Gambia, The

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In The Gambia, children are required to attend school only until the age of 12, at which point they are permitted under Section 51 of the Children's Act to work as an apprentice in the informal sector. This standard makes children ages 13 to 15 that are not engaged in apprenticeships in the informal sector particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not required to be in school, but also are not legally permitted to work.(12, 15, 21) Section 43 of the Children's Act, however, permits children at age 16 to do light work, meaning work that does not jeopardize the health or safety of the child and does not interfere with school attendance.(16) In November 2014, President Jammeh declared the Government would impose the death penalty for the crime of raping a child, effective September 2015.(22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Combat forced child labor and coordinate the handling of trafficking victims, working closely with social welfare officers in police units.(6, 13) Monitor, through the operation of five Neighborhood Watch Groups, suspected cases of child abuse or child commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas near tourist sites. Operate a 24-hour hotline to address human trafficking and maintain a database of individuals suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking, in collaboration with The Gambia Tourism Board.(9, 23) Maintain an electronic database that contains information on cases related to child protection, including those involving labor and human trafficking violations.(9, 23)
Child Protection Alliance (CPA)	Promote children's rights and child protection services. Raise awareness about child exploitation.(24-26) Include Government departments, civil society organizations, UN agencies, NGOs, child and youth organizations, and bilateral institutions.(25).
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Investigate suspected cases of trafficking, including child trafficking. Agency includes investigators, police, members of the National Intelligence Agency, and five prosecutors.(27) Gather evidence for NAATIP Director, who can recommend that the NAATIP prosecutor file charges for trafficking violations.(27)
The Gambia Tourism Board	Combat commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourist areas.(6) Maintain a database of individuals suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking, in collaboration with the DSW.(9, 28)
Tourism Security Unit	Prevent unaccompanied children from entering tourist areas and patrol tourist areas for child labor and criminal violations, such as commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Has a dedicated child protection division.(6, 13, 28)
Gambia Police Force Child Welfare Unit	Oversee all situations involving children's welfare.(26) Work with the CPA, DSW, and other agencies and NGOs to assess and identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(7)
Child Protection Committees	Raise awareness and report cases of labor issues, including child labor, to the authorities. DSW operates 15 Child Protection Committees in the country.(1, 7, 13, 29)
Neighborhood Watch Groups	Monitor neighborhoods for child exploitation. Five existing groups established by DSW in urban areas near tourist resorts.(13) Provides members with allowances and cell phone credit.(13)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less-developed economies, The Gambia should employ about 19 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws.(30-32) A source also indicates that inadequate transportation and a lack of fuel presented a challenge for inspectors to carry out their duties.(1, 6) Children found during labor inspections are referred to the Department of Social Welfare (DSW).(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Coordinate Government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Headed by a Director and assisted by social welfare officers.(6)
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate, administer, and monitor the implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Act and share information among law enforcement agencies. Convene monthly meetings of the National TIP Taskforce.(6, 13, 28)

In 2015, the annual budget of $33,000 for the National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP) covered salaries and administrative costs, but ad hoc allocations were occasionally received from the central Government. NAATIP also had additional funding for training its personnel and law enforcement officials.(1, 6, 26) NAATIP is developing a database to monitor human trafficking and hired a data officer to gather and compile information from all organizations involved in anti-trafficking efforts; however, information has not been released.(6)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of The Gambia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Code of Conduct of the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children	Raises awareness of commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry and among tourists.(6, 33) At the beginning of peak tourism season annually, new hotel staff are trained on the Code.(6)
National Trafficking In Persons Action Plan (2012–2016)	Establishes a plan to combat human trafficking; initially drafted by the Ministry of Justice and recently updated by NAATIP, which is responsible for implementation.(13)
Program for Accelerated Growth and Employment (2012–2015)	Promotes improved social protection for children and access to education and to prevent child labor, including its worst forms.(7, 34)
United Nations Development Assistance Framework (2012–2016)	Encourages improved access to education and develops child labor policies.(35)
Trafficking Memorandum of Understanding (MOU)	Coordinates efforts to address human trafficking in The Gambia and Senegal through information sharing, improved laws, and prevention, protection, and assistance activities. Aims to develop a National Social Protection Policy and Operational Plan.(36) The MOU, signed in December 2013, includes the participation of six UN agencies.(13, 36)
Education Policy* (2004–2015)	Outlines goals to expand school infrastructure, increase school enrollment, and improve the quality of education.(37)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, The Government was in the process of developing a National Children’s Policy and a National Plan of Action to Combat Sexual Exploitation of Children to follow the 2004 Plan; however, neither plan was approved.(7) Likewise, research found no evidence of a newly approved Education Policy. Although the Government of The Gambia has adopted the Trafficking MOU, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of The Gambia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Sex Tourism Project	CPA project, funded by ECPAT Netherlands, that raises awareness about commercial sexual exploitation of children and Tourism Offences Act among Tourism Security Unit personnel, hoteliers, travel agencies, and other tourism stakeholders. Provides Tourism Security Unit personnel with the Code of Conduct of the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children.(1, 38)
Street Children Centert	DSW, with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses, run a drop-in center in Talinding Kunjang that provides medical care, food, and counseling to street children, including human trafficking victims and almodus.(6, 13, 28, 29) Tries to prevent children from returning to begging.(11, 39)
Conditional Cash Transfers to the Majaalist	Ministry of Education program gives marabouts food rations and approximately $2.56 monthly for each student if the marabouts do not force students to beg.(13) Provides teachers for English, mathematics, and science to Koranic schools. The Government reports that more than 1,000 children are benefiting from the program and plans to expand the program into more rural areas.(1, 6, 40)
Shelter for Trafficking Victims	DSW, with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses, operate a 24-hour shelter in Bakoteh for victims of human trafficking, including children. Accommodates 48 people and provides guests with food, medical care, and counseling.(13) Provided services to over 1,000 children since opening in 2006.(1, 13)
One-Stop Center	DSW center, with the support of NGO partners, opened in 2013, provides medical care, counseling, and legal services to victims of human trafficking and gender-based violence.(13)
Family Assistance Hotline†	DSW 24-hour hotline staffed with social welfare officers for trafficking victims.(1, 13)

† Program is funded by the Government of The Gambia.

