Judicial ethics in Iowa differ from Washington ethics

There were more disclosures in recent days in the ongoing saga involving the ethical standards of justices on the U.S. Supreme Court — or, more accurately, the lack of ethical standards.

Randy Evans

With each new disclosure about our nation's highest court, the reputations of justices here on the Iowa Supreme Court take on more luster — and deservedly so.

The nonprofit news outlet ProPublica reported that U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas has received millions of dollars' worth of luxury travel from wealthy benefactors without any public disclosure. Thomas has shrugged off concerns about the potential for a conflict of interests from his acceptance of these gifts.

Justices Sonia Sotomayor and Neil Gorsuch have been criticized for declining to recuse themselves from taking part in cases involving the publishing conglomerate Penguin Random House. Both justices have lucrative deals with the publisher predating the court cases both later took part in that affected the publisher.

Their colleague Samuel Alito is in this same ethical stew. More on him shortly.

In contrast with Thomas, Alito, Sotomayor and Gorsuch, Iowa justices have been guided by a different sense of propriety as they try to avoid being seen as compromising their integrity or the integrity of the Iowa Supreme Court.

After I retired from the Des Moines Register and took over leadership of the Iowa Freedom of Information Council, Justice David Wiggins, with whom I was acquainted, gave me two tickets to an Iowa Cubs baseball game he could not attend. I sent a thank-you note and a check to reimburse him for what he paid for the tickets. The day my check arrived, Wiggins had a court employee return my check and explain the justice could not appear to be accepting money from someone who someday might have a case before the court.

I understood. And there were cases that came before the court later in which the Iowa FOI Council and I were involved. Wiggins retired in 2020.

Last April, the Supreme Court ruled in my favor and in favor of two other plaintiffs in our lawsuit challenging Gov. Kim Reynolds' lengthy delays in filling requests for public records. Justice Edward Mansfield did not take part in the case.

He never explained his reason. Knowledgeable court watchers said the father of another plaintiff, Bleeding Heartland blogger Laura Belin, had been a law partner of Mansfield's.

In June, the Iowa Supreme Court deadlocked 3-3 on the question of whether to reinstate the so-called fetal heartbeat law banning abortions after six weeks of pregnancy. Because of the tie vote, an injunction remained in place and prevented the 2018 law from taking effect.

The deadlock occurred because the seventh justice, Dana Oxley, did not take part in the decision. As with Mansfield, she never explained why. But court watchers took note she was a former partner of the attorney representing the Emma Goldman Clinic in Iowa City, one of the parties challenging the law.

The ethical positions taken by Wiggins, Mansfield and Oxley all grow from a belief judges have an obligation to hold themselves to a standard of conduct that does not bring discredit to the court or even hint at favoritism — factors that would diminish the respect, credibility and confidence in our courts.

A lot of tarnish has occurred at the national level, however, as the murky ethical standards for U.S. Supreme Court justices and their acceptance of gifts become better known. And these are gifts with a value far beyond a $20 check for Iowa Cubs tickets.

Investigative reporters at ProPublica found Justice Alito did not disclose an all-expenses-paid fishing trip to Alaska in 2008 that included private jet travel between Washington and a fishing lodge that normally charges guests $1,000 per night. This was not a fishing cabin like my friend Tony owns, which has no electricity nor any indoor plumbing.

The cost of the Alaska vacation was paid for by hedge fund manager Paul Singer, who has been involved in 10 cases before the Supreme Court. One ended in 2014 — after the fishing trip — with Singer receiving a $2.4 billion windfall because of the court's decision. Alito voted in favor of Singer's side.

Alito brushed aside notions of the appearance of a conflict. He pooh-poohed his relationship with Singer, calling him a casual acquaintance.

But ProPublica reported that Indiana University law professor Charles Geyh said of Alito's trip, "If you weren't good friends, what were you doing accepting this? If you were good friends, what were you doing ruling on this case?"

Bingo! This was not the same as taking part in a case involving McDonald's even though you eat Egg McMuffins a few times in a year.

