigger than yourself.

You can extend yourself into the future. All through the coming year we will be watching the progress in the building of the new Miriam Hospital. It is to be a modern hospital, we are told, of excellent equipment and service. It will, we hope, also retain some of the old idealism that inspired the builders of the old Miriam. But before the new structure is ready for use, there will be a call for participation of all of us in this community project.

Here, again, you may, if you please, leave the burden of the work to others, and be content to merely watch the building go up. Or you may prefer to extend yourself into the future of the hospital, by lending your means and your talents to the new venture.

cel established a Community Activities Bureau which enables the Jewish population to engage in social, cultural and athletic efforts under trained and competent leadership. In just a few months, the broadly representative Bureau has begun a far-flung network of activities for all age levels. These include a day camp, adult recreation, preparations for an adult Jewish educational institute, and the development of leadership courses for trained advisors to Jewish youth groups.

ATTENDING CONCLAVE

Miss Rosalie Jacobs of 179 Potters Avenue is one of the delegates to the 1950 Assembly of the National Jewish Youth Conference, which ends today at Camp Wei-Met, Narrowsburg, N. Y. Miss Jacobs is representing the Young Adult Council.

I can foresee a very active season for the Miriam Hospital Association. The members will have to adjust their aims to a hospital thrice the size of the old one, and to opportunities for service never dreamed of before. They will also have to insist on getting greater responsibilities in the affairs of the hospital, and be prepared to shoulder these responsibilities.

What does all this mean?

It means that more and more people will have the chance to become bigger than themselves, by extending themselves into a community project that will serve the sick of our own days, and of days to come.

You can be bigger than you are today, by extending yourself into the tomorrow.

Last week I sat around a conference table at the Jewish Community Center on Benefit Street. Half a dozen young people (I am not including myself, who represented those who are over thirty-nine) were considering the blue-prints for Center activities during the coming season. Granted that half of these projects will never go further than the blue-print stage, there still remains a goodly number of items that will add to the growth of many a personality, and enrich many a life culturally and socially before the season is over. This conference, and others to follow, will result in a colorful program of youth and adult activities on a community-wide basis. The program is so varied that it will appeal to as many tastes and interests as there are to be expected in a community. The program, to be effective, will have to utilize the talents of a great many of us.

Here, too, you can be bigger than yourself by extending your talents and capacities in the service of the Center.

We are now on the threshold of a New Year. Rosh Hashanah was never meant to be a time for resolutions. I shall therefore refrain from urging you to make a resolution. But Rosh Hashanah is a time for meditation. So when you meditate on this first day of the new year in the Jewish calendar, turn this phrase over in your mind, and see what meaning it may have for you.

"You can be bigger than you are, by extending yourself into the lives of others."

And a Happy New Year to all!

Fund Allocation Priority Scored

TEL AVIV—The tendency of Jews in the United States and other countries to give priority to their own institutions over institutions functioning in Israel when allocating funds raised in local Jewish communities was criticized here last week by Berl Locker, chairman of the Jewish Agency executive.

Speaking at the national conference of the Mapai, Israel Labor Party, he pointed out that such priority is not justified when thousands of Jewish immigrants in Israel are still condemned to live in tents and when many more thousands are confronted with the "loss of their very existence in certain countries" where they presently reside.

Armed Forces Seek Jewish Chaplains

NEW YORK—A nation-wide campaign to recruit additional Jewish chaplains urgently needed by all branches of the armed forces was launched this week by the Division of Religious Activities of the National Jewish Welfare Board at an emergency meeting held at JWB national offices.

Acting in immediate response to requests from the Army, Navy and Air Forces, the JWB Division of Religious Activities, representing the Conservative, Orthodox and Reform wings of the rabbinate, has undertaken an intensive effort to procure the additional chaplains from among the various branches of the American rabbinate.

In announcing the recruiting campaign, Dr. Solomon B. Freehof, chairman of the division, said "the national rabbinical organizations, working through the Division of Religious Activities of the National Jewish Welfare Board, will go all-out to make sure that the religious needs of the Jewish personnel in the armed forces are met adequately. The American Jewish community is anxious and ready to do everything within its power to aid our government to combat and overthrow those world forces which are seeking to destroy the democratic way of life."

The meeting of the Division of Religious Activities that launched the recruiting drive was attended by rabbis from all parts of the country representing the three major rabbinical associations—Central Conference of American Rabbis, Rabbinical Assembly of America and Rabbinical Council of America—as well as the Association of Jewish Chaplains in the Armed Forces. In World War II the Division of Religious Activities recruited 311 Jewish chaplains for the armed forces.

Use of Private Cars To Be Restricted

TEL AVIV—Restrictions on the use of private cars were announced this week as an additional measure in Israel's program to save foreign currency.

As of October 1, travel by car will be restricted to zones. Colored stickers will be issued to indicate the radius within which cars will be permitted to travel.

Armed Forces Seek Jewish Chaplains

NEW YORK—A nation-wide campaign to recruit additional Jewish chaplains urgently needed by all branches of the armed forces was launched this week by the Division of Religious Activities of the National Jewish Welfare Board at an emergency meeting held at JWB national offices.

Acting in immediate response to requests from the Army, Navy and Air Forces, the JWB Division of Religious Activities, representing the Conservative, Orthodox and Reform wings of the rabbinate, has undertaken an intensive effort to procure the additional chaplains from among the various branches of the American rabbinate.

In announcing the recruiting campaign, Dr. Solomon B. Freehof, chairman of the division, said "the national rabbinical organizations, working through the Division of Religious Activities of the National Jewish Welfare Board, will go all-out to make sure that the religious needs of the Jewish personnel in the armed forces are met adequately. The American Jewish community is anxious and ready to do everything within its power to aid our government to combat and overthrow those world forces which are seeking to destroy the democratic way of life."

The meeting of the Division of Religious Activities that launched the recruiting drive was attended by rabbis from all parts of the country representing the three major rabbinical associations—Central Conference of American Rabbis, Rabbinical Assembly of America and Rabbinical Council of America—as well as the Association of Jewish Chaplains in the Armed Forces. In World War II the Division of Religious Activities recruited 311 Jewish chaplains for the armed forces.

Use of Private Cars To Be Restricted

TEL AVIV—Restrictions on the use of private cars were announced this week as an additional measure in Israel's program to save foreign currency.

As of October 1, travel by car will be restricted to zones. Colored stickers will be issued to indicate the radius within which cars will be permitted to travel.

SYD COHEN:

Around the Circuit

Although the attention of the fans once again is on the Red Sox, with the Braves' pennant chances hanging like a dried scalp, there still is some future activity scheduled by the National Leaguers that is worthy of note.

One of the brighter spots among the Braves this year has been the play of Sid Gordon, and Sid will be honored with a day in Boston on Sunday, September 24, last Sunday home date of the season for the Tribe.

Sid provided many thrills for the fans this summer with his timely slugging and all-around play, and he became a quick favorite in New England, as he had been for years when he wore the uniform of the Giants. He is still the bone of contention in that big mid-winter swap last year that made the Braves look so good in the pre-season ratings and early season standings.

Southworth wouldn't okay the trade until he got Gordon, and Durocher stalled as long as possible, desperats to close the deal, but unwilling to yield Sid. Finally, of course, Leo did yield and Sid came to Boston. Getting Gordon helped the Braves a lot, and this Day for the smiling slugger is an expression of the fans' appreciation for the lift he gave the club and the paying customers.

Sid Gordon Day plans are already well under way, with the initiative being taken by Greater Boston B'nai B'rith. Sid is a member of B'nai B'rith, and all lodges throughout New England are being invited to participate in honoring him. Many other organizations, including the Knights of Pythias and the Sid Gordon Fan Club of Boston, are also in on the show.

The remarks made in this column last week about Mel Allen hold true also about Sid Gordon. When Sid slugs a homer or makes a sparkling catch in the field, nobody stops to consider his nationality before jumping up to applaud. Sid has been as popular in Boston, with its relatively small Jewish population, as he was in New York. As such, he is an unofficial but mighty effective ambassador of good will and a potent argument against anti-Semitism.

Anyone desiring more information on the subject is invited to contact James Baumstein, chairman, Sid Gordon Day Committee, % James and Mitchell Co., 333 Washington Street, Room 801, Boston 8, Mass.

Although this column keeps its nose out of the bowling columns once the season starts—save for the annual year-end tournaments—it is quite willing to make announcements about the opening of play for the various leagues. First to request the space is Gene Silverman, league president of the Fineman-Trinkel Post, JWV, who announces that the Post and Auxiliary will meet to open the season on September 19 at 9 o'clock at the new Bowladrome Alleys, 470 Smithfield Avenue. Reports from league members are that the league, entering its sophomore year, will be greatly expanded for the 1950-51 season.

Herb Goldis' remarks as printed in the column a few weeks back brought a reply from Mel Harriet of the league-leading Etoeff Construction crew. Regarding the importance of the role played by Bernie (Lefty) Davidson last year in pitching the Old Timers to the title in the playoffs, Mel has this to say:

"... I firmly believe that without Davidson the Old Old Timers of last year would have wound up just below Windsor Rhodes, the team I played with. In my opinion, Herb's team last year were just eight tired old men and one excellent pitcher.

"Last year our record was five wins and 17 defeats. One of the wins was against the Old Timers. It seems that when we played them, Davidson for some reason had not shown up. We beat them 8-3. Whoever pitched for them was just lobbing the ball over. Their sound defense committed 6 errors, we stole at least 8 bases...

"In the second game, however, it was different. The Old Timers had Davidson on the mound and we could not hit him. Result—we lost.

"I believe that if we had Davidson last year we would have made the playoffs. With one good pitcher eight hustling young ball players could beat nine old men anytime.

"This year Herb has added a few younger players... Steve Espo, Warren Foster, Billy Flanzbaum, and his center fielder, to mention a few. These young players go along with fair pitching to give Herb a pennant contender... BUT if he had Davidson he would be in first place. As a member of Etoeff's, I credit Davidson for our fine record, even though we have some of the best players in the league, and also a strong bench.

"Pitching is 75 percent in our league. When we played the Olympics we could not hit Abe Lobel (in my opinion the second best pitcher in the league), with the result that we lost.

"Yes, Herb was very fortunate indeed to have Bernie on his club last year... Bernie took eight fair players and carried them through the playoffs... so why not give credit where credit is due?"

Both sides have had their innings in this debate. You puts

The Miracle

OF THE TOY SELLER

TEN YEARS AGO this man was a thriving merchant in a small town in Eastern Europe.

Since then he has starved...shivered... been shot at...slept in cellars...lost his family...and has died a thousand deaths.

That he is alive at all is a miracle.

That he is alive in his new country, a free man, in a land they said could never be, is a miracle of miracles!

Today he sells toys in the streets of a little town of Israel, alone, but clutching that most precious of all possessions... Freedom.

If you have ever given any money to the United Jewish Appeal you helped save this man. You helped perform this miracle.

And miraculous as it was, the larger fight goes on. There is still much to do. Far to go.

Hundreds of thousands of Jews, many of them trapped in Arab lands, need help if they are to reach sanctuary in Israel.

Israel needs help in preparing for these new citizens—more farms, more homes, and more industries are needed at once.