Although The Gambia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem and to reach all children vulnerable to human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and street work. Existing programs do not target children working in agriculture and domestic work, where children are found working.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in The Gambia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Adopt legislation that increases the age of compulsory education to 16 so that it is commensurate with the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Provide labor law enforcement with sufficient staffing and financial resources to conduct inspections.	2013 – 2015
	Make information publicly available about the labor inspectorate's level of funding, number of labor inspectors and training related to child labor, including its worst forms. Establish a reporting mechanism for child labor complaints, investigations, and prosecutions.	2012 – 2015
	Make information publicly available about the number of criminal law enforcement investigations, violations found, prosecutions, and convictions concerning the worst forms of child labor.	2015
Coordination	Ensure the NAATIP has sufficient funding to provide training on trafficking in persons and other worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2015
Government Policies	Ensure that child labor elimination and prevention strategies are integrated into its Education Policy.	2015
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2015
Social Programs	Expand existing programs to address child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and children working in the street.	2010 – 2015
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children, including in agriculture and domestic work, to inform policies and social programs.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that children can complete primary school by subsidizing or defraying the cost of books, uniforms, and other fees.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address children working in agriculture and domestic work.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Georgia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, Georgia is receiving this assessment because it continued to implement a law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. The Government failed to remedy the abolition of its labor inspectorate, caused by its adoption of the current Labor Code in 2006. Since that time, the Government has lacked a functioning labor inspection mechanism to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws. Otherwise, the Government made efforts by amending the Labor Code to introduce restrictions on the number of hours children are allowed to work, developing and conducting a National Child Labor Survey, and developing a new methodology for identifying vulnerable children. Children in Georgia are engaged in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging. The Government also lacks a coordinating mechanism to address child labor. In addition, the compulsory education age left 15-year-old children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school, but are not legally permitted to work full time.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Georgia are engaged in child labor in agriculture.(1-4) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(5-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Georgia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	29.1 (172,378)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	31.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		116.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2005.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (1, 4, 10)
Services	Street work, including begging and collecting scrap metal* (4, 10-12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (5-7)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (5-7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Although estimates regarding the ethnicity and origin of children working on the street vary widely, sources report that children from Roma and Azerbaijani Kurd ethnic minorities make up a significant proportion of these children.(13) In situations of forced begging as a result of human trafficking, traffickers most often operate independently with a small network of three to four children, making it challenging to identify the network. Children forced to beg are often physically abused by their traffickers.(13) NGOs note that a lack of current data on the number and circumstances of children working on the street hinders effective targeting of social services.(13)

Georgia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, a dramatic increase in the number of individuals seeking in asylum in Georgia due to conflicts in the Middle East and Ukraine exceeded the Ministry of Refugees and Accommodation's capacity to process asylum applications in a timely manner. As a result, less than 10 percent of asylum seekers received refugee status during the year, leaving some children with no legal status and therefore, no access to education or social services, increasing their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.(14) By the end of 2015, however, the Ministry of Refugees and Accommodation had granted refugee or humanitarian status to 90 percent of refugees, ensuring that refugee children were able to access education and other services.(15)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Georgia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Labor Code of Georgia (16)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 4 of the Labor Code of Georgia (16, 17)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Order No. 147/N On Approving the List of Heavy, Harmful, and Hazardous Work (18-20)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution of Georgia; Articles 143-i, 143-ii, and 143-iii of the Criminal Code of Georgia; The Law of Georgia on Combating Human Trafficking (21-23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 143, 143-i, 143-ii, 143-iii, and 172 of the Criminal Code of Georgia; The Law of Georgia on Combating Human Trafficking (22, 23)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 171, 253, 255, 255-1, and 255-2 of the Criminal Code of Georgia (19, 23, 24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 171 of the Criminal Code of Georgia (19, 23)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Articles 9 and 21 of the Law of Georgia on Military Duty and Military Service (25, 26)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 10 of the Law of Georgia on Military Duty and Military Service (15, 25-27)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Articles 2 and 9 of the Law of Georgia on General Education (18, 28)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 22 of the Law of Georgia on General Education (28)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In December 2015, the Interagency Coordination Council on Combating Trafficking in Persons finalized a draft of several legislative amendments that would expand the child protection referral mechanism; give social workers increased authority to remove children from abusive or negligent homes; and make it easier for street children to obtain identification cards necessary for accessing government assistance. These amendments are slated to be submitted to Parliament for approval in 2016.(10, 29)

The Law on General Education makes education free through high school and compulsory for 9 years, but does not specify a start or end age.(18, 28) Because children begin school at age 6, education is typically compulsory up to age 15.(2) The compulsory education age leaves 15-year-old children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work full time.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Affairs (MoLHSA)	Oversee child welfare issues and address labor matters.(19) Through the Child Protection and Social Programs sub-department, receive and forward complaints of child labor violations to law enforcement agencies for investigation and prosecution.(30)
Department for Inspection of Labor Conditions* within MoLHSA	Pilot program designed to enforce occupational safety and health laws and prohibitions of forced labor and human trafficking.(10)
The Department of Labor and Employment Policy within MoLHSA	Address labor and employment issues, and revise existing laws and policies to be in accordance with international standards.(18)
Social Service Agency (SSA) within MoLHSA	Administer social benefits such as targeted social assistance, health care, and vouchers for day care. Employ social service agents who identify qualifying families for services and social workers who oversee child protection and family welfare cases.(10)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MoIA)	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor and child trafficking and investigate NGO and civilian reports of potential child labor violations.(2, 3, 19)
Central Criminal Police Department within the MoIA	Lead criminal investigations of trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of children, through the Division for Combating Illicit Trafficking of Drugs, Human Trafficking, and Irregular Migration.(30) Identify human traffickers and systematize data on traffickers across various agencies through the Information-Analytical Department.(31) Investigate possible human trafficking schemes by deploying teams of two law enforcement officials in Mobile Units to investigate companies offering suspicious work opportunities abroad.(30, 32)
District Police Units within the MoIA	Collect information on minors within each jurisdiction and visit minors' families to inform them of their rights. Conduct classes for school teachers on children's rights.(33)
The Prosecutor General's Office within the Ministry of Justice	Investigate large-scale cases of child trafficking.(3)
Joint Child Referral Mechanism	Ensure interagency coordination of the enforcement of child labor laws and enumerate the procedures for referring children subject to any form of violence, including labor exploitation, to child protective services.(2, 30) Once any ministry identifies a case of child exploitation, the MoIA registers the case. MoLHSA then assesses the child's condition, provides shelter and rehabilitation services to the child as needed, and monitors the child's case.(3)

* Agency was created during the reporting period.

In March 2015, the Prime Minister signed Decree No. 81, which established a Department for Inspection of Labor Conditions within the Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Affairs (MoLHSA). In April 2015, MoLHSA issued a statute establishing the competencies of the Department for Inspection.(34-36) However, key legislation needed to formally establish the Department for Inspection's mandate to conduct labor inspections was not passed during the reporting period, and a chief labor inspector has not been selected.(10, 15) Article 3 of the Law on Oversight of Entrepreneurial Activity states that any government agency charged with oversight of private enterprise requires a court order in order to enter the premises of a place of business or even review documents from the employer.(37) This provision in particular obstructs the Department for Inspection from enforcing Georgia's labor laws through inspections, in accordance with international norms.(38) In addition, the April 2015 Statute states that the Department for Inspection should be able to impose sanctions, but requires the Government to introduce additional legislation in order for this to be possible.(35, 36)

During the reporting period, the Government amended the Law on Entrepreneurial Activity Oversight, as well as the Law on Combating Human Trafficking, to allow labor monitors to enter businesses without the permission of the employer if there are grounds to believe that monitoring may uncover a case of human trafficking.(38, 39) Although these provisions allow the Department for Inspection greater flexibility in inspecting possible forced labor and human trafficking violations, labor monitors are unable to impose sanctions or assess penalties for violations found.(39) In addition, monitors remain unable to inspect for violations of other provisions of the labor code, including laws on child labor.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, Georgia lacked a labor inspectorate to enforce laws on child labor, including its worst forms.(10)