ProPublica reported that over the course of 25 years, real estate developer Harlan Crow has provided Thomas and his wife with at least 38 luxury vacations around the globe and flights on Crow's private jet and helicopter. In 2014, Crow purchased the simple one-story home in Savannah, Ga., owned by Thomas' elderly mother. She still lives there at no charge. Crow paid $133,300 for the house and two vacant lots. He now pays about $1,500 a year in property taxes on the house — an expense the justice had borne before Crow's purchase.

Questions concerning the appearance of conflicts include New York state Judge Juan Merchan, who is presiding over the criminal case there against Donald Trump. Merchan brought embarrassment to the courts when he contributed $15 to Joe Biden's campaign in 2020 and made $10 donations to Progressive Turnout Project, a voter outreach group, and to Stop Republicans, a group with leanings that are not secret.

The donations were small, just as my payment for those baseball tickets was. But the appearance of ethical concerns is not trivial, and that was what Justice Wiggins wanted to avoid.

Newspaper search and seizure unnecessary

Picture a scene of police bursting through the door of a local newspaper office, and then they proceed to search the place and confiscate computers, hard drives and cell phones of reporters.

From there they proceed to the newspaper publisher's home where again they confiscate more computers, cell phones and other documents, all while the publisher's 98-year-old mother sits in horror watching it all unfold. Sadly, the mother dies the next day from the effects of the stress of the event.

You might think to yourself that this happened in Russia, or China, so what's the big deal? But sadly, this actually happened recently to a small town newspaper in Kansas.

Eric Meyer, owner and publisher of the Marion County Record said police were motivated to conduct their search and seizure by a confidential source who leaked sensitive documents to the newspaper. He said the message was clear, "Mind your own business, or we're going to step on you."

It was reported that the city's entire five officer police force and two sheriff's deputies basically took everything the newspaper needed to publish their next edition, and it wasn't clear how the newspaper staff would get the paper to press that week.

Yes, there was a search warrant, and the raid was part of an investigation into the alleged identity theft of a restaurant owner who had clashed with the paper. There may be more to this story that hasn't been released, but whatever the final facts find, this likely was not a matter of national security, or anything that should justify this type of action by the police.

Even though the Privacy Protection Acts protects journalists from search, the Marion Police Department argued that the law doesn't apply when journalists are thought to be involved with criminal activity.

According to a report in the Kansas Reflector, the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press sent a letter to Marion Police Chief Gideon Cody, that reads in part: "Newsroom searches and seizures are among the most intrusive actions law enforcement can take with respect to the free press, and the most potentially suppressive of free speech by the press and the public."

The letter was co-signed by more than 30 news organizations including the Associated Press, Bloomberg news, Gannett, Kansas Press Association, New York Times, NBC news, the New Yorker, Reuters and the Washington Post.

We're sure if offered the opportunity, 99% of the news organizations and newspapers would add their names to that list, including all the newspapers of the Enterprise Media Group.

BACK TO FORWARD

A Teacher's First Day of Country School

The young woman's gaze swept across the room in front of her, the single room in which she would teach her 16 students. Most had attended country school last year, but there would be a few new ones. She smiled as she thought of the two five-year-olds, the kindergartners. They would probably be shy and a bit scared of all those "big kids," especially on this first day. But they would be so eager to learn.

DeAnn Kruempel

Those two would sit in the smallest desks directly in front of her own. Medium-sized and larger desks filled the rest of the room. The recitation bench, where each class would gather for daily lessons, gleamed in the sunshine that shimmered through the open windows.

Suddenly, voices interrupted the teacher's reverie. The first day of school was about to begin! Parents dropped off some, but most youngsters walked to country school. One little boy peeked in the open door. "Come in." The teacher smiled warmly. He proudly placed a huge Wolf River apple on her desk, then rushed back out to the playground. His sister followed with a jar of cosmos flowers.