Israel needs help in building a firm, strong future. New cities must rise. New land must be reclaimed from the desert.

Only through your gifts, your generosity,

can the fight that is half won be finished.

So GIVE! Give generously! Give all you can—and help finish the job.

Now, how does a rabbi get that way? Here's young Mortimer Zilch, a regular boy in a world in which regular boys turn out to be crack salesmen, doctors, lawyers, or, as in the case of our well-known Mr. Hillel, president of a massive widget corporation.
Mortimer's parents are troubled as to what to make of him. His father says a bright boy like Mortimer should be a lawyer. By personal experience of lawyers Mortimer's father thinks he knows how prosperous lawyers are; anyway, the lawyers to whom he pays fees.
Mortimer's mother says No, she'd rather have him be a Doctor. She learned to love doctors the time she was so sick; the way they were so nice and helpful.

In his earlier life Mortimer himself said he'd like to be a ballplayer like Lou Gehrig or Christy Mathewson of whom he knew from the classic history of baseball.
Then, on his 18th birthday—the legal age of stepping into manhood—Mortimer confided to his parents the career on which his mind had settled. They were all at dinner and his mother asked, "Well, Mortimer, have you made up your mind yet?"
"Yes, but maybe you won't like it."

"Oh, Mortimer, you know anything you want to be we're for."
"Well, I've decided to be a rabbi."
"A rabbi, Mortimer!"
"A rabbi!"
Not that Mortimer's parents had any prejudice against rabbis, but for their son they wished only a comfortable place in the world. They knew the tzoras the rabbi in their own town was made to suffer by the congregation. The members seemed continuously to be pushing rabbis out of their pulpit and putting new ones in. There was no satisfying that congregation.
"But Mortimer," his mother said, "it's nicer to be a doctor. A doctor has to please only one patient at a time."
His father said: "And a good lawyer can be fairly sure of an adequate living."
Mortimer replied that he had definitely made up his mind and his parents finally said it wasn't for them to stand in his way and if he wanted to be a rabbi that was their wish, too.

Now just what brought Mortimer to the idea of being a rabbi? Just what prompts other young men who go to be rabbis? Lately the Hebrew Union College—Jewish Institute of Religion has given some answers.
It got the answers by asking certain questions of recent applicants of the HUC rabbinate. Rabbi Robert L. Katz of the college's office of admissions has made the questions and the answers publicly available in a news letter.
How come that the applicant first thought of being a rabbi? How, in his maturity, did he finally become fixed on the idea? What impacts of religion helped him to determine his mind? What ideas has he about the function of a rabbi if he becomes one? What makes him think he's cut out to be a rabbi?

Some of the answers:

Making of

By AL SEGAL

came into my head was when I saw our temple burn. I can remember having an uncontrollable anger and then sorrow at the condition civilization had degenerated to. The constant beatings administered by the little Nazi bullies did not help matters."

From an American boy: "My father has devoted his life to help others and I try to emulate him. My parents exemplify all that I can possibly strive to attain."

Some answers to the question as to what was the deciding factor that finally brought an applicant to seek the rabbinate.

"Shortly after graduating from high school, two of my best friends were killed. Their death stimulated a spiritual yearning in me. Recently I have had a tragedy in my own life. I know that only by turning to God can we obtain the strength to meet our problems."

Another answer to the same question: "Mr.—told me that some form of social work, which I had expressed a desire to enter, was probably what I would be the most happy in. Then the idea struck me that I would be able to combine my talents best, in the rabbinical field."

Some answers to the question as to what impacts of religion caused applicants to make up their minds toward the rabbinate:

"It was Yom Kippur and I was in the Navy and it was impossible for me to get shore leave and go to a house of prayer. I felt I just had to pray that day and so I awoke an hour before reveille and climbed to the highest gun mounting on the ship and there I took out my little prayer book and prayed. But the prayer book was not adequate; I was soon ad-libbing my prayers, reciting all the things I wanted the world to be when I got home. . . . The significant thing about this incident was that it was not just me reciting prayers which had been written for me, but I was praying what I felt and thought. . . . I had moved a step closer to an intelligent religious feeling."

Another answer to the same question: "It was during my Army career that I found out that American Jewish youth is badly equipped to go out and meet the world. I attribute that to inadequate Jewish homelife, their Jewish education had been sadly neglected, their parents were just not interested in letting their children know of their heritage."

And what makes a boy think he's cut out to be a rabbi?

One answer: "I consider that my outstanding characteristics are my patience and my desire to work with people."

Another answer: "The most important thing of my experience has been the feeling of humility that comes with the realization of how little one knows. . . ."

And the best of the answers to the question, why do you want to be a rabbi: "I have discovered in myself the desire to practice social justice, to aid in the accomplishment of a Godly world. Finally I have discovered I might accomplish it only through the rabbinate."

Best wishes to the boys and may their bright dreams never turn into a nightmarish experience of being Congregation Anshe Giborim whose ways I have described in other columns.

HOLLYWOOD — George Jessel brought a plan to President Truman for creating a national theatre in Washington and came away warmed by the assurance of the President's interest in the plan. George's idea is to raise about $3,000,000 by popular subscription to build the kind of auditorium which could handle not only legitimate theatre but also operas, ballet, quasi-official and other entertainment—all on a non-segregated basis. The subscribers would be repaid from profits of the venture which would then be turned over to the government to own. George says Mr. Truman told him he believed Congress would accept such a gift, if offered by a group of private citizens.

Walter Hart, CBS director of "The Goldbergs" TV show, has been signed by Paramount studio to direct the film "Rise of the Goldbergs." Walter has established a precedent by being the first TV-ite to be signed for movie directing because of his television background.

Over at MGM, Producer Joe Pasternak continues to practice his craft. He describes it simply: "They give me four or five talents and $2,000,000. All I have to do is combine the talents so as to get the $2,000,000 back."

Few people know this but the Marx Brothers are coherent as a group and entirely individual otherwise. Gummo is easy-going and gentle; Zeppo is tough and practical; Harpo is fully rounded in temperament and invariably content. Chico is happiest of all and doesn't give a hoot; Groucho (NBC's new radio and television star) worries from morning to night!

Groucho, the worrier, expresses his philosophy thus: "I was kicked into acting by my mother and if I hadn't been, I'd now be on relief. I can't add, I can't sell. I haven't the faintest idea of business. I've always been terrified of dying broke or of being a failure."

But if Groucho worries about the future, he is often bored with the present. About Hollywood he has no illusions and resolutely refuses to believe that Paradise was regained when Hollywood was founded. His strictures on the colony are always pointed and generally hilarious.

Frank Capra's latest picture was being run off in a small projection room in one of its first pre-showings recently. The picture opened with a shattering blast of trumpets and began spelling out the list of credits. After what seemed hours of director, producer, cast, sound by, costumes by, make-up by, and music by, Groucho turned to his companion:

"Drago, doesn't it?" he said.

Dore Schary, MGM production chief, has authored a new book, "Case History of a Movie," which will be published by Random House.

Serge Koussevitzky has completed his plans to conduct the U. S. tour of the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra next winter. The former Boston Symphony Orchestra maestro has been in Israel where he guest-conducted the Israel symphony group and conducted in London, Paris and Rome. Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein will be guest conductors for the Israel Symphony's U. S. tour, doing the major part of the baton.

Psychology and the Bible

By DAVID SCHWARTZ

I suppose that most of us would tend to characterize this age above
all others as the atomic age, and yet I wonder if that is its real significance. I have a feeling that perhaps the historian looking backward may say that its most significant aspects were its innovations in psychology.

Psychology has bred a revolution
in our whole concept of crime and with respect to disease.

The doctor tends more and more today not to ask you to stick out your tongue but instead he tells you to lie down on the couch and keep your tongue going, telling him the story of your childhood.
In our jails and courthouses, psychiatrists are becoming increasingly more conspicuous. We tend to regard crime as a kind of sickness and sickness as being something else than sickness. Ulcers
and even arthritis and what not,
we are told are often psychosomatic. If the trend keeps up, who knows, but that we may do away
with juries and judges altogether
and lawyers and habeas corpus
may become as extinct as the dodo
and the dinosaur. Our courthouses will become hospitals and our hospitals a kind of courthouse for talks between the patient and the doctor.

There have, of course, been glimpes of the same ideas in the past ages in the Talmud, Resh Lakish is quoted as saying that there is a bit of madness in every crime and one of the ancient Jewish sages went so far as to say that the commandment, "Thou shalt not covet," was more important than the other commandments together. This is tantamount to putting our emotional relationships above all other things.

If we study the Bible, I think,
we will find many of the stories strongly corroborating the psychiatrists' point of view. Take the theme of the rejected child, or the child discriminated against, about which the psychologists talk so much.

Isn't that the point of the story of Joseph and his brethren? Joseph was the favored child of his father, Jacob. The Bible tells us that Jacob loved Joseph above his other children, because he was the child of his old age, he was the baby; but indirectly the Bible story recounts other reasons, too.
Remember, Joseph and Benjamin are both the children of Rachel,
the favorite wife of Jacob.

Poor Leah. She knew she had been put over on Jacob. When she had her first son, she called him
Reuben, for that means, "See son,"
that is to say, that the Lord hath

ing, with a few other maestris slated to conduct in their locales.

The visit will be the first for the Israel group, which was organized thirteen years ago by the late violinist Bronislaw Huberman, and conducted in its first season by Arturo Toscanini. The orchestra of almost 100 men will tour the U. S. from January 7, 1951 to March 20, with tour cities and dates to be announced later. The Sol Hurok office is setting up the tour, with the American Fund for Israel Institutions acting as sponsor. About 60 concerts have already been booked. Local managers or civic groups will handle
details of the concerts, with Hurok getting a flat fee in each city for the booking.

Russian Zone

In addition to the 3,000 Jews in the Russian sector of Berlin, there are a further 1,200 living in the various larger cities of the German Democratic Republic, as the newly established East German State is now called. They are dispersed in the various "Lander" or provinces, the largest number being in the Province of Sachsen, with a Jewish community of about 300 souls in Leipzig. Next in size is the community in Erfurt, 250; and the third is that in Dresden, with about 200. The smallest community is that of Chemnitz, numbering 50.

While contact with the Jews living in the Eastern sector of Berlin is free and unrestricted, those in other parts of the Republic are not very easily accessible. Only occasionally are they visited by Jews from Berlin; and whenever a Jew from Leipzig, or any other city in the East, wants to visit Berlin, he must have a special permit, and to get this he must produce a sound reason to support his application. Not infrequently, Jews from Eastern Germany are allowed to visit Berlin for a wedding ceremony or a "brit milah." Occasionally, but only occasionally, a rabbi from Berlin is granted permission to visit communities in the East. The Jewish community in Leipzig is the only one to boast a Shochet and kosher meat from Leipzig is supplied to a number of other communities, but there is no rabbi and no Jewish school, for the simple reason that there are very few youngsters willing to attend one. Most of the young people have already left, some for Israel, while others are looked on her affliction and now perchance she thinks Jacob will love her. And when she had her second son, she named him Simeon, and it's the same story again, Simeon means that "the Lord hath heard that she was hated."

Through her children she was hoping to win a place in the heart of Jacob as against the more beloved but barren Rachel.