However, in February 2015, the Government adopted the State Monitoring Program, a pilot initiative to monitor compliance with occupational safety and health laws and laws prohibiting forced labor and human trafficking.(10, 34) The Government viewed the pilot program as an initial step towards establishing a functioning labor enforcement mechanism, which would build the capacity and credibility of the mechanism.(40) However, the State Monitoring Program is only able to conduct monitoring of the 150 companies that volunteered to participate in the pilot program and must give companies 5 days' notice prior to a monitoring visit.(34, 41) In addition, a source reported that because the State Monitoring Program does not have sanctioning authority and its findings are confidential, the monitoring has little impact on workers.(38)

During the reporting period, MoLHSA hired 25 labor monitors and created a roster of 25 reserve monitors.(35) Monitors attended a number of trainings throughout the year, including a 5-day training on anti-trafficking laws, identifying signs of trafficking, and social services available to human trafficking victims.(13) Monitors conducted 114 monitoring site visits covering 80 companies, and law enforcement agencies launched investigations of six cases related to labor laws, including one involving a minor.(13, 42)

In 2015, the Social Service Agency under MoHLSA placed 232 street children at day centers or 24-hour crisis centers and directed an additional 64 children to other state programs.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Georgia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 6).

Table 6. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Yes (3)	Yes (10)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (3)	Yes (10)
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (3)	Yes (10)
Number of Investigations	2 (3)	2 (10)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	2 (10)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	1 (3)	3 (10)
Number of Convictions	2 (3)	1 (13)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (3)	Yes (10)

Training on trafficking in persons was conducted regularly throughout the year for investigators, prosecutors, and judges.(10)

Victims of child trafficking are referred to the State Fund for Protection and Assistance of (Statutory) Victims of Human Trafficking, a MoLHSA program that offers shelter and psychological rehabilitation services to child victims.(3) In September 2015, the Prosecutor General's Office and Ministry of Internal Affairs took steps to allow the Prosecutor General's Victim-Witness Coordinators to meet and counsel human trafficking victims through the duration of each investigation. Under this program, suspected victims of human trafficking, including children, meet with a Victim-Witness Coordinator to receive counseling and gain access to available government services before being interviewed by law enforcement officials.(13)

Research found that the Police have in some instances refused to investigate cases of forced begging raised by NGOs, claiming that street begging could not be considered a violation of children's rights under the current legislation.(13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking and promote child welfare, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare	Implement the 2012–2015 Child Action Plan, which addresses the issues of street children and child victims of abuse and neglect and promotes the rehabilitation and social integration of street children and juvenile criminals. Composed of representatives of the Ministry of Education and Science, Ministry of Finance, MoIA, Ministry of Justice, Public Defender's Office, MoLHSA, and UNICEF.(3)
The Interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Council for the Implementation of Measures against Human Trafficking	Coordinate government efforts against trafficking in persons and children, including efforts to protect and rehabilitate victims.(3) Refer child victims to shelters to receive social services.(2) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprises representatives from state agencies and non-state entities.(30) In 2015, drafted Standard Operating Procedures on identifying cases of child trafficking and forced child labor for law enforcement agencies, which were approved by the Minister of Internal Affairs in January, 2015.(29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Georgia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan for Child Welfare and Protection (2012–2015)	Establishes an overarching framework to improve the welfare of children, including highly vulnerable groups like street children. Identifies the institutions responsible for carrying out activities, funding sources, and expected outcomes in a broad range of areas such as education, health, child care, public awareness campaigns, and rehabilitation programs.(2, 18, 43)
Anti-Trafficking Action Plan for (2015–2016)	Supports implementation of activities to address human trafficking, including the exploitation of children. Focuses on identifying street children and including them in formal education, as well as ensuring that shelters for human trafficking victims properly accommodate child victims.(44)
National Human Rights Strategy (2014–2020)	Identifies human rights priorities, including the protection of child rights. Led to the adoption of a National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights 2014–2016, which includes objectives to strengthen provision of services to vulnerable children, such as those living and working on the streets.(45, 46)
EU Association Agreement and Association Agenda (2014–2016)	Outlines a framework for cooperation between Georgia and the EU. Requires Georgia to institute a number of initiatives to protect children's rights, including addressing child poverty, providing adequate resources to the Public Defender to undertake work for children, and focusing on measures to protect children against all forms of violence.(3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Georgia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Georgia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(47) In 2015, supported the National Statistics Office (Geostat) in conducting a National Child Labor Survey. The results of the survey are anticipated to be publicly available in October 2016.(47)
Improved Compliance with Labor Laws in the Democratic Republic of Georgia	USDOL-funded, $2 million grant implemented by the ILO to work with the Government to improve its ability to enforce labor laws, including child labor laws, and adhere to international labor standards.(48) Key objectives of the project include supporting the establishment of effective labor law enforcement mechanisms in Georgia through labor inspection and promoting effective tripartite cooperation.(49)

Program	Description
Social Rehabilitation and Childcare Program†	Government program, with a 2015 budget of $8.1 million, that provides assistance to children at high risk of abandonment and children with disabilities; also places abandoned children in appropriate care.(3, 10)
Reaching Highly Vulnerable Children in Georgia with a Focus on Children Living or Working on the Streets†	MoLHSA program to assist children and youth living or working on the streets. Supported by UNICEF and the EU, and implemented by World Vision, Caritas, and Child and Environment.(7, 13, 30) Includes the operation of four mobile street teams comprised of a social worker, a psychologist, and a former street child who serves as a mentor, who makes initial contact with street children and directs them to the program's services. Also provides four day care centers, two 24-hour crisis intervention centers, and two long-term transition centers that prepare children to enter long-term care.(7, 10, 13, 30) In 2015, an estimated 573 children benefited from these services.(13)
The State Fund for Protection and Assistance of (Statutory) Victims of Human Trafficking†	MoLHSA program to protect, assist, and rehabilitate trafficking and domestic violence victims, including minors.(3, 50) Implements the Government's Rehabilitation and Reintegration Strategy, which includes operating two trafficking shelters in Batumi and Tbilisi, each staffed with a social worker to further assist victims. Funds the Assistance to Victims of Trafficking in Persons Hotline and a related Web site.(2, 51) In 2015, received a total budget of $2.6 million and employed 33 individuals who focused solely on human trafficking issues.(10)
Program on Provision of School Children with Free Textbooks†	MoES program that distributes free textbooks to all public school students and private school students from socially-disadvantaged families. In 2015, the Government allocated $5.1 million for the program.(10)
The Georgian Language for Future Success Program	MoES program implemented by the National Center for Teacher Professional Development that provides professional development opportunities to teachers of Georgian language in schools with large populations of ethnic minority students. These teachers also assist local teachers in improving their abilities in the Georgian language.(30, 52) As of June 2015, 600 teachers had participated in the program.(53)
Second Chance Education for Disadvantaged, Children with Behavior Problems and Out-of-School Children in Georgia†	MoES program designed to promote inclusion of disadvantaged children, including street children, victims of forced begging, and children engaged in seasonal agricultural work into the educational system.(10, 30)
Pension Program and Targeted Social Assistance†	SSA-administered program that provides financial assistance to the poorest 10 percent of the population.(54) In 2015, the Government cooperated with UNICEF to develop a new methodology for targeting vulnerable children to identify beneficiaries Targeted Social Assistance (TSA) beneficiaries. As a result, over 22,000 additional children qualified to receive TSA benefits during the reporting period, bringing the total to 115,096 qualified child beneficiaries.(55)
UNICEF Country Program 2011–2015	Joint effort by UNICEF, the Government of Georgia, and other partners from intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to improve both the provision of social services to children and the protection of children's rights. Supports the MoLHSA and SSA program to reform child care efforts by reducing the institutionalization of children.(56) In 2015, UNICEF advised the Government on the development of a new Juvenile Justice Code as well as a Law on Early Learning and Pre-school Education, which would provide compulsory pre-primary education for all children.(55)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Georgia (Table 10).

