* The public-private partnership (PPP) is a mode of financing by which a public authority uses private providers to finance and manage a project ensuring or contributing to the public service. In return, the private partner receives a payment from the public partner or users of the service it manages.

* The BOT (Build, Operate, Transfer) is used to finance investment projects - particularly in terms of infrastructure recognized by public utility - by companies that are successful bidders, for them to recover their investment by managing the project for a number of years. The project returns to the state after 20 or 30 years.

We remain at your disposal for any further questions you might have.

Yours very truly,

Elisa Bensimon