Later, Rachel gave birth to Joseph and Jacob loves him above all the others and makes for him a coat of many colors, and this favoritism puts ideas into Joseph's head. He begins to dream dreams and tells his brothers of one of these dreams—how he saw stalks of grain, representing his brothers, bowing in the field to the stalk which represented him.

And what is the upshot? The brothers plan to do away with him and finally sell him down Egypt way.

The story of Joseph and his brothers is really nothing but a recapitulation of what had happened to Joseph's father, Jacob. You remember, Isaac favored Esau above Jacob and it was only Jacob's flight which saved him from being done away with by Esau.

And the story of the brothers, Cain and Abel, makes the same point essentially. The offering of Abel is favored above that of Cain.

The child that is discriminated against, that doesn't receive his full need of praise and affection, becomes sulky and morose, or actively perverse and grows up a neurotic or delinquent. You've got to water them with the same love or you will have thistles and thorns where you might have had roses.

Jews In The Russian Zone

studying in the Western sector of Berlin and preparing to emigrate to Israel as soon as they finish their studies. The few young Jews who still remain are members of the dominant Communist Party and exhibit all the signs of assimilation.

Religious services are held regularly on Saturdays in most of the communities. They have, however, to rely on Jews in the West for the supply of prayer books.

I was not myself able to visit the Jewish communities in the Russian Zone, beyond that of the Eastern sector of Berlin, which forms an integral part of the Jewish community of Berlin. But from talks I had with the Jews in the Eastern sector and others who have visited Eastern Germany on several occasions, some of them as late as last April, I was able to establish that on the whole the Jew is treated on an equal basis with the Germans and there is no discrimination whatever. Yet, it is this otherwise commendable policy of treating the Jew on the same footing as the Germans that makes his existence there precarious. The Jew is not only treated as a German, he is asked to consider himself a German. He is asked, in effect, to forego his Jewish identity and, what is no less unbearable, to forget what the Germans did to the Jews under Hitler. When a Jewish leader complained to a Russian about this policy, the reply, I was told, was that if the Russians could bring themselves to be friends with the Germans, why not the Jews?

It is evident that in an atmosphere of this kind only those sworn to follow the prescribed Moscow line can accommodate themselves. Small wonder that most of the Jews in the Eastern sector talk of emigration.

Economically, too, the Jewish position is not a very happy one. Although theoretically they are allowed to follow any trade they like, in practice this is not the case and in the prevailing circumstances there are only a few spheres in which they can earn a living. A number own retail shops, but no Jew owns any larger business enterprise; these are all in the hands of the State or of the Co-operatives. Few Jews have so far recovered their pre-war property and although when the administration was still in Soviet hands the policy was a liberal one as far as restitution went, not a single Jew has been able to recover a factory or workshop. But even if they are willing to overlook these economic difficulties, the Jews find it impossible—or at least the majority of them do—to treat the Germans as comrades. What is more, the Germans themselves, despite all the talk of brotherhood and peace, appear to be no less anti-Semitic in the Eastern part than in the Western. It is true that any manifestation of anti-Semitism is rare, the Germans in the East being well aware that any display of anti-Jewish feeling would bring more immediate and more drastic action than is the case in the West. But anti-Semitism, I was told by many who have visited the Eastern Zone, is, nevertheless, strong and widespread. While I was in Berlin, the Jewish cemetery in the Eastern sector was desecrated by a group of young Germans. Nor was this the first desecration. Several similar incidents had taken place earlier, but were not reported in the press. The authorities, unlike

Can't Tell Jokes
By SAUL PETT
Spend some time with Sid Caesar and you'll find that words are only a poor substitute for motion and sound.
On stage or off, the new comedy star of television uses words only for continuity, if at all. He talks, for example, about how he likes to watch Buddy Young run back a punt. He makes a flute-like sound, his eyes dance crazily and he emits a "ping." This could only be a touchdown after some neat broken field running.
He talks about a van Gogh exhibit and sucks in his breath and glazes his eyes with the remembered wonder of the color. He tells why he likes to get away from it all to hunt. "The peace of the forest," he says. "Wonderful when you're fed up, tired of people pulling at you and pressuring you and you feel like, well, like . . ." Here, he makes a gagging sound in his throat, and it is a perfect picture of a life which has complicated itself chasing the great god Success.
At 27, only a few years from his those in the West, took immediate and firm action to discover and arrest the perpetrators of this shameful act and they even made it possible for a representative Jew to speak to several of the arrested German youths in prison. This action contrasts favorably with the leniency shown to kindred criminals in the West. Nevertheless, the atmosphere in the Eastern Zone cannot be considered favorable so far as Jewish national and religious aspirations and traditions are concerned.

Most of the Jews in Eastern Germany are opposed to assimilation and to them the new conditions in which they have to live are more of a hardship than a blessing. It is only natural, therefore, that they should pin their hopes on the possibility of emigration.

There is, however, a considerable number of Jews who have accommodated themselves, some because of their ideological convictions, others because they have no alternative. For these, life in the Eastern Zone has brought changes for the better. Some of them today occupy high positions in the Government and Administration, positions which no Jew had ever before held in Germany and which, despite all talk of democracy and equality, they cannot even today hold in Western Germany. Several Jews hold important posts in the ministries of Information, Industry and Justice. The Supreme Judge in the Eastern sector of Berlin is a Jew and so are several senior judges in the provinces outside Berlin. In the press, too, as well as in the theatre, quite a considerable number of Jews have been given responsible positions, but all these are people who have accepted the Communist Party program and are willing to forego national interests for those of the Party.
Relations between the Jews in the Eastern sector of Berlin and those in the Western sector are good and cooperative, but for how long, no one can tell. If the international situation becomes worse and friction between East and West more acute, the unity existing within the Jewish community of Berlin, too, is likely to suffer.

first job on Broadway as a doorman. Sid Caesar is successful and complicated. His pantomime, monologues and sketches have brought him great praise, a yearly income approaching $100,000, two Cadil-lacs, long cigars, a gun collection worth $10,000, and all the celery
 tonic and seltzer he can drink.

"Freshest New Comic"
 He has been called the freshest new comic in any medium. He has been compared with Chaplin. His comedy range is wide. He does a six-month-old baby complaining of adult stupidity. He acts the story of a penny gum machine which gets beaten up, sours on the world and becomes a quarter slot machine. In pantomime, he goes through all the tortures of a man teaching his wife to drive.

Caesar is no wit. He does not make jokes. Off stage, he is serious and given to moods.
 The writer spent two days with Caesar recently at the Roxy Theater where he was doing five-a-day. He was never alone. The crowd around him ranged from 6,000 out front to the camp followers in his dressing room—one manager, two writers, one "laison
 man" from NBC and an old buddy
 from the Coast Guard, a harmonica player temporarily at liberty.

Drinking Celery Tonic
 Caesar is a half-inch taller than six feet, weighs 200 and has the massive shoulders and trim waist of a weightlifter. He relaxed in his dressing room with a glass of celery tonic diluted with seltzer
 and talked about his boyhood in Yonkers, N. Y.

"It seems like I was always studying," he said. "Saxophone lessons and Hebrew lessons for my confirmation and regular school. Also, I was always running away."
 "I guess I'm still running away,"
 he said. "Everybody has something driving them. You know, something happens in your life and you want to get even."

His Mother Paid
 Caesar's mother, a tall, gray
 woman, dropped in unexpectedly.
 Everyone greeted her warmly.
 Caesar's manager, Leo Pillot, eyed her skeptically.
 "So, Ma," Pillot asked, "how did you get in?"

"What do you mean how did I get in?" Mrs. Caesar said. "I bought a ticket and walked in,
 that's how I got in."
 "Ma," said the manager with mild reproof, "why didn't you call?
 We'd have left a pass at the door."
 "So why should I bother Sidney?" she said. "Maybe he's lying down or sleeping. Why should I bother him?"

"No bother, Ma," Caesar said.
 It was at a Catskill hotel that Caesar met his wife. They have one child now, three-year-old Michele Andrea.
 "We live in a five-room apartment in Forest Hills," he said.
 "Nothing pretentious. The rent is only $175 a month. That's small compared to what we paid in Manhattan. Yes, I got a television set.
 Twelve-inch is enough for me,
 I'm not a big guy, you know."
 "I'm not stingy. I'll spend, but not like crazy. I have 15 suits.
 That's enough, huh? My brothers, Abe and Dave, they each have more. I tell you, you can go nuts from too much money, too Everybody is slapping your back.

"Everybody pulling at you,
 everybody on the bandwagon now.
 You got to keep your head. You work hard, so you take a vacation,
 even if at the last minute a guy calls up and offers you $5,000 for a one-nighter. But you need the vacation, too."

The conversation turned to Caesar's brand of comedy.

"I can't tell jokes, bang, bang,
 bang, bang. I'm no good for night clubs. You got to pay attention if you're going to enjoy my act. You can't listen with one ear all the time you're wondering how much the dame next to you can drink."
 "So no jokes. I let the people work. A millionaire born with a yacht in his mouth can't enjoy it.

 Same with people watching a comic. They have to be made to work, to think it out in their own minds.

"But don't hit them on the head.
 Always put some warmth in it. Be gentle. Give them a chance to breathe. Don't try to be too much.
 If you're good, they'll pick you out."

The Community-Centered Jewish Center

By HERMAN L. SAINER

In this thoughtful article, Mr. Sainer, Midwest Section field secretary of the National Jewish Welfare Board, outlines a suggested program for cooperative working relationships between Jewish Community Centers, Synagogues, Jewish Schools and other Jewish community agencies . . .

THE EDITOR

As an instrument of community-wide service, the Jewish Community Center recognizes that its work creates opportunities for cooperation with other agencies and organizations interested in Jewish programming and progress. This necessitates clarification of function. But who is there to provide the necessary communal understanding, without doing harm to the Center's self-respect and its potential for maximum service?

Where do we find the communal power which may rightfully aspire to define proper function for institutions with similar aims, comparable elements of program, and often in seeming pursuit of the active interest of the same individuals and groups?

Moreover, problems sometimes arise when planning is confused with operation and the central planning body tries to become an operator of the Jewish Center or seeks to exercise close supervision over its affairs. Such practice generally defeats the purpose of democratic community planning and organization, since it delimits autonomy, freedom of development and exercise of indigenous leadership.

The membership character of the Center, the fact that the management derives its authority from the membership, the policy of self-support, emphasis on democratic procedures in program development, are all distinctive factors in the nature of the Center that must be safeguarded against the control of a coordinating or community planning body.

Looks to Central Body

The Center looks for a community body whose experience is comprehensive and whose purposes are basically coordinative, and it finds in most communities a more or less effective federation or welfare fund or community council in whom some social planning responsibilities have already been lodged. To such a central body the Center has in fact a dual relationship. On the one hand, it turns to Federation for guidance in relating its activities to the work of other agencies in the community, and on the other for deficit financing. Since Jewish Centers are dependent on community funds for a substantial part of their operating income, their relation to the fund-distributing body is far from tenuous.

In this context of Jewish community organization, the Center's function is one of widely accepted special competence, which may be characterized as essentially Jewish, dealing with normal people rather than with those who require special care for one sort of handicap or another, doing a job with and through other institutions, and cutting across many lines of group segmentation. It is the home and an important educational arm of the organized community.