Table 10. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Increase the age up to which education is compulsory to 16, the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Establish a functioning Labor Inspectorate to enforce child labor legislation. Ensure that the Labor Inspectorate has sufficient funding to provide an adequate number of inspectors; that inspectors are capable of performing quality targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections; that inspectors have the ability to assess penalties; and that data on the number and type of inspections, violations, and penalties are made publicly available.	2009 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure that legislation permits the Department for Inspection of Labor Conditions to enter the premises of all businesses to conduct unannounced inspections, and empowers monitors to impose sanctions for violation of labor laws.	2015
	Ensure that labor monitors inspect for compliance with the full range of labor laws, including laws against child labor.	2015
	Ensure that data on the number and type of inspections conducted, violations found, and penalties issued by the Department for Inspection of Labor Conditions are made publicly available.	2015
	Ensure that cases of forced begging are recognized as criminal acts and receive appropriate and thorough investigation by the Police.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct a survey to learn more about the number and circumstances of children living on the street, to facilitate effective targeting of policies and programs.	2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Ghana made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government issued a legislative instrument to implement the Human Trafficking Act, which includes provisions for establishing care centers and providing social services to child trafficking victims. It also launched five new social programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor and announced a Child and Family Welfare Policy that aims to improve child protection. However, children in Ghana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and harvesting cocoa. The Government has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. Additionally, resource constraints severely limited the Government's ability to fully implement policies and social programs during the reporting period. The Government of Ghana also has not provided any funding for anti-trafficking enforcement efforts or programs to protect victims of human trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ghana are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in fishing and harvesting cocoa.(1-12) According to a report by Tulane University that assessed data collected during the 2013–2014 harvest season, there were an estimated 918,543 child laborers ages 5 to 17 in the cocoa sector, which represents a 6.4 percent decline in the number of child workers in cocoa production since the 2008–2009 harvest season.(13) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ghana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	24.7 (1,721,914)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	91.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	25.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(14)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Living Standard Survey, Round 6, 2012–2013.(15) Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work* (18, 20)
	Transporting heavy loads as kayayes (mainly girls who carry loads on their head)† (10, 18, 20, 28, 29)
	Electronic waste and garbage scavenging,* including sorting scavenged items and transporting items for sale (30-37)
	Street work, including begging* and hawking* (18, 38)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (20, 21, 39, 40)
	Forced begging and forced labor in agriculture; fishing, including for tilapia; artisanal gold mining; domestic work; and street work, including vending and carrying heavy loads, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 3, 10, 12, 16, 21, 39-47)
	Forced ritual service for girls known as trokosi (10, 20, 28, 39, 41, 48)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some girls in the Greater Accra and Volta Regions are involved in a form of ritual servitude whereby families give a young girl to officials of a local shrine in atonement for their family members’ sins.(10, 28, 39, 48) These girls, known as trokosi, perform tasks such as fetching water, maintaining the shrines, and working on the priest’s land. Their basic needs often go unmet, and they frequently suffer sexual and physical abuse.(10, 48) Girls also work as kayayes, a term for children who carry heavy loads on their heads. There has been an increase in the number of young girls from the Northern Region migrating to Accra for this reason.(39, 49)

Ghana is a source, transit, and destination country for the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, including in fishing.(2, 39, 41, 50) Children are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in the Volta and Western Regions.(39, 41) Research found that child trafficking within Ghana was more predominant than transnational child trafficking.(3, 12, 39, 47, 51) Ghanaian children are also transported to neighboring countries in West Africa, as well as to Europe and the Middle East, for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(38, 39, 41, 52)

According to the Constitution and Education Act, primary education is free and compulsory from kindergarten through junior high school in Ghana.(53, 54) There is no upper age limit for free basic education, although most children typically complete junior high school at age 15.(54, 55) The Government has taken measures to increase access to education by providing free uniforms and books to some children.(11) However, in practice, children must pay for school uniforms, fees, and materials, which may be prohibitive for many families.(2, 9, 10, 26, 30, 56, 57) In addition, although children are not required to have birth certificates and uniforms to attend school, those who lack these items are often turned away by school authorities.(56) Additionally, some children, especially girls, are reported to be sexually assaulted and harassed by teachers or classmates.(56, 58) Moreover, the shortage of classrooms, overcrowding in urban schools, and poor educational infrastructure, particularly in rural areas, severely limits access to education for many children.(2, 26, 59)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ghana has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

* No conscription (69)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (55)

On November 11, 2015, a legislative instrument necessary to implement the Human Trafficking Act entered into force that establishes care centers and social services provisions for child victims of human trafficking.(17, 64) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover lake fishing, an area of work where there is evidence of children working underwater, for long hours, and at night.(60, 62) Although Ghana has two Hazardous Activities Frameworks which include additional types of hazardous activities prohibited to children, neither is considered a legal instrument and no penalties can be imposed for violations of the activities listed in the Frameworks.(70) Additionally, Ghana's laws do not criminally prohibit the use of a child in pornographic performances, or an individual benefiting from the proceeds of child pornography.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR)	Enforce all labor laws and oversee child protection committees at the district level.(10, 26, 56, 71) Implement the Ghana Child Labor Monitoring System (GCLMS) through the National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC).(6, 26, 55, 72-74)
District Assembly's District Social Welfare Officer and Social Services Subcommittee	Ensure that child labor laws are enforced, perform spot checks at workplaces, and investigate child labor violations in the informal sector. Provide employers with information on how to comply with child labor laws.(2, 56, 75)