At 9:00 AM the woman strode to the entry to pull the bell rope. Bright, shiny faces soon beamed up at her from polished desks. Nearly as excited as her students, she welcomed them and set forth expectations and daily plans. "Each day we will begin with the Pledge of Allegiance." She asked two older students to get the flag, and everyone filed outside to the flagpole. Familiar with the routine, one carefully unfolded and hooked the flag to the rope. The other pulled the rope to raise it high. Hands on hearts, all looked up as they recited the pledge.

Back inside, helpers distributed textbooks: reading, spelling, arithmetic, history, geography and hygiene. No one even fidgeted as the teacher read the first chapter in The Bobbsey Twins. She gave assignments and overviews of each subject. "There is a special way to remember how to spell the word 'geography'---a mnemonic," she taught them. "Use the first letter of each word in this sentence: George Ellison's Oldest Girl Rode A Pig Home Yesterday."

There was a morning and afternoon recess. After ten minutes, the woman rang her hand bell. This gave youngsters time to visit the outhouse if needed. At fifteen minutes the big bell clanged its time-to-come-in message.

At noon the students grabbed their lunch pails from the entry and hurried outside. Lunches were packed in various containers from syrup pails to boughten lunch boxes. There was a whole hour to eat and play and talk to friends. Tomorrow they would each bring their own cup from home. The cups would hang on hooks under their names in the entry. A water cooler sat on the table, ready to quench big and little thirsts at recess. There was also a basin of water for hand-washing.

The day passed quickly. Little scholars found themselves looking forward to the upcoming months. They would get to write on the chalkboard up front, just like Teacher. She had presented each of them with a bright white, full-length piece of chalk. There were brand new books on their library shelves. The teacher would read to them every day! She promised to read a book about a house in the big woods and one about a burro named Brighty. On Fridays they would have art or music. Their teacher showed them penmanship exercises. She said they would learn the Palmer method. At Christmas the whole group would present a program. Everyone would come!

At the end of the day the teacher again gazed at the classroom, but she no longer saw empty desks. In her mind she saw unique, precious individuals. She found herself looking forward to the months ahead, for she knew she would learn and grow right along with them---those sixteen bright, shiny faces that she already loved.

tawattamie County, Iowa in the 1940s.)

Cashless Events: Digital Ticketing starting in WIC, RVC this fall

BY MATT GENGLER, SPORTS EDITOR
sports@missourivalleytimes.com

It started during the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, and now is beginning to make its mark across the state and area high school conferences, including both the Western Iowa and Rolling Valley conferences.

Electronic/Digital ticketing started in Iowa when both the Girls High School Union and the Boys High School Athletic Association opted to use the process for post-season events. Of course, only in Iowa, the girls union used gobound.com, while the boys association uses Hometown Ticketing. The first area conference to make the switch was the Hawkeye-10.

"The Hawkeye-10 piloted it last year for area schools," stated Audubon Activities Director Sean Birks. "The WIC competes in several non-league contests with the Hawkeye-10, and we learned a lot from what they did."

Missouri Valley Activities Director Brian Knott added, "Schools have started to allow spectators to use credit to pay for tickets and concessions, which is a natural move. Cash seems to be used less in all areas these days, moving forward."

Missouri Valley will use online ticketing and credit cards for all events, not just WIC events. They will still be taking cash, with the idea of eventually being cashless.

"The WIC is using Bound now for a lot of things, such as scheduling and organizing events throughout the conference," Knott added. "WIC officials made this decision back in our spring meetings, with the idea of moving to cash free events. The league schools have been posting on social media, sending out school-wide emails, word of mouth, newspaper articles and radio announcements."

Fans can still purchase specific school passes, as event tickets have been increased to $7 per event. Schools warn fans there will be delays with the switch, as everyone is learning the new process. They want the fans to be patient with each individual school as they adapt to the new process. Schools are encouraging students to assist parents and grandparents during this transition. "It's just a matter of convenience in the long-run," Knott concluded. "It's difficult to find volunteers for the freshmen baseball games in the summer, or Saturday morning volleyball tournaments, as well as the amount of cash to keep on hand for each home event. This just makes sense as we keep moving forward."