Out of all this, certain questions emerge. Does the Federation have the right, as the social planner, to give approval to the Center as the agency most competent to do effective work in its area of function.

tion? A dramatic illustration of this relationship is the recent allocation, by the Jewish Federation of Chicago, of funds for additional professional workers on the staff of the Jewish Community Centers to supervise leisure-time programs in several synagogue facilities, presumably on the ground that the Center was most competent to provide professional guidance for such activities in whatever suitable facilities might be available. Community needs are met in this way with a minimum outlay of capital funds.

As a functional agency, the Center knows that the Federation, as the central financing body, must inevitably be the central budgeting body and, logically, the central planning body. As such the Federation should have a truly democratic structure, with representation from and the support of every responsible section of the community. It is the business of the Center, and of every agency in town, to work hard at realizing such a democratic structure in the central group, in the interest of the community at large as well as in the interest of each agency's best services to the community.

This brings us to the problem of cultivating harmonious relationships between Center and Synagogue, Center and Jewish School, at one in the sincere conviction that cultural and educational activities constitute the vital core of any Jewish communal program and deserve the finest leadership which the community may possess.

Contribution of the Center
It is the unique contribution of the Jewish Center, rooted in the group work process and eager to enrich human personality and group association through the use of all its resources and skills, to bring the Synagogue and School the understanding that all three seek in common to provide a warm and friendly setting for activities which are not ends in themselves but rather the means for the development of personality and close identification with the culture of the Jewish people, as well as the integration of the Jewish group into the pattern of American life.

In social, recreational, educational and cultural activities, all three institutions reach out for the interest and participation of members of the same community. Cooperation and coordination would then seem highly desirable, with the agencies concerned to be involved in the planning.

Small but exciting beginnings have been made toward the living concept that each individual and group in the community is entitled to assistance from every resource in the community which can be helpful. Generally speaking, it is now recognized that each institution has special competence in certain areas—the Center in the sound application of the group work method in leisure-time activities, the Synagogue in spiritual and religious matters, and the Jewish School in formal educational activities.

To say this is not to imply that every sort of duplication of overlapping is ipso facto an evil thing, or that each institution may properly declaim its own special version of 'fifty-four forty or fight'. The fact of the matter is that each has come to appreciate, in a spirit of mutual acceptance — by no means universal, but heartening in its frequency — the substance

which the others can give to the enhancement of individual and group living.

The times in which we live compel a high index of Jewish group
awareness and a growing concern with Jewish education, coupled with an increased willingness to support it. Significant progress can be reported in the relationships between Jewish Center and Jewish educational agencies.

No doubt the Statement on Common Objectives and Areas of Cooperation, adopted by the American Association of Jewish Center Workers and the National Council for Jewish Education, has served for the past three years to encourage local cooperative ventures.

Continuous cooperation has meant continuous exploration by a joint committee of the possibilities for reaching the objectives of Jewish education for all age groups, which Center and Jewish Education have in common — through formal and informal program, home and country camping,
youth and adult education, research, well-trained personnel.

Certainly there are many problems still to be resolved. Both recognize the basic character of Jewish education for children, yet little has been done to work out reasonable and mutually satisfactory answers to questions
around available time for children to participate in Center program and Hebrew School classes. Nor have the Jewish educator's reservations about the Jewish qualifications of Center personnel helped to make working relationships easier. After all, the focus of both
"is on the Jewish child and his development as a rounded Jewish personality. Fragmentizing the services for his adjustment leads to confusion and disunity in his understandings and feelings as a Jew." A unified approach is in the best interest of all concerned.

Integrate the Programs

If the recreational character of Jewish group activities gives them
a particular appeal to children, and gives rise to the fear that such appeal may detract from attendance at formal Jewish classes,
then let the programs be integrated. This would make it possible for Jewish children to avail themselves of both services, and formal Jewish education could share the attractive qualities inherent in recreational activities.

What is leisure time, and what is essential time, in the contemplation of the Center worker and the Jewish educator? Only by putting their heads together can the answer be found, provided that both understand that neither Jewish education nor Center program is coextensive with Jewish life—
and that in the last analysis leisure time, too, is essential time.

Many instances of cooperation can be cited. The results have been encouraging, though the pitfalls of tradition and vested interest are still apparent. What seems clear is that we have reached, at least in professional circles,
a plane of understanding with respect to a community function.
There is a strong body of opinion that Jewish education will be either communal or not at all,
and that this is a crucial point
in any discussion of Jewish education.

We are immersed in a cooperative process, connoting a common sincerity about the integrity of the values of Jewish education.

Perhaps together we shall be able to formulate effective plans for keeping the child within the cooperative undertaking and the educational process over a much longer span of years than is now the case. Would it be too bold to suggest that we might often evaluate the Hebrew School curriculum and the Jewish Center program together so that the Jewish child receives maximum benefits from both, in his development as a well-rounded person.

I like the plain words of an agreement made early this year between the Jewish Community Centers and Board of Jewish Education of Chicago, with respect to nursery school operations in that city: "The Board of Jewish Education is to act as a resource agency on Jewish content for the nurseries sponsored and supervised by the Jewish Community Centers.

On the other hand, the Jewish Community Centers will act as a resource agency on group work and nursery techniques in relation to the nurseries supervised by the Board of Jewish Education." It was further agreed, to meet again in about two months to review the progress made.

In the most recent public discussion on the Synagogue and the Center, during the JWB biennial conference in May 1950, expression was given by lay and professional leaders to the progress which has been made in working relationships between the two institutions in several communities. At the same time, it was recognized that hard work and abiding patience will be required for many years, before a deep sense of partnership is achieved between them in the service of the Jewish community.

While confusion and a deep-seated feeling of rivalry may be found in many situations where Synagogue and Center try to expand their sometimes overlapping programs, it is also true that the list of happily developing relationships has already become impressive.

Unifying Influence

The best generalization which may be made at this time is that we tend to emphasize the unifying influence of the Jewish Center as the community resource for leisure-time activities, and the obvious division of Jewish religious affiliation among orthodox, conservative and reform congregations, against a background of insistence that religious experience through the Synagogue is at the heart of Jewish group survival.

It is of paramount importance to state that Center and Synagogue do not disagree about the fundamental character of religious values in Jewish life; the falling out comes from rabbinical insistence on the primacy of the Synagogue, as if nothing is validly Jewish which does not spring from the Synagogue or have its being in it. The fact is that the Synagogue and the rabbi are not endowed with exclusive rights and privileges pertaining to every aspect of human concern in the Jewish community.

The further fact is that there is absolutely no foundation, in theory or in practice, for rabbinical assertions, made pleasantly or in anger, that the Center dares to equate itself with the community as a whole. The Center simply regards itself as an agency of the community, engaged in the use of group work method and skills to foster informal Jewish educational activity. Could we not all hearken to the late Rabbi Liebman, who said two years ago:

"I believe that the majority of us must and will recognize that there are so many forms of Jewish life in the country that no return is possible to monopoly on the part of the Synagogue. Pluralism is the reality! At the same

The
Community-Centered Jewish Center

time I believe that the functions of the Synagogue are primary for a Jewish philosophy of life, for our Jewish morale, for Jewish survival. I am also aware of the important and significant role that the Jewish Centers have played and will continue to play in the American Jewish scene.

A joint consultative committee of the Synagogue Council and the JWB has been trying to get at these difficulties on the national level, as "a clearing and cooperating agency between the Synagogue and the Center." This is an important first step. Especially heartening is the open recognition of obstacles to be overcome.

To know each other, the Synagogue and Center must work together on their mutual problems, strengthening each other as they inevitably must if suspicion and an exaggerated sense of competition are cast aside. Working together has meant, and must continue to mean, intensification of Jewish interest and identification for Center membership and staff, and deeper understanding of Center principles among congregational leaders and rabbis. The same holds true, of course, for boards and staff in Jewish education.

It might help to recall a resolution adopted by the Council of Young Men's Hebrew and Kindred Associations at its triennial convention in New York in October, 1920, 30 years ago:

"WHEREAS, It has been the policy always of the constituent organizations of the Council to cooperate with local synagogues
wherever and whenever possible;

BE IT RESOLVED, that the Board of Managers be urged to communicate with the Central Conference of American Rabbis,
the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the United Synagogue of America, the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations,
and such other bodies as the Board of Managers may see fit, with reference to establishing a cooperation between the constituent synagogue and rabbinic memberships of these organizations,
to the end that the synagogue might be used for extension work of the Y.M.H.A.'s and that in turn the rabbis and the synagogues might have the advantage of using the Y.M.H.A.'s for extension of religious activity."

I believe there can be no pat formula for drawing functional boundary lines between Synagogue and Center. The easing of this vexing problem must be sought, as Janowsky puts it, "in functional cooperation rather than in jurisdictional accommodations." All of us cherish the sense of tradition
and communal leadership of the Synagogue through the ages. Yet in working together today we owe due deference to change and to the reality of the situation, in our common concern for sound community organization.

Notable efforts have already been made to master the problems of the day to day relationships,
through joint operation by Center and Synagogue of a cultural and recreational program, and by use of synagogue facilities on a rental basis under the program supervision of the Center. Where mutual understanding is achieved, joint operation rather than a landlord-tenant arrangement is preferred. In any case, fuller participation of the community has been achieved in the examination of ways and means to intensify

Jewish life in all its aspects.
Clarity of purpose should not obscure the hard fact that friction is natural and often incurable, and that unconditional al-

legiance need not necessarily be given by all men to any single institution in the Jewish or in the general community.

In relationships between Jewish Center and local affiliates of Jewish youth organizations we have hammered out a modus vivendi in those communities where agreement has been reached on the basic tenet that the Center is the focus of Jewish communal work in recreation and informal education. Local implementation has been uneven throughout the country, stemming from differing degrees of recognition of central functioning of the Center and different relationships to community planning.

Arrangements have been made with AZA, for example, with respect to membership of their affiliated individuals and groups in the Center and supervision of AZA leaders by Center staff, without disturbing the special aspects of the local unit's program. Genuine effort is being made nationally as well as locally to integrate national youth programs of the Center.

Youth councils have also helped to bring these young people and their clubs closer to the general work of the Center, but they are turning in ever increasing numbers to trained Center personnel for assistance in program planning. Last year, the JWB issued a helpful guide in this area of relationships, on the basis of consultations with leaders of national youth groups, describing in general terms the range of services which the Center can offer these groups as well as the avenues of the participation in community youth and young adult councils.

Unmistakable Trend

The overall trend toward cooperation is unmistakable, even if the road to complete unity still appears to be thorny. The major task in this area involves the patient application of good process in interpreting the community role of the Center to representatives of national organizations so that they may understand the Center's position of respect for their autonomy and its earnest wish to make available its physical facilities and the skills of its staff to enhance the program of each of these organizations.

In working together toward common objectives, mutual confidence and respect among the agencies generally concerned with Jewish cultural activities in the community pre-suppose the availability of personnel with adequate professional qualifications and Jewish orientation, and of the best kind of lay leadership in the cultural realm where it belongs.