Ghana

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Organization/Agency	Role
Ghana Police Service (GPS)	Make arrest, conduct investigations, and prosecute cases related to the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking. Enforce anti-trafficking laws through the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) of the Criminal Investigation Division, which leads the Government's efforts to implement the 2005 Human Trafficking Act throughout Ghana.(10, 39, 41, 55, 76) Provide support services to victims, such as repatriation and reintegration services, operate a 24/7 phone line for reporting crimes, and maintain a Web site to promote awareness about human trafficking.(12, 39, 51, 55) The Domestic Violence and Victims Support Unit, which also operates throughout Ghana, works with the AHTU to investigate cases of child trafficking.(39, 47, 55)
Economic and Organized Crime Office's Human Trafficking Unit	Share responsibility with the GPS's AHTU for investigating and prosecuting cases of human trafficking. Recover proceeds of human trafficking and provide ongoing training on preventing human trafficking.(39)
Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute child labor and child trafficking crimes.(55, 76)
Minerals Commission	Inspect unlicensed mining sites, identify cases of child labor, and conduct awareness-raising activities on Ghana's legal framework in the mining sector in parallel with criminal law enforcement agencies.(26)
Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Protection (MOGCSP)	Protect women and children's rights; ensure compliance with international standards in relation to gender, children, and social protection.(77) In the case of the MOGCSP's Department for Social Welfare (DSW), operate shelters for vulnerable children, administer juvenile justice, and implement cross-sectoral programs on social protection to combat child labor, including the Livelihood Empowerment Against Poverty (LEAP) cash transfer program.(18, 77, 78) In the case of the MOGCSP's Human Trafficking Secretariat, oversee the creation, implementation, and review of Ghana's human trafficking policies and ensure proper monitoring, evaluation, and data collection.(39, 55)
Ghana Immigration Service	Maintain a desk at headquarters in Accra, as well as 10 regional desks throughout the country, each staffed with 10–15 officers who work on human trafficking cases. Conduct regular internal trainings on trafficking issues, which includes institutionalized training on human trafficking at its training academy.(39)
MOGCSP Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs)	Participate in the GCLMS to monitor, prevent, and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor in cocoa, as well as other sectors, in more than 600 communities nationwide as part of the Child and Family Welfare Policy.(17, 38, 55, 57) Report cases to the GPS, DSW, or traditional authorities, who work with the police to launch investigations.(26, 55, 71)

Although the Attorney General's office is responsible for prosecuting child trafficking violations, in practice it is left to the prosecutors of the Ghana Police Service (GPS), who have no formal legal training. Additionally, coordination among the agencies responsible for enforcing child labor laws is weak.(55, 76)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Ghana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The labor inspectorate does not receive dedicated funding to conduct inspections, and research indicated that resources dedicated to combating child labor are generally insufficient.(26, 55, 56) According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Ghana should employ roughly 751 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(81-83) The Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR) acknowledges that the current number of labor inspectors is insufficient.(26, 55) Additionally, not all new inspectors received training on laws related to child labor and enforcement during the reporting period.(55) Additional training is needed to support improved communication, including the use of basic information technology, effective labor inspections, enhanced understanding of labor laws, and improved report writing.(17, 18) Research indicates that few cases of child labor violations are reported, and even fewer cases result in prosecution because judges, police, and labor officials are sometimes unfamiliar with the provisions of the laws that protect children.(55, 56, 84) In addition, it is not known how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of calls made to the GPS's 24/7 hotline.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ghana took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

During the reporting period, the GPS's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) employed approximately 102 investigators. This number is insufficient to allow the AHTU to carry out its mandate.(47, 55, 84) The Government did not provide an operating budget to the law enforcement agencies responsible for anti-human trafficking issues during the reporting period.(39, 76) As a result, the AHTU primarily relied on foreign donors and NGOs to support its enforcement efforts.(39, 55) For the fifth consecutive year, the Government did not provide prosecutors with training on human trafficking issues, despite acknowledging the need for such training.(39) Additionally, the Government considers cases to be in prosecution when the initial investigation has concluded. Thus, prosecutions may refer to instances in which a suspect is not in custody and the case is not actively being tried.(79)

Data related to human trafficking are not collected systemically, and information is often not conveyed from regional offices to the headquarters in Accra.(39) Poor coordination among law enforcement agencies also hindered the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking.(39) During the reporting period, law enforcement, in cooperation with NGOs and international organizations, rescued an unknown number of victims of child trafficking from Lake Volta. These child trafficking victims had been engaged in forced labor in fishing and domestic work.(76, 87, 88) The Domestic Violence and Victims Support Unit and the AHTU work together to refer victims of child trafficking to social services providers. However, there is no referral system for the victims of other worst forms of child labor.(79)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL)	Oversee coordination, implementation, and monitoring of the National Plan of Action (NPA) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, including reviewing and endorsing project proposals and supporting the implementation of the GCLMS.(39, 55, 74, 89-91) The GCLMS is a coordinated government approach to combat child labor by identifying, preventing, and protecting children engaged in child labor, and referring victims to social services providers. In addition, the GCLMS collects data related to child labor and uses this information to inform laws and policies.(39, 74) The NSCCL is led by the MELR's Child Labor Unit (CLU) and includes three subcommittees: (1) Policy Advisory, Education, and Skills Training; (2) Advocacy, Social Mobilization, and Child Labor Monitoring; and (3) Cocoa, Fisheries, and Mining and Quarrying.(2, 10, 39, 55, 74, 91, 92) Other members include representatives from the ministries of the Interior, Food and Agriculture, Education, Local Government and Rural Development, Women and Children's Affairs, and Employment and Social Welfare; employers' and workers' organizations; NGOs; the Ghana Cocoa Board; and international organizations.(55, 74, 92) In 2015, drafted a new NPA for 2016–2020, which is awaiting validation from a technical working group before being formally adopted.(17)
MELR's CLU	Coordinate child labor issues and provide technical support to ministries, departments and agencies, employers' and workers' organizations, and international agencies such as the ILO, IOM, and UNICEF.(2, 55, 75) In 2015, developed a child labor survey.(26)
Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB)	Meet quarterly and includes representatives from the police, immigration officials, local government, ministries of Health and Education, NGOs, and a parliamentarian, among others. Chaired by the MOGCSP's Human Trafficking Secretariat.(39, 55, 76) Advise the MOGCSP on human trafficking policy; rehabilitate and re-integrate victims; and oversee the Human Trafficking Fund, which provides financial support to victims, including children.(39, 55, 63, 64) In 2015, submitted the final draft of the legislative instrument for implementing the Human Trafficking Act to Parliament. The legislative instrument went into effect during the reporting period.(17, 76)
National Partners Forum	Discuss and coordinate interventions to address the worst forms of child labor in the cocoa sector.(55) Convened by NPECLC and comprised of district assemblies, NGOs, trade unions, and civil society organizations. Members are required to submit quarterly reports to NPECLC.(55)