Boyer Valley - GoBound/ Electronic Ticketing

Boyer Valley's Activities Director Curtis Maasen is looking forward to the change.

"Through both high school associations, this has been on the way for the last couple of years, especially since a majority of post-season events are being handled by Bound," Maasen stated. "There's constantly stories in local, state and nation wide news about people losing their jobs for mishandling money. We have great people in our district, and we are eliminating any chance for temptation."

Maasen went on to explain that Bound made a push for schools to work toward the "cashless gates" by offering incentives to schools, as card readers have been provided at the schools. The Rolling Valley Conference made the decision to be unified across their own league as well as with what neighboring conferences are doing.

This decision to switch was made by both school superintendents and activity directors. It started in the spring, when RVC ADs met to create a conference constitution, changes were made before it was ratified. There may be a few delays with the new process, but fans will benefit from a quicker and easier entry experience.

"Purchasing an electronic ticket is just like buying anything else online," Maasen stated. "Add tickets to your cart and pay at the checkout with your debit or credit card. Fans will then get a QR code to be scanned in at the gate for the entry fee. This process has been used by our Drama Dept. the last couple of years."

Anyone with questions are invited to call the schools, and the staff will help everyone through the process.

Lt. Gov. Adam Gregg Named Chair of National Lieutenant Governors Association

DES MOINES – Iowa's Lieutenant Governor Adam Gregg has been elected Chair of the National Lieutenant Governors Association (NLGA). NLGA is the professional association supporting lieutenant governors in all 50 states and the U.S. territories. The mission of NLGA is to assist these leaders, and the states and territories themselves, to be as effective and as efficient as possible for constituents.

"Adam Gregg is a strong advocate for rural Iowa and rural America, and serving as chair of the NLGA will present opportunities for him to further amplify the issues affecting rural communities nationwide," Governor Reynolds stated.

"I'm honored to be chosen by my colleagues from across the country to lead the National Lieutenant Governors Association," said Lt. Governor Gregg. "We will continue to be a leading resource for innovative policy solutions at the state level."

"NLGA thrives under leaders that are willing to participate, share, and learn with their peer second-in-commands from across the country," said NLGA Director Julia Brossart. "Lt. Governor Gregg's peers find him to be an engaged leader willing to share ideas, from rural prosperity to emergency medical services."

Lt. Governor Gregg was nominated and approved by the NLGA membership and begins service immediately. He will serve as Chair of the NLGA until the Summer of 2024.

The association meets three times a year and is responsible for charting a course of issues and experiences to be available to the nation's second-highest state officeholders, while working to address issues of mutual concern to all states and territories.

Lt. Governor Gregg has served in the role of lieutenant governor since May of 2017. He leads the Governor's Empower Rural Iowa Initiative, he led the Feeding Iowans Task Force in 2020, and he is a past Chair of the Republican Lieutenant Governors Association.

Governor Kim Reynolds previously served as Chair of the National Lieutenant Governors Association from 2015-16.

Showing Up

"Do not withhold good from those to whom it is due, when it is in your power to act."
Proverbs 3:27 NIV

I'm always surprised when I send an email or leave a message for someone and they don't return my call or answer my email, especially when I make it clear that I am interested in their product or service. This is tantamount to them saying that they don't want my business and I am usually happy to take my business elsewhere. And even when it doesn't involve a financial interest, I'm still surprised—and dismayed—when people don't return calls. We all have people in our families and our workplaces who just don't show up by returning calls, and who frequently call out sick, and these folks tend to not be successful. You simply cannot be successful in your professional or personal life if you aren't there to do your job or fulfill your roles. When we extend this analysis to the moral and spiritual realm, the same logic holds. That is, if you aren't there to help others and do your duty, no matter how good your intentions are, you're on the path to failure. The road to hell is indeed paved with good intentions. The road to heaven is paved by workers who show up and do their job.