Many external factors are involved in the determination of what will happen to the Jewish people in this country and elsewhere, some of them quite beyond its control and others of an internal nature—the advance or retreat of the democratic spirit and process, the ethos in which international relations are carried on, the march of economic stability or its decline, the mounting or ebbing of anti-semitism, our appreciation of the irreparable loss we suffered in the disintegration of European Jewry, the spirit-lifting story of Israel, the character of our own Jewish leadership, the adequacy of our educational progress, the development of our religious and cultural interests.

If we have faith in ourselves and in our institutions, if we plan and work together for the attainment of happiness and security in the lives of Jewish individuals and groups, we may venture to hope that the American Jewish community will grow and prosper under the warming influence of forces which we have built for shaping Jewish life as a whole.

How tragic it would be for the future of the Jews in America if our Jewish institutions permit their differences to keep them permanently apart, however deep these differences may appear to be. How exciting and indispensable their living partnership must be in the creation of an indigenous American Jewish culture—a dream which, in the words of the poet, "we shall make in a community unsatisfied by little ways, open to every man who brings good will!"

On Giving Away Money

by DAVID SWARTZ

Everybody likes to give away money. Isn't it more blessed to give than to receive? Think how blessed the banks must be. Money is the root of all evil. Who steals my purse, steals trash, said Shakespeare. You can't take it with you, says Broadway. Yes, money is a foul thing. Everybody is just delighted to give it away.

Yet I see in the papers that Samuel S. Fels died in Philadelphia recently and the newspapers say that during his lifetime, Sam Fels gave away no less than forty million dollars. That's a lot of giving.

One might expect that a man who had given so much would be well-known but the fact is the name of Samuel Fels was not much tooted during his life time. "He who gives in secret is greater even than Moses himself," said the sages of the Talmud and apparently Samuel Fels was one of this category, for many of his gifts were made with the proviso that his name was not to be mentioned in connection with the gift.

Better known was his brother, Joseph Fels, who also gave away many millions. If Joseph Fels was better known, it was not because he craved publicity more than his brother. It was simply that in his point of view and perhaps in his personality, he was more exotically challenging. A little man, standing not more than five feet, he was very human. "I can give away one hundred thousand dollars with one hand," he once said, "and with the other squeeze a man for five cents."

Samuel Fels gave a great deal of his money for scientific research and Joseph Fels, too, didn't give exactly for what we call charity. He gave, as he liked to say, to destroy charity. He gave his money largely for furtherance of the single tax movement. He thought that once the ideas of Henry George were carried into effect, poverty and unemployment would be as outdated as smallpox and there would be no need of charity.

It seems to me there was something essentially Jewish in this concept of Joseph Fels. The Jewish word for charity is Zedakah which means something more than charity. Zedakah means righteousness, justice. It does not mean, as charity implies, the giving of favors.

The future, it seems to me, must be in this direction. To Joseph Fels, land monopoly was the great social curse, the germ that caused the black plagues of poverty and unemployment. In new countries, where land is easily available, there is no unemployment and little real poverty. Once you forced idle land into use by the single tax, he thought, every country would in this respect, be a new country.

 Land would be cheap for housing,
 rents would be cheaper, there would be no tenant farmers, no sharecroppers, no reservoir of the unemployed beating down the wage scale of labor in general.
 It is interesting to note that the great Jewish economist, Frank Oppenheimer, reached virtually the same conclusions in economics
 as did Henry George.

If Joseph Fels thought the basis of his swollen fortune was a remedial defect in the economic system, it is interesting to note that another great Jewish multimillionaire, Julius Rosenwald, believed that great fortunes were the result largely of luck. He liked to tell the story of the man who said he had won twenty-five thousand dollars in a lottery by using his brains. Asked to explain, he said, "It was like this:
 one night in a dream, I saw the number 9 and the next night I had a dream and I saw the number 6, so I used my brains, added
 the two numbers and bet on 14."
 For the most part, most of the great American Jewish fortunes have gone to other than Jewish purposes. The Rosenwald fortune went largely for the advancement of the Negro. The Guggenheim wealth sponsors academic fellowships and art.

The Jewish Croesuses have seldom been favorably disposed to Zionism. Julius Rosenwald was a farm friend of Schmaryahu Levin, but the latter could never induce Rosenwald to give for Palestine, save for one or two privileged institutions, such as the Hebrew Technion. When Herzl beseeched Baron de Hirsch,
 as the latter was about to launch
 a Jewish colonization movement to support colonization in Argentina, the latter remained obdurate. As Rosenwald gave millions for Russian Jewish colonization,
 so Baron de Hirsch gave millions for Jewish colonization in Argentina. Russia and Argentina seemed better bets to these multi-millionaires than the rocks of Palestine.

It probably could not have been otherwise. The man of very great wealth is apt to take a too practical point of view. He is not the one to take too many chances.
 I think in the story of industrial development, the same story is true. It is rare that the man of enormous fortunes is a pioneer even in industry. The less wealthy must do the preliminary work.
 Then the DuPonts come along.

The Death of Ashmedai

By BERNARD
BRACHYA COHEN

Editor's Note: Bernard Brachya Cohen is a young American writer. Many of his short stories and articles have appeared in American and British periodicals.

Even when I was a child, Uncle had a sad face. And as I watched his gaunt body hunched over his glass of tea at the head of our dining room table, I observed that the constant sadness was etched more deeply than ever into his dark features. Uncle had always seemed old, but now he was really an old man.

He was a rare and strange guest and the maid removed the dinner dishes with extra caution. We had all finished and the dining room was quiet. Out of awed respect for Uncle, Davey suppressed his usual chatter. My wife and I suspended our conversation and we waited for Uncle, who was slowly sipping his tea.

It was a visit from Uncle. I tried to capture the full flavor of the occasion. I wondered if Davey could in any way fathom its magnitude. And I knew he couldn't for Davey was far too young. Uncle could be authentically appreciated only through the perspective of time.

"Tonight we will have a visit from Uncle," my father used to say, rubbing his hands together and smiling down at us. My two brothers, my sister, and I would look at each other with knowing glances. A visit from Uncle was a treat. He always brought us candy, but far more exciting and permanent were the wonderful stories he told.

My father had a tender affection for his brother. Uncle's wife had died in an accident less than a year after their marriage and he had remained a widower for the rest of his life.

We would sit about the long table and listen silently as my father and Uncle discussed family problems and world affairs. Soon the meal would end. We sat, waiting expectantly. Then Uncle would take his knife and play with the bread crumbs on the table cloth, carefully hoeing them into one line, then another.

Uncle Tells a Story

"Nu—would you like to hear a story?" he would ask suddenly.

Four small heads would nod vigorously. Father chuckled and mother smiled. And the story would begin.

Sometimes it was about David, and how he fooled King Saul, or how Alexander the Great flew on an eagle. And then there were the stories about the destruction of the wonderful Temple in Jerusalem; how the swallows tried to extinguish the flames by carrying water in their beaks, and how the priests, clothed in their robes, stood on the roof of the burning building and handed the keys back to God who stretched a mighty hand down from the heaven to receive them.

But the best stories of all were about Asmedai, King of the Demons. Uncle knew every exploit, every connivance, and every defeat of this legendary villain. He would hold us in a frightened rapture as he recounted the awe-some adventures of the King of the Demons.

"Ashmedai stretched his wings," he would say in his soft voice: "One wing reached heaven, and the other touched the earth."

And four small mouths would

By BERNARD

 drop open as we stared at Uncle
 in wonder.

Wonderful Tales of Old
 He would tell how King Solomon struggled with Ashmedai. The King of Demons was trapped by being tricked into drinking up a well filled with wine and falling asleep. But Ashmedai avenged himself. When brought before King Solomon, he stretched his wings and threw Solomon four hundred miles out of his kingdom.
 Then Ashmedai disguised himself as the King, fooling everyone. But Solomon finally overcame him,
 and with the aid of his magic ring
 he forced Ashmedai and his demons to assist in the building of the great Temple in Jerusalem.
 And then, much to our regret,
 Uncle would tell us that his stories would be continued on his next visit.

Uncle finished his tea, and put down the empty glass. He took his knife and played with the crumbs on the table cloth, just as he had done when I was a child. The fingers were older but the lines of crumbs were the same.
 Uncle looked at Davey and smiled.

"Nu—would you like to hear a story?"
 My young son looked at me, his brown eyes reflecting uncertainty.
 He had never heard one of Uncle's stories.

"Of course Davey wants to hear a story, Uncle," I said. My wife gave Uncle a smile of approval.
 I too wanted to hear the story.
 It had been so long since I had heard a story from Uncle. Seeing the old man again made me recall vividly the warm charm of his stories. I was going to have the rare treat of reliving a cherished memory.

Uncle carefully formed a triangle out of the bread crumbs,
 then looked at Davey.

A Restless Audience

I looked at Davey too, and was annoyed. The child was squirming in his chair. I remembered the eagerness and rapt attention
 that always greeted Uncle's offer to tell a story. And even now, more than twenty years later, I was still as anxious as ever to hear one of his stories, and that wonderful feeling of anticipation
 was being reborn within me.

Yet Davey was restless. He was twisting his small body with obvious annoyance. Uncle looked at my little son and there was puzzlement in his soft eyes.

I glared at Davey. He caught my silent rebuke and stiffened
 in his chair.

"Uncle is going to tell you a story," my wife said, smiling down at him. She ran her fingers through his little brown ringlets.
 But he refused to nestle back in the crook of her arm, as he always did.

Uncle looked at Davey and still there was puzzlement in his soft eyes.

 story?"
 Davey hesitated for a fraction of a second, then nodded his curly head.

Uncle smiled. His smile was warm. He was trying to strengthen his friendship with the little boy who was difficult to please.

"Do you know the story of Ashmedai?"

Davey shook his head.
 Uncle launched into his best story of all, the amazing adventures of Ashmedai. It was the story that my brothers and sister and I had begged him to tell, over and over again, when we were Davey's age, sitting around the long dining room table.

A Tale Well Told

I listened and felt pathos in the telling of the tale. Uncle had selected Ashmedai, the best story
of all, and he was trying to tell it in the best way he could. There was a new element in the story,
something that had never existed
when I was a child. Uncle was consciously trying to do a good job. He was the old actor, going through his best lines with exaggerated emphasis, trying to move
the audience that was slipping from his grasp.

I felt better toward my little son. Why wasn't his very being centered on Uncle, as was mine
when I was a child? Why was he gazing at the grandfather's clock
in the corner of the room, then at the water pitcher on the table,
then again at the clock, making Uncle intensify his efforts in the struggle to capture his interest?

And Uncle's best story, the story
of Ashmedai, King of the Demons!
I gasped involuntarily as I saw Davey's lips curl downward, and his small nostrils quiver. He twisted his body into his mother's arms, and broke out sobbing.

Uncle stopped telling how Ashmedai could stretch one wing to heaven and the other to earth.
The old man stared at the child,
dumbfounded.

"What's the matter, Davey!" my wife exclaimed. "Tell mother
what's the matter, dear."

"It's . . . it's seven thirty, and
"The Lone Ranger" is on," he wailed. "I gotta listen to 'The Lone Ranger'."

He turned around sniffing and rubbing his wet eyes with his fists. My wife gave me a glance of helplessness.

"All right, dear," she said. "Say

 'excuse me' to Uncle, and you may leave the table."

A Modern Hero-Intervenes

He said a hurried "Excuse me"
 as he got up from the table. He stepped quickly into the living room and ran upstairs to his radio.