In 2015, the NSCCL met three times and the HTMB met twice. However, research was unable to determine whether the National Partners Forum met.(17, 76, 79, 93) Additionally, it is not known how much funding the CLU received during the reporting period, although research indicates that it was insufficient to carry out all planned activities.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ghana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action (NPA) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2009–2015)	Provided a comprehensive framework to significantly reduce the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and identified specific roles for various ministries, NGOs, and civil society.(2, 55, 75) Aimed to reduce all forms of child labor but prioritized nine key sectors: child trafficking, trokosi , mining and quarrying, fishing, commercial sexual exploitation, kayayes and carrying heavy loads, agriculture, domestic work, and street vending.(84) Helped coordinate 23 institutions and government agencies to combat child labor through data collection and analysis.(6, 94) Led by the CLU under the supervision of the NSCCL.(55) In 2015, reviewed complaint and response mechanisms among responsible agencies for inclusion in standard operating procedures.(17)
Hazardous Child Labor Activity Frameworks	Created by working groups and includes both the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Framework and the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Framework for the Cocoa Sector. Both frameworks were developed in consultation with workers' and employers' organizations and prohibit hazardous activities for children.(95, 96)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor, Especially the Worst Forms (2013–2015)	Aimed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 through the implementation of a regional action plan with 14 other ECOWAS countries.(97) Ghana did not participate in any activities under this policy in 2015.(79)

Policy	Description
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Joint declaration by the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, and the United States, and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry.(89, 98, 99) Provides resources and coordinates with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(98, 99) Ensures that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Framework align with Ghana's national action plans in order to promote coherence and sustainability.(89, 98, 99)
Ministry of Food and Agriculture's Child Labor Strategic Plan (2013–2015)	Aimed to improve coordination and monitored implementation of efforts to address child labor in agriculture, including in the cocoa and fishing subsectors, by 2015. Worked with farmers and fishermen to increase their livelihoods and their awareness of child labor.(100, 101)
Child and Family Welfare Policy†	Aims to strengthen social protection for children, improve interministerial coordination, and empower youth.(26, 47, 55) Led by the MOGCSP, this policy formalizes the referral of child protection cases, including the worst forms of child labor, between the police and the Social Welfare and Community Development Department.(47)
UNDAF Action Plan (2012–2016)	Aims to provide education or vocational training opportunities to 5,000 children ages 5 to 17 who have been withdrawn or are prevented from engaging in child labor.(102)
Education Strategic Plan (2003–2015)*	Sought to improve access to and the quality of education by 2015, particularly at the primary level, by increasing opportunities for out-of-school and hard-to-reach children, providing scholarships to needy students, and improving education infrastructure.(103)
Free Compulsory Universal Basic Education (F-CUBE)*	Aims to enable all children in Ghana to attend primary school by improving educational quality, improving access to education, raising the enrollment of hard-to-reach and out-of-school children, and increasing the management efficiency of the education sector.(18, 103)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, overlapping objectives and poor coordination hindered the effective implementation of policies.(20, 78) There were no formal activities conducted under the ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in 2015, but the Government of Ghana continued to share its anti-human trafficking efforts with other ECOWAS states.(39) Although the Government of Ghana conducted awareness-raising activities in support of the NPA, the Government did not allocate any funding to these activities.(39, 55) A lack of resources and personnel continue to limit full implementation of the NPA, and children remain at risk for hazardous labor.(55)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Ghana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Towards Child Labor Free Cocoa Growing Communities in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana Through an Integrated Area-Based Approach (2010–2015)	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO. In support of the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol aimed at reducing the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana by providing direct services to communities.(99, 104) In Ghana, worked with the Government to develop and implement community action plans, improve educational outcomes, and support the GCLMS in cocoa-growing areas.(90, 105) In 2015, launched the Occupational Health, Safety, and Environment Manual and Child Labor Strategic Document, which includes modules on hazardous child labor in cocoa and child protection.(106) By the end of the project in 2015, withdrew and prevented 2,682 children from child labor situations and provided livelihood assistance to 1,200 households in Ghana.(107)
Survey on Child Labor in West African Cocoa-Growing Areas (2012–2015)	$1.9 million USDOL-funded, 3-year research project implemented by the Payson Center for International Development at Tulane University. Supported the collection of nationally representative survey data on child labor in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana to assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas.(13, 89, 108) Coordinated with the Government and worked with statistical experts from Ghana to build the country's capacity to implement future child labor surveys.(89) Conducted a nationally representative survey in the cocoa sector during the 2013–2014 harvest season.(13)
Assessing Progress in Reducing Child Labor in Cocoa-Growing Areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana (2015–2019)*	$3 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by NORC at the University of Chicago. Evaluates and measures progress to reduce child labor in the cocoa sectors of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana.(109) Includes a mapping of stakeholder interventions to reduce child labor in the cocoa sector, an assessment of the effectiveness of funded efforts to reduce child labor, and a survey of the incidence of child labor in cocoa-growing areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana in the 2018–2019 growing season.(109, 110)

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues*	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(111, 112) In 2015, completed an initial review of policies and programs combating child labor.(111)
Mobilizing Community Action and Promoting Opportunities for Youth in Ghana's Cocoa-Growing Communities (MOCA) (2015–2019)*	$4.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Winrock International. In support of the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol, will work with communities in Ghana to develop community action plans to address child labor in cocoa-growing areas, provide households with livelihood assistance and occupational safety and health training, and provide at-risk youth with marketable job skills.(113, 114)
Convening Stakeholders to Develop and Implement Strategies to Reduce Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Artisanal and Small-Scale Gold Mining (COSTREC-ASGM) (2015–2019)*	$5 million USDOL funded, 3.5-year project implemented by the ILO that aims to support efforts to reduce child labor and improve working conditions in artisanal and small-scale gold mining (ASGM) in Ghana and the Philippines. The project will support efforts to (1) implement laws, policies, and action plans to address child labor and working conditions in ASGM; (2) increase the access of ASGM communities to livelihood and social protection programs; and (3) develop tools to increase transparency and monitoring of child labor and working conditions in gold mining supply chains.(115)
Child Protection Compact Partnership (2015–2020)*	$5 million, 4-year partnership signed by the Government of Ghana and USDOS that aims to reduce child trafficking through improved coordination, prevention, prosecution, and protection for victims.(55, 116, 117) As part of the partnership, IOM and local NGO Free the Slaves will work with the Government to establish referral mechanisms for victims and build the capacity of law enforcement and community members to identify and prevent cases of child trafficking, improve protections for victims, and prosecute human traffickers.(55, 76, 117, 118)
Sustainable Fisheries Management Project (2014–2019)	$24 million USAID-funded, 5-year project to rebuild marine fisheries stocks, encourage the adoption of responsible fishing practices, and reduce the incidence of child labor in fishing and child trafficking in the Central Region of Ghana.(119)
Partnership for Education: Learning Activity (2015–2020)*	$71 million USAID-funded, 5-year project that aims to improve reading performance among primary school students in English and local languages. Targeting 2.8 million children in kindergarten through third grade.(120)
National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC)†	MELR program that oversees interventions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor at the community level by enabling communities to identify, report on, withdraw, and coordinate services for children in exploitative labor through the GCLMS.(26, 55, 72, 73) NPECLC raises awareness of child labor issues in cocoa-growing communities, increases access to education, builds the institutional capacity of organizations combating child labor, and strengthens legal protections for child workers as part of the NPA.(18, 71, 121, 122)
Ghana Cocoa Board (COCOBOD)	Government body that aims to promote the production, processing, and marketing of quality cocoa, coffee, and shea nut products.(123, 124) Supports access to education by building secondary schools and providing scholarships for the children of cocoa farmers.(123) The Ministry of Finance oversees the Board of Directors, which includes representatives from other Government ministries, industry partners, and farmers' associations.(125)
CocoaAction (2014–2016)	$400 million World Cocoa Foundation-funded project, in collaboration with the Ministry of Finance through COCOBOD. Aims to increase sustainability within the cocoa sector and to improve the livelihoods of 300,000 farmers in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana through increased productivity and improved agricultural practices.(126–129) Includes six pillars, one of which aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor and increase access to basic education for children in cocoa-growing areas.(126, 128)
Ferrero Cocoa Community Commitment (F3C) (2012–2015)	$1.14 million Ferrero Trading LUX S.A.-funded, 4-year project that provided training on GCLMS and trained farmers on improved farming techniques.(89, 130) In support of the 2010 Declaration, collaborated with NPECLC to reduce the prevalence of child labor in Ghana's cocoa-growing areas, including by improving children's access to education and increasing household incomes.(89, 98, 99) By the end of the project in December 2015, assisted NPECLC to establish the GCLMS in 162 new communities and established 8 village resource centers at schools.(130)
Cocoa Life (2008–2018)	$1.55 million Mondelēz International-funded, 10-year project that aims to combat the worst forms of child labor at the community level in a sustainable and systematic manner.(89, 131, 132) In support of the 2010 Declaration, collaborates with the MOGCSP to implement the NPA and reduce the prevalence of child labor in Ghana's cocoa-growing areas.(89, 98, 99, 132) In 2015, trained 218 Community Gender and Child Protection Committee members on child labor, human trafficking, and gender and child protection issues. Also conducted awareness raising on child labor issues in 209 cocoa-growing communities.(132)

Program	Description
Empowering Cocoa Households with Opportunities and Education Solutions (2007–2015)	World Cocoa Foundation, USAID, and the International Chocolate and Cocoa Industry project implemented by World Education and Winrock International that strengthened cocoa-growing communities by providing educational opportunities for youth and young adults, empowered community-based organizations, and improved household livelihoods.(133)
Anti-Human Trafficking Project (2014–2016)	French Ministry of Foreign Affairs-funded, 3-year project to fight human trafficking in the Gulf of Guinea; implemented locally by Plan Ghana.(40) Provides training to civil society organizations and shelters on issues related to human trafficking, including methods to deliver psychosocial support to victims of human trafficking and advocacy. Aims to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials to investigate and prosecute crimes.(40, 134)
Livelihoods Empowerment Against Poverty (LEAP)†	MOGCSP-administered conditional cash transfer program that provides monetary grants to poor households with orphans and vulnerable children on the condition that children attend school, receive vaccinations, and regularly visit health care facilities. An original provision that children do not engage in child labor in order to receive benefits was removed in 2012.(18, 26, 75, 84, 135)
Programs to Assist Kayayes †	DSW program, with the support of community-based organizations, that provides rehabilitation and reintegration facilities for kayayes . The Women's Development Fund provides microcredit and income-generating activities for the mothers of kayayes .(28)
Educational Programs†	Ministry of Education-funded programs under F-CUBE that aim to increase school attendance and enrollment.(18, 84, 103) The Ghana School Feeding Program, ongoing since 2005, aims to reduce malnutrition and improve attendance among students in selected schools by providing one hot and nutritious meal per school day.(2, 18, 56, 75, 135, 136) The Capitation Grant Scheme pays school fees for all students attending public primary schools.(2, 18, 56, 75, 135, 136) The Ghana Education Service, under the Ministry of Education, places girls' education officers at the regional and district levels, and mobilizes communities to enroll more girls in school.(56) Free school uniforms and exercise books are provided to students in districts with poor enrollment rates; about 400,000 uniforms are distributed every year.(56, 135)
Millennium Villages	Program that seeks to achieve the UN Millennium Development Goals by increasing universal primary education, improving access to health care and sanitation services, and providing livelihood assistance to agricultural families. Established early childhood education centers in villages with no primary schools.(137)
Child Labor Global Phase II (2014–2015)	$799,000 Irish Aid-funded, 2-year project that developed a mobile app using the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Frameworks from Zambia.(138)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Ghana.

Government shelters are in a state of extreme disrepair, have limited space, are understaffed, and lack adequate security.(10, 12, 39, 40, 55, 134) The Madina shelter in the greater Accra area has been closed since 2013.(79) Another Department for Social Welfare (DSW)-operated shelter for trafficking victims in Accra shares its space with a detention center for juvenile offenders, which presents safety concerns for victims of child trafficking.(39) Although the Government paid the salaries of employees at the shelters for trafficking victims, it has not allocated any funding for operational costs since 2005. Victims are dependent upon NGOs, religious groups, and international organizations to provide the majority of services, including food, clothing, and general care.(39, 76) In addition, the Government failed to allocate funding to the Human Trafficking Fund for victim support as required by the 2005 Human Trafficking Act and its 2015 legislative instrument.(39)

The Government of Ghana also failed to allocate any funding to the National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC) in 2015.(93) In the past, funding for NPECLC has represented the core of the Government of Ghana's resource commitment under the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol.(89) Due to the lack of funding, NPECLC did not conduct any activities during the reporting period. Its only remaining staff member was not paid from June to December 2015 and stopped working for NPECLC in January 2016.(55, 93) In addition, the CLU; the AHTU; MGCSP; and local NGOs cite lack of funding as one of the primary obstacles in implementing programs to address child labor, including its worst forms.(39, 55)