Uncle was making straight lines
 out of the bread crumbs on the table cloth.

"You'll have to excuse Davey's behavior," my wife said feebly.
 "He never misses 'The Lone Ranger'. That's why he was so restless—he was afraid he'd miss his program."

Uncle smiled. "I understand."
 The sad resignation in Uncle's smile hurt me. I knew he couldn't understand. I wanted to tell him that his stories were as good as ever, but that Davey felt he had heroes far more powerful than David and Alexander and Solomon. His heroes had silver bullets and secret codes and superhuman powers. Through the inexhaustible media of his radio and the comic books that lay scattered about his room, Davey met men who could speed through the air
 more quickly than light itself;
 who could lift buildings and mow down armies and capture master criminals. Could there be any comparison in Alexander's ability to fly on an eagle, or David's ingenuity in defeating Goliath, or Solomon's magic ring?

And the criminals! Did Ashmedai—the great Ashmedai, King of the Demons—did he possess political stooges, cosmic rays, interplanetary armies, and a constant supply of atom bombs?

I wanted to console the old man sitting beside me, playing with the crumbs. I felt a hurt compassion for him. I looked at his dark thin face and remembered vividly the stories. And I felt a sad longing.

 I would never hear the story of Ashmedai again, for Ashmedai,
 the terrible King of the Demons,
 was dead.

Public interest in the Korean War has been reflected by a sharp boost in attendance at the movie houses throughout the nation. Film business which previously had hit an all-time low has now advanced an appreciate extent.
The international situation is not only bringing people back to the movies but is renewing their interest in films in general. The current crisis is a stimulant that is making the public more conscious of other news as well.
At the same time, impact of the Korean crisis has not only hypooed ratings for news programs but has boosted the whole level of radio listening, a special survey by the radio network indicates.
Newsreel coverage on the hottest current event of the past few years—hostilities in Korea—has already taken on a pattern closely similar to that of World War II. The five newsreel companies were notified this week that the U. S. Signal Corps has assumed

Good Advice: A Hollywood producer lamented sadly to Harpo Marx that it cost him more than $100,000 a year to live.
"Don't pay it," said Harpo, "it ain't worth it."
Einstein's Violin: Speaking about advice, Einstein does not seem to put much stock in the article.
John Kieran, the Information Please expert, was once visiting Einstein and asked him what had made him take up the violin.
"I'll tell you," said Einstein. "Everybody advised me against it, so I took it up. All my life I have been doing things which people advised me against."
Prof. Einstein seems to agree with the American bard, Walt Whitman, who once said, "Take my advice. Don't take advice."

Ah Justice: Judge Morris Rothenberg tells the story of a lawyer, a member of a New York firm, who went to California to argue a case before the courts there.
When the verdict was brought in, the lawyer immediately wired back to his partner in New York: "Justice has won."
The partner wired back: "Appeal at once."

Schnorrer: A schnorrer asked Mr. Goldstein for a donation.
"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," said Mr. Goldstein.
"Why should I be ashamed of myself?" queried the schnorrer.
"Why should you be ashamed of yourself, you want to know?" said Mr. Goldstein. "Why, what's the matter with you? I see you've got two strong hands—"
"So," said the schnorrer, "I should go and cut off my hands just to get a few kopecks from you?"

Good Retort: Dorothy Parker is known for her wit, although of late we have not heard much from her direction.
Once Miss Parker was chatting with a first-class snob who confided to her, "the one thing I can't bear is a fool."
"In that respect," answered Miss Parker, "it seems you are different from your mother."
Jewish Proverbs: What is cheap, is dear.
If God wills, a broom can shoot.

 the responsibility of feeding the reels official Army films on the Korean shooting war.
 The treatment is identical with that of the armed services during the recent world fracas. This move is being made on direct orders
 from General Douglas Mac-Arthur.

The pulse of musical life in Europe and in Israel was explained to us this week by Jascha Heifetz and Mischa Elman. The noted violinists are back from overseas tours — Heifetz having just returned from a trip to Israel, and Elman having recently completed a three-month tour of Europe.
 Heifetz found widespread interest in music in Israel. He also saw an opportunity for U. S. talent in the Holy Land, not only for the big name artists, but also for lesser talent.

Contemporary Israeli music,
 he said, shares "the tendency of all modern music to try not to sound too much like music. This is a characteristic of youth and of beginnings. Many composers start that way before they realize that music must have an immediate appeal."

Elman took no American modern music with him on his European trip. American composers, he said, are good arrangers and orchestrators, but they're not very imaginative or creative.

"They try to write music in the spirit of our machine age,"
 he said. "Music is the only art that has to be untouched by the machine age we live in."

Mischa sees a definite renaissance of the romantic age in music, as in art. "The public wants beauty, not distortions and dissonances," he said.

Eddie Cantor, when he visited Israel early this summer, found that some of his old Goldwyn pictures had been revived. At an Israeli state function several days later, one of the government officials, who had just seen one of the films, commiserated:

"What Israel has done to you;
 you seem to have aged overnight, Mr. Cantor." Eddie had to explain that "Kid Millions" was produced in Hollywood 16 years ago.

Now that Groucho Marx is divorced, he says, "I want to marry a rich girl, so I can give her everything her money can buy."

 in Hollywood marriage is like a

Our Film Folk (Continued from last Page) drug to some women. They take one dope after another!

One of our better known stars told me the other day: "I had bad luck with both of my wives ... the first divorced me and the second wouldn't."

Sophie Tucker is quite happy over the news that she's been pacted by Mercury Records for a 12-inch disc to be cut shortly in New York. The platter will feature a complete show presentation on the top side, simulating Sophie's night-club routine. The alternate side will be comprised of six or seven songs from the old standards.

Sophie's nitery routine will be purified slightly for the counter customers but will still retain a dash of the original flavor.

There's a movie theater manager on Hollywood Boulevard who just had his teeth X-rayed. He says he wants to see a preview of the coming extractions.

Back from Europe, Producer Sam Goldwyn declares that the successful motion picture producer is one who "makes the next one better."

The producer who tries to repeat the success of his last picture by making another one like it, Sam believes, is in a position similar to the boy trying to stay on the greased pole: "He is almost sure to skid down."

Sam repeats his belief that television will prove beneficial to the movie industry.

He also emphasizes the need for pictures today to be "true to life," and says the day is past when producers believe the public doesn't want the truth.

Here is Goldwyn's one sentence definition of showmanship. "Whatever everyone is doing ... do something else."

In Hollywood, flattery is telling the other person exactly what he thinks about himself.

Ben Gurion on the "Exiles"

The recent major policy speech by Premier David Ben Gurion to the envoys of Israel on the subject of the "In-Gathering of the Exiles" was almost of revolutionary significance, both for Israel and for the Jews outside it. It marked a reversal of the Israel Government not only on a political question, but on an ideological principle. The Premier told his audience of Israel envoys, gathered in Jerusalem, that the "In-Gathering of the Exiles" theory was "complete nonsense" and that Israel messengers abroad should cease sowing panic among Americans, British and Latin-American Jews by warnings that they are fated to undergo the same experience as did the Jews of Europe under Nazism unless they settle "en-masse" in Israel. He advanced a new and ingenious division of the Jews of the Diaspora into those in "Galut" (exile) and those in "Tvu'tsa" (dispersion). The "Galut" consists of the Arab and Moslem countries from Persia to North Africa where Jews have no future and have to be saved in Israel. The "Tvu'tsa" is composed of the United States, Britain, the Dominions and Latin-American countries where Jews enjoy freedom and equal rights and are not in exile and thus are exempted from the nationalistic commandment to settle in Israel. They should remain where they are and help Israel financially and economically to become a strong state.

Ben Gurion, who formerly was one of the chief exponents of the nationalistic upsurge in Israel, has completely reversed himself and has openly adopted the thesis advanced by the American Zionists at the recent Chicago convention. Thus the American Zionist opposition has won a complete victory. If, as it is assumed, Ben Gurion's speech is not but an expedient maneuver forced upon him by a critical situation, to be changed again when the danger is over, then it marks a landmark in post-war Jewish history.

"With These Hands"

A film recently made its debut on Broadway of artistic as well as of historic significance for all who are interested in the growth and development of labor in the U. S. A. and in the part which Jews have played in that growth. The film, "With These Hands," was sponsored and produced by the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary. It is presented in the form of a flashback revealing the great stride which the tailoring industry has made during the last half-century. Sam Levene plays the part of an idealistic cloakmaker who fought the terrible exploitation, helplessness and disease of the sweat-shops in the early part of this century in the U. S. He tells the story of his life and struggles to raise his trade from the position of semi-slavery to its present dignified and secure state. Script-writer Morton Wishengrad catches the spirit of the period and the unique idealism of the early pioneers of the Jewish labor movement which was not limited to economic goals only. It was this which has made the Jewish labor unions in America, and particularly the ILGWU unique among the American trade union movement and which constitutes their special contribution to American civilization during the first half of this century.

Political Notes
The question of a successor to James G. McDonald as our ambassador to Israel is receiving much attention in Washington these days. There is a coterie in the State Department that would like to see the portfolio handed to a career diplomat of pro-Arab orientation. However, informed Washington circles believe Bartley Crum is getting top consideration for the post. In fact it is no longer a secret he was considered for the appointment soon after U. S. recognition of Israel. His friendship for Israel has been profound and consistent. Two brilliant young Jews whose names are frequently mentioned in connection with our global diplomatic efforts have been suggested for the post but official Washington considers it inadvisable to give the appointment to a Jew at this time. . . . The Korean conflict has given the Arab states another card in their game against Israel and they intend using it at the September session of the U. N. Assembly. Arab League leaders now meeting in Alexandria are ostensibly discussing the Korean situation but actually they are mapping nuisance strategy for the forthcoming Assembly meeting. Their game is to harass U. S. policy in the U. N. in the hope of being able to wring American concessions on the Jerusalem issue. They expect using the session as a springboard for a diplomatic offensive against Israel. They will also endeavor to secure U. N. recognition of the Arab League as a Middle Eastern regional bloc. . . . Current rumors that both President Weizmann and Premier Ben Gurion may come to the U. S. early this Fall are just rumors. . . . With Senator Lehman a certain candidate for reelection it does not seem likely that the Democratic Party in New York will run another Jew for high office. Party leaders however are said to favor Congressman Abraham J. Multer as running mate to their gubernatorial candidate. . . .

Pearlmuter to Perce
It happened in a Tel Aviv synagogue. While the congregants were busy praying they suddenly heard sweet chanting from a stranger in their midst. Since American tourists are no longer looked at with curiosity in Israel, the worshippers paid little attention to the man who had come to join them in prayer. However, since Jews have no peers in recognizing a good chazen when they come across one, it did not take long before the stranger admitted that he was Jan Perce, the noted American-Jewish singer of Metropolitan Opera fame. Before long the entire congregation besieged Perce with pleas that he conduct part of the service. Yielding to the supplications, he chanted many numbers from his cantorial repertoire. When he was asked later how he had come to change his name from Pearlmutter to Pearce, he replied that he had first found the answer to the question in Israel. When he originally changed his name he would tell inquiring friends that it did not matter what name he used as long as he remained a good Jew and was giving his children a good Jewish education. "But now that I see how Jews in Israel are changing their names," he went on laughingly. "I realize that I intuitively anticipated a Jewish development."

Political Prophet

Louis H. Bean, who attracted nationwide attention and fame in 1948 as the only forecaster of Truman's election, is about to publish a book called "The Mid-Term Battle." The volume will be of great interest to all who are following political trends. What few people know, or have forgotten, is that Bean is a Lithuanian-born Jew. His parents came to the States during the great early 20th century wave of Jewish immigration from Europe. They fled Russian pogroms in 1904 and settled in New Hampshire. Young Bean was then ten years old. Now economic advisor to the Department of Agriculture, Bean was first brought to that department by Henry Wallace when he was Secretary of Agriculture.

Anti-Semitism and Art

The literary colony in Paris is seething with indignation over the ugly results of a literary contest. The French Ministry of Education, it seems, offered a prize to young French dramatists. Among the contest participants was one Jean Lavagalle who authored an anti-Semitic play called "Next Year in Jerusalem." When it was disclosed that Lavagalle's play was awarded the prize, there was an uproar in the literary and artistic circles of Paris, with debate raging in press and cafes. The Ministry of Education came under heavy attack for accepting an anti-Semitic piece in the contest and for crowning Lavagalle's filthy play as a work of art.

Zionist Congress To Meet Dec. 20

JERUSALEM — The World Zionist Congress will take place December 20 in Jerusalem, Eliahu Dobkin announced this week at a press conference. He said that elections to the Congress had already been held in a number of smaller countries.

Mr. Dobkin said that Zionist parties in the United States will not hold elections but will receive 120 seats as follows: General Zionists, 33; Hadassah, 33; Labor Zionists, 25; Mizrahi, 12; Hapoel Hamizrachi, 7; Hashomer Hatzair-Mapam, 3, and Revisionists, 6.

The Jewish Agency official disclosed that 450,000 Shekolim had already been sold in Israel, making Israel's the largest delegation to the Congress. Elections to the Congress will be held in the Jewish state at the end of October.

WASHINGTON — A dynamic Jewish congressman, Jacob Javits, has been mentioned as a likely candidate for mayor of New York City. Washington circles consider it very possible that he may get the Republican - Liberal - Fusion nomination for the mayoralty made vacant by the appointment of William O'Dwyer as Ambassador to Mexico.

Javits' constituency, the upper West Side of Manhattan, includes Washington Heights and Columbia University. His best known constituent is Gen. Dwight Eisenhower. The area is predominantly Jewish and includes so many German-Jewish refugees that it is sometimes called "The Fourth Reich." In 1946 Javits ousted Tammany Hall domination from his district which for years had been a Democratic stronghold. He has since compiled a record which might explain why he is being so widely discussed as a potential mayor of the world's greatest city.

His life has been a fulfillment of dreams of America which were envisioned in European ghettos. It was from such ghettos and with such dreams that his parents came to America.

Javits' father made pants on the lower East Side. His mother helped support the family by selling toys from a pushcart. Javits' introduction to politics came at an early age when his father rose from pants-maker to Tammany representative for three shabby tenement buildings. The senior Javits tended to custodial duties in the buildings as well as to the political orientation of all occupants over 21.

A prophetic comment on Javits' success is to be found under his picture in his high school year-book. The inscription says, "You can't tell from first appearances." His first job netted him $75 a week as a printing ink salesman. Later, his older brother, Benjamin, turned over a bill-collecting business to him. In 1924 he became a clerk in his brother's law firm. In 1927 he passed the bar and joined Benjamin in law practice in the firm of Javits & Javits. By 1940 Javits was known as a strong backer of the late Fiorello LaGuardia.

In 1941 Javits happened to meet the deputy chief of the Army

Chemical Warfare Service at a dinner party in Washington. The general complained that the Army was having trouble getting a certain paper filter for gas masks. It so happens that Javits & Javits represents the National Paper Trade Association. The next day Javits made connection through the association, pulled the appropriate strings, and obtained for (Continued on next Page)

(Continued from last Page) the general all the filters he could use. The grateful general made Javits a dollar-a-year man. By the time Javits was commissioned a major in the Chemical Warfare Service he was so well-known in Washington that five generals attended the induction ceremony. He rose to the grade of lieutenant colonel by the end of World War II and is at present a full colonel in the reserve.

Soon after Javits arrived in Congress, old-line Republicans found that they had a heretic in their ranks. He came out in favor of O.P.A. and against the National Association of Manufacturers. When Republicans wanted to kill rent controls, Javits voted to retain strong controls. Administration "Fair Deal" advocates have often said they could always count on him for an extra vote on any crucial issue. Javits' liberal leanings are such that he takes pains to list himself as a "Republican-Liberal."

By 1948 Javits' popularity was great enough for him to defeat Paul O'Dwyer, the ex-mayor's brother. O'Dwyer, with strong support, had attempted to win the twenty-first district.

Javits is known to be a fighter. When he found that German fiancées of American soldiers were getting, and abusing, preferential treatment to girls from France and other countries, he decided to act.

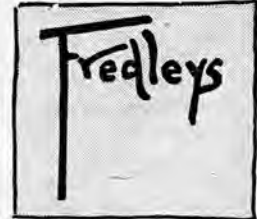

To insure an impartial arrangement, he proposed an amendment to an immigration bill. It was defeated by a vote of 100 to 1. Undaunted, Javits explained the situation to a number of Senators. He was vindicated by the Senate when a measure containing his recommendations was adopted in the final version of the bill.

Javits went to Europe in 1947 with three other Congressmen on a fact-finding mission. Their travels brought them to Warsaw. Hoping to demonstrate American good-will they joined with peasants laboring to remove debris from the battered streets. Javits and his colleagues took up shovels and filled a whole truck with rubble. Javits' mother was born in Palestine—a fact which may be partly responsible for his vital interest in Zionism. Immediately after his election to Congress he went to Palestine, at his own expense, to study conditions there. He was later chosen to christen the S.S. Haifa, the first vessel to carry the flag of the Israel-American Line. Since the establishment (Continued on next Page)

Poland Liquidating Jewish Officials

BOSTON—All Jews will be removed from important public positions in Poland and will be replaced by Russian citizens, it is predicted in a report published here by the "Christian Science Monitor." The report says that the purge of Jewish officials is to be expected as a result of Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky's becoming the chief of the Politburo in Poland.

Polish-born Rokossovsky "is known for his anti-Semitic attitude," the paper says, adding that he also has the reputation of being a "specialist in conducting purges."

The first high Jewish official to be removed was Jacob Berman who, from the very beginning of the present Polish government's existence, has been known as Moscow's liaison man, the Monitor reveals. Another prominent Jewish figure rumored as marked for demotion is Hilary Minc, Polish Minister of Commerce and Industry, the report says.

"The fact that Marshal Rokossovsky is known for his anti-Semitic attitude strengthens the belief that he has orders to make personnel changes that gradually will result in complete elimination of Jews from public affairs in Poland," the article says.

"Marshal Rokossovsky himself is expected to take Berman's place as secretary of the Polish Communist Party. Jewish spokesmen say that dismissed Jews will go to Moscow, ostensibly for a visit as has often occurred before, but that this time they will not return, and that they will not be allowed to leave the Soviet Union."

of the state he has closely watched the development of diplomatic relations between the U.S. and Israel. He has strongly protested to Secretary of State Acheson whenever he felt Israel was getting devious treatment. Much of his time last winter was taken up with the Near Eastern arms race; his attempts to insure Israel a fair chance to buy arms are well-known.

A deep interest in Jewish life is indicated by his family life. He was married in 1947 to Marion Ann Borris of Detroit. They have a boy and a girl. The boy is named Joshua after the late Rabbi Joshua Loth Liebman. Javits also finds time to serve as a trustee of the Jewish Memorial Hospital and as an overseer of the Jewish Theological Seminary.

To Raise Money By Cemetery Sales

BUENOS AIRES — A decision to raise three million pesos—about $300,000—through the sale of burial places to wealthy members of the Jewish community here was adopted by the General Assembly of the Ashkenazi Kehillah which is in sole control of Jewish community cemeteries.

One-third of the above sum will be allocated for Israel, another third will be spent on the construction of Jewish school buildings, while the remainder will be set aside for Jewish educational activities, including the training of Jewish youths for emigration to Israel. The General Assembly, which represents 40,000 Jewish families affiliated with the Ashkenazi Kehillah in Buenos Aires, also decided to appoint a chief rabbi for the community.

Manhattan Meanderings
Most familiar sound on the New York City streets these mid-summer days is the clamor of the electric drill and riveting machine. Broadway is getting another face-lift—this time the removal of the car-tracks along Times Square. New buildings are mushrooming all over the island, the most sensational of which is the U.N. Secretariat building—a massive structure of glass and steel—the most breath-taking different skyscraper the city has seen in many years. Next eye-dazzler in the architectural field will be the skyscraper office-building to be erected by the Lever Brothers empire at Park Avenue at 53rd Street.

Something new in the culinary life has been added to the New York scene: new dishes from Israel. Isaac and Rachel Reichman, former residents of Israel, have opened a kosher-dairy restaurant on the lower East Side which will specialize in dishes from the near-East. One of the new dishes they have introduced is Falafel, said to have a Yemenite origin. Falafel is made by cooking chick peas, adding bits of chopped hot red pepper and garlic, and then mixing the ingredients into marbel-like cakes which are then fried in oil. In Israel these are eaten as a filling for rolls (much like hot dogs and hamburgers here). Other exotic dishes available are Chatcil, a cold eggplant dish which has a Syrian origin; marak-adom, a sweet fruit soup; and levivoth, a Tel Aviv version of crepes zuzettes.

Anecdotes From Albion

During Beatrice Lillie's last trip to Europe, she crossed the Atlantic on the Queen Mary. She was constantly getting lost on the tremendous liner. Finally, when it got stuck on a sand bar for 24 hours, she rang for the steward and asked "Young man, when does this PLACE reach England?"... and a returning traveller tells us he saw a sign in the star's dressing room in a London theatre, reading: "In case of fire you are earnestly requested to seize the occupant by the arm, not by the hair, which belongs to the stage properties and is consequently insured, while the actress is not!"

Sounds Logical

The sergeant was drilling a group of rookies. He approached one, and asked: "What's the first thing to do when cleaning a rifle?" "Look at the number," replied the rookie. "What's that got to do with cleaning it?" queried the sarge. "I want to make sure I'm cleaning my own gun," was the explanation.

From The Holly-woods

Moritz Rosenthal, the concert pianist, was at a Hollywood dinner party and there he met Darryl Zanuck. The producer told the musician of his plans to one day film the lives of some of the great men of music like Wagner and Liszt. "I'll bet you $10 right now that I know what such a picture would be like," Rosenthal scoffed. "Don Ameche will be Liszt. He would be unsuccessful until he met Alice Faye. Then she'd happen to hum a tune which gives him the idea for the "Hungarian Rhapsody!" Zanuck handed the pianist a ten dollar bill. "So you admit I'm right," the musician gloated. "No," was Zanuck's reply, "but the idea's worth at least $10... In Hollywood these days they're all excited about a new English car which comes over here with everything in it except an engine. If you buy one, you're supposed to buy either of two celebrated American V-8 engines and install it. Cost, with engine installed, runs about $4000. The car will do up to 120 m.p.h. (what's the rush?)

Oppose Hysteria In Fighting Subversion

NEW YORK—Officers of seven major Jewish organizations, in combination with 15 other national organizations, this week condemned the McCarran, Mundt-Ferguson and Wood "Communist control" bills and urged House and Senate leaders to substitute legislation "in the spirit of the President's Aug. 8 message on national security."

In a statement signed by the officers of 22 national organizations and issued by the National Civil Liberties Clearing House in Washington, the organizations said that the McCarran and related bills are "indiscriminately repressive measures, ostensibly written to meet the Communist threat to our national security, but they will not do that job."

"They jeopardize the rights of individuals and of organizations which not only are not subversive but are dedicated in principle and program to the fight against Communism."

Suggest Alternative

The organizational leaders called the internal security bills sponsored by Senator Warren G. Magnuson and Representative Emanuel Celler "more adequate to protect the country against security threats while maintaining conformity to traditional American guarantees of individual freedom."

The statement signers said they are "conscious of the need for adequate internal security measures, united in opposition to all totalitarian political movements and committed to the preservation of the democratic way of life at home and abroad," but that they are "unalterably opposed" to subversive control bills which are "indiscriminately repressive."

Need Understanding

The McCarran, Mundt-Ferguson and Wood bills "represent a hysterical approach to a serious national problem which can only be met through an understanding of the nature of the communist movement in this country and the faithful adherence to the basic principles of the Bill of Rights," the statement said, adding that "we most earnestly hope that the Congress will not endorse totalitarian methods to fight totalitarian dangers."

The N C R A C organizations which signed the statement were: American Jewish Committee, American Jewish Congress, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Jewish Labor Committee, Jewish War Veterans of the U. S. A., National Community Relations Advisory Council, and Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Other organizations signing this statement were: American Association of University Professors, American Civil Liberties Union, Americans for Democratic Action, American Council on Human Rights, American Unitarian Association, American Veterans Committee, Association of Immigration and Nationality Lawyers, Congregational Christian Churches, Cooperative League of the U. S. A., Friends Committee on National Legislation, International Association of Machinists, National Farm Labor Union, AFL, National Council of Jewish Women, National Association of Jewish Center Workers, United Council of Church Women.

Excavate Oldest Synagogue Known

JERUSALEM—Professor Eleazar Sukenik, world-renowned archaeologist, has completed excavations of the oldest synagogue ever discovered. The synagogue was found in Yaffeh, near Nazareth, and dates back to the fourth century, C.E.

The synagogue's half-demolished floor still retains a beautiful mosaic bearing the symbols of Israel's ancient tribes. Prof. Sukenik said that the newly-found synagogue is one of his most "remarkable excavations" and is "bigger and more beautiful than any hitherto discovered."

Give Performance For Jimmy Fund

A benefit performance was given for the Jimmy Fund at the Breakers Hotel at Narragansett Pier, Saturday afternoon. Miss Avis Strauss, coloratura soprano, sang selections from the opera, Tosca, and musical comedies. She was accompanied by Mrs. Myer Kitner of Drummondville, Quebec. Mrs. Susan Goldman of Miami presented songs and dances and Irving J. Glantz, master of ceremonies, entertained with South American dances. The proceeds of this performance was turned over to the Jimmy Fund.

Federation Supported Hospitals to Merge

PHILADELPHIA — The three general hospitals in the Federation of Jewish Charities—the Mount Sinai, Northern Liberties and Jewish—have agreed to merge their facilities to form the nucleus of a major medical center to be established on the Jewish Hospital grounds. Mount Sinai and Northern Liberties formally approved the plans at a board meeting while Jewish Hospital voted in favor of the idea if the other two hospitals fell in line. The merger is the first step in the establishment of the center which basic plans call for the inclusion of four other Federation institutions—Philadelphia Psychiatric, Eagleville Sanatorium, Willow Crest for Convalescents and Community Health Center. The center, for which an additional $3,000,000 will be raised above the $2,000,000 already earmarked by the Federation, would establish close liaison among all seven Federation institutions for research, medical education and the treatment of patients. None of the hospitals would be closed.

GJC Women Plan Vital Need Campaign

The Women's Division of the General Jewish Committee of Providence launches the second phase of its three-point campaign with the announcement of a Workers' Conference of its Vital Gifts Committee. This group, new this year, will stress the "Vital Need" of higher giving by the middle group of contributors, and will culminate in an exciting "V" Day $36.50 minimum event at Ledge-mont Country Club on October 10.

The Workers' Conference will be held on September 15 at the home of Mrs. Joseph W. Ress, 486 Cole Avenue, and will present a program to instruct leaders and workers in the importance of increasing contributions and in the techniques of fund-raising, and will also stress the "100 New Homes for Israel" theme announced earlier in the campaign. More than 100 women are expected to attend. Mrs. Barbara Lawrence, Chairman of the International Women's Groups, outstanding lecturer, and philanthropic leader who has recently returned from an extended tour of Israel, North Africa, and the Moslem countries, will be the highlight of an inspiring program.

"All differences have been settled to our satisfaction," the local delegate said.

A special board meeting has been called for September 25, to be held at the home of Mrs. Dress, 131 Fourth Street. Plans for the J.C.R.S. program for the coming year will be formulated at that time.

Catholics Honor Jewish Physician

NEW YORK—The memory of a Jewish physician, Dr. Charles C. Kastenbaum, who devoted years of his life to aiding the poor in need of medical help, was honored here this week at a ceremony at St. Joseph's Hospital, a Catholic institution.

The ceremony, at which a plaque was unveiled for the deceased physician, was attended by Cardinal Spellman, who spoke glowingly and intensely about the devotion of the late Dr. Kastenbaum to the cause of curing the ill and the diseased who came to the Catholic hospital for aid. He said Dr. Kastenbaum served the poor "with great respect and deep love" and that "his life was dedicated to showing God's mercy to all who sought his assistance." Dr. Kastenbaum died suddenly on May 22nd. Doctors said he died of overwork and exhaustion.

Dr. Kastenbaum was an attending physician at St. Joseph Hospital for Chest Diseases and Fordham Hospital.

Spanish Paper Says Jews Oppose Franco

NEW YORK—The allegation that opposition in the United States to the proposed American $100,000,000 loan for Spain has been organized by U. S. Jews "to help Communism" is made in a long dispatch filed by the New York correspondent of El Diario Vasco, a leading newspaper in San Sebastian, the New York Times reports from Madrid.

"Statistics that naturally are not published," the dispatch said, "show that the majority of the Communists and Communist sympathizers of the United States are persons of Hebraic extraction, like the spies arrested for complicity with the great traitor, Dr. Fuchs, who gave to the Soviet the secrets of the atomic bomb." As an outstanding figure in opposition to Spain, the dispatch cited "the Hebraic former Governor of New York, Herbert Lehman."

This opposition is "captained," the article said, by "the implacable enemy of Spanish-American friendship, the New York Times." The article reported that the New York Times, in spite of this alleged anti-Spanish stand, had published a Madrid dispatch reporting the efforts of young Spaniards to volunteer for service in Korea, and that the Spaniards continued hostility, which it at- were astonished and hurt at the tributed to Jews.

 Back to Sea Duty

WASHINGTON—Retired from active duty with the U. S. Navy three years ago because of a serious cancer condition, Lieut. Comdr. Edwin N. Rosenberg, 30, will probably be back at sea as soon as President Truman signs into law a bill passed by Congress restoring him to active duty.

Commander Rosenberg was retired in 1947 when he was told by doctors that he was dying of cancer and had perhaps no more than two weeks to live. Rosenberg recovered however, and was employed by the Naval Academy at Annapolis as a teacher. Bored with this quiet life, he prevailed upon Sen. Hickenlooper of Iowa to introduce the bill which got final Congressional approval last week.

JEWISH SOFTBALL LEAGUE

The Jewish Softball League playoffs will be held under the lights at Central Falls Municipal Stadium, Al Abelson, chairman of the executive committee, announced this week. This will mark the first time in league history that the softball league has gone in for night ball. Abelson said it is contemplated playing some of the remaining games on the regular schedule at the Central Falls park.

A warning was issued that all teams should make sure to get to the various city fields early enough on Sunday mornings to insure gaining possession for their regular games. Otherwise, last minute switching of fields and even postponements may result.

Technoprint Closes In

The battle for first place became white hot last week as Technoprint knocked off Cadillac Textile and Court House Auto Laundry while Etcoff was splitting its doubleheader with Esquire Formal Wear and Windsor Rhodes.

Technoprint thus climbed to within half a game of the top, while the Olympics, double losers last week, dropped three games behind the printers, and a bare half game in front of Esquire Formal Wear.

Technoprint knocked off its closest rival, the Olympics, 11-6 in a thriller that was not decided until the sixth inning, when the printers came up with five runs to break a deadlock. The undermanned Olympics set up the winning rally with a costly error. Jack Steiner was knocked out in the fourth, with Harold Warren finishing up and getting the win. Abe Lobel pitched a steady game until the sixth, when his own error contributed to his team's collapse.

Technoprint came up with a four-run first inning against Court House Auto Laundry, but it required a single run in the eighth to win the game 5-4. Court House pecked away at Steiner to tie the game in the seventh, when Warren Foster took the hill for Technoprint. The big righthander got credit for the win, which was fashioned on Murray Kerzner's double and Bob Goldis' game-ending single. Details of other games were not reported, but the following results of games are known: Arden's Jewelry took both its games, with Court House Auto Laundry and Cadillac Textile; Richard's Clothing won its two games with Miller's Delicatessen, one of them a replay; Etcoff Construction lost to Esquire Formal Wear but defeated Windsor Rhodes; and Lincoln Woods lost two more to Windsor Rhodes and Esquire Formal Wear.

Dear Parents:

May I share an experience with you? Recently I was invited to a friend's house where I was introduced to a young couple who had with them their 5-year-old daughter. As principal of a Hebrew Day School, I was naturally interested in getting to know the child. I learned from the mother that the child already attends one of the nurseries in the city. "Why don't you send her to a Hebrew nursery?" I inquired. "Well you see," answered this 'modern' mother, "my child is very happy in this nursery and I . . ."

Happy? I thought to myself. What does this mother know about her child's happiness? Perhaps she is happy now, but will she be happy in later years? Will she be happy when she is among her own people and knows very little about them? Will she be happy when she knows about Easter and not about Passover? Will she be happy when she knows that her own parents did not give her the opportunity to learn when she was young?

The Providence Hebrew Day School teaches your child all that is taught in public school and more. He will study American history as well as Jewish history; he will learn English literature and Hebrew culture; he will study about Chanukkah as well as Thanksgiving. He will receive a well-rounded secular and Jewish education which will enable him to live as a true American and self-respected Jew. We offer him.

- A NURSERY SCHOOL—modern equipment; morning and afternoon sessions; an outdoor play yard.
- AN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL—grades 1-6; bus transportation; hot lunches daily; licensed teachers.

Your child will be happy with us. Teach him now so that he can be happy later!

In one month, production will be sufficient to fill Israel's entire requirements which are expected to total 800,000 tons of refined oil this year.