Although the Government has worked closely with industry, NGOs, and international organizations to implement child labor programs in cocoa, fishing, and mining, the magnitude of these programs remains insufficient to address the scope of the problem.(55) In addition, research found no evidence of programs to assist children involved in commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor in domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ghana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit the use of children in all illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2015
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit all forms of commercial sexual exploitation of children, including the use of a child in pornographic performances and individuals benefiting from the proceeds of child pornography.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that only prosecutors who have received formal legal training prosecute cases of the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking violations.	2015
	Ensure that the agencies responsible for child labor laws coordinate effectively.	2015
	Ensure that labor inspectorates and criminal law enforcement are allocated funding to conduct inspections and investigations, and make the labor inspectorate's funding level publicly available.	2009 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating targeted inspections based on analysis of data related to risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents, and authorize inspectors to assess penalties for labor violations.	2014 – 2015
	Make statistics regarding the enforcement of child labor laws publicly available, including the number of violations found and penalties imposed and collected.	2010 – 2015
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors and investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor, including its worst forms, in accordance with the ILO's recommendation.	2010 – 2015
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors, including by training new inspectors and investigators at the beginning of their employment, and providing refresher courses on relevant topics such as using basic information technology, effectively carrying out labor inspections, interpreting labor laws, and improving report writing skills. Provide periodic training for other law enforcement personnel and prosecutors to ensure that they are familiar with the provisions of the laws that protect children.	2013 – 2015
	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social services providers.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that all coordinating bodies, such as the National Partners Forum and CLU, receive adequate funding to convene on a regular basis and fulfill their respective coordinating roles.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2015
	Improve policy implementation by clarifying objectives, improving coordination, and allocating adequate resources so that policies may be fully implemented.	2015
Social Programs	Improve access to education by eliminating school-related fees, permitting children without birth certificates or uniforms to attend class, increasing the number of classrooms, improving school infrastructure, and prohibiting sexual harassment in schools.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the Human Trafficking Fund receives sufficient funding to provide adequate services for victims of human trafficking, including secure shelter space, general care, and trained staff.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the Government of Ghana provides adequate resources to meet its commitments under the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol, including by allocating funding to NPECLC.	2015
	Create, replicate, and/or expand effective models for addressing exploitative child labor, including in the cocoa sector, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced domestic work.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. 81. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
82. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited January 19, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country’s total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
83. UN. “World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex.” (2012); http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Grenada made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased funding for school transportation and textbooks, and it doubled funding for the Needy Assistance Program; both actions support students from low-income families. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Grenada, but there has not been a recent study of child labor to confirm this. Additionally, the Government's ability to prevent children from becoming engaged in exploitive work is limited due to a lack of prohibitions against children's involvement in hazardous work and illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Grenada.(1) According to the Education Act, public education is free and all children are required to attend school until age 16. However, in practice, some school boards deny access to pregnant girls and teenage mothers.(2, 3)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Grenada has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 32 of the Employment Act (4)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 25 of the Employment Act; Article 4 of the Constitution; Articles 9–11 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (4-6)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 9-11 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (6)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 137 and 188 of the Criminal Code; Article 12 of the Electronic Crimes Bill; Article 10 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (6-9)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 2 and 15 of the Education Act (3)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 15–16 of the Education Act (3)

† No standing military (10)

Article 32 of the Employment Act allows holiday employment for children under age 16, but it does not specify the minimum age, types of work, or number of hours permitted for such work.(4, 11) The Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act does not sufficiently prohibit the trafficking of children, despite establishing heightened penalties for traffickers of children, because it requires the use of force, threats abuse of power, or other forms of coercion to carry out the offense.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including in its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce laws related to child labor.(1, 9)
Royal Grenada Police Force	Investigate crimes and enforce laws related to child labor. Help the Child Protection Agency and the Ministry of Social Development and Housing provide emergency services to children.(1, 9)
Ministry of Legal Affairs	Prosecute criminal cases of child abuse in consultation with the Child Protection Agency.(12)
Child Protection Agency	Enforce laws related to child labor by receiving and investigating reports of child abuse. Provide social and protective services to abused children, including by requesting court emergency protection orders.(1, 9, 12, 13)
Ministry of Social Development and Housing	Oversee the Child Abuse Hotline and investigate reports of child abuse. Refer child abuse cases to the Child Protection Agency and criminal cases to the police.(12) Enforce laws related to school attendance and provide programs to support school attendance.(1, 9, 14)
Ministry of Education	Enforce laws related to school attendance through employment of truancy officers. Combat student absenteeism by monitoring students' attendance and facilitating students' access school transportation and meals.(1, 9, 14)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Grenada took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor had a budget of approximately $280,000 to carry out all activities during the reporting period, including labor inspections. While labor law enforcement agencies have sufficient resources to respond to reports of child labor, these agencies are typically underfunded and lack the staff and resources needed to fully realize their missions.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Grenada did not take actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	No (1)	No (1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government has policies that may contribute to the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Abuse Protocol	Implements and strengthens the Child Protection and Adoption Act of 2011. Includes guidelines on areas such as coordination of government efforts related to the protection of children, investigations, and referrals to appropriate social services for victims of child labor, including its worst forms.(9, 15)
Child Abuse Reporting Guidelines	Requires health care employees to report cases of child abuse.(9)
Poverty Reduction Strategy (2014–2018)	Supports increased access to education for persons with disabilities, repairing and upgrading school facilities, and providing educational materials and school meals to children.(9, 16)
Strategic Plan for Educational Enhancement and Development	Aims to increase access to primary and secondary school, including for at-risk children; support children with special needs; and reintegrate dropouts and adolescent mothers into the education system.(17)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, there is no current research on whether the worst forms of child labor exist in Grenada.(1) In 2015, the Government of Grenada funded programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Support for Education Empowerment and Development Program†	Ministry of Education and Ministry of Social Development and Housing program funded by the Government and a World Bank loan that provides lunch, transportation, textbooks, and uniforms to students.(2, 14)
School Feeding Programs† (1992–2015)	Government program that provides subsidized lunches to students in 21 preschools, 55 primary schools, and 11 secondary schools. Waives lunch fee for students who cannot afford to pay.(2, 15, 18, 19)
Uniform and Transportation Allowance†	Government program that covers the costs of uniforms, textbooks, and transportation to schools for students from low-income families. Funding increased for transportation and textbooks in 2015.(1, 15)
Needy Assistance Program†	Government program that provides temporary aid including tuition, medical and transportation assistance, and school items such as book bags and shoes, until recipients can be referred to long-term assistance programs. Funding doubled from approximately $185,185 to $370,370 in 2015.(1, 2)

Although the Government of Grenada increased funding for social programs to assist school-age children in 2015, these programs are insufficient to fully address student need. Moreover, the Government has also noted that it lacks the resources necessary to further expand aid.(1)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would continue the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Grenada (Table 8).

Table 8. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish specific provisions prohibiting hazardous work for children.	2009 – 2015
	Prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including drug production and trafficking.	2011 – 2015
	Establish minimum age requirements for holiday employment and define the activities, conditions, and number of hours permissible for such work.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure the law sanctions all perpetrators of child trafficking, including where there is no showing of force, threats, or coercion.	2015
Enforcement	Allow all children to enroll in primary and secondary school education and complete their schooling.	2015
	Provide sufficient funding and resources to allow agencies responsible for the enforcement of labor laws to fulfill their mission.	2015
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
	Ensure that investigators receive training related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine whether any of the worst forms of child labor exist in Grenada.	2009 – 2015
	Expand existing social programs to increase assistance for students, in particular for adolescent girls in secondary school.	2015

Guatemala

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Guatemala made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government strengthened legal protections for children by increasing penalties for the human trafficking of minors in the Migration Law.

The Ministry of Labor and Social Security increased training for labor inspectors, published a labor inspection protocol, and began drafting the 2016–2018 Action Plan to Make Guatemala Free From the Worst Forms of Child Labor. The Departmental Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor developed, and received training on, guidance, procedures, and a sustainability plan for members. The Government published national child labor data and launched a program to assist children engaged in garbage scavenging. However, children in Guatemala are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The labor inspectorate's lack of resources and inability to assess fines, coupled with inadequate judicial enforcement of court orders, limit the Government's capacity to combat the worst forms of child labor. Existing social programs are insufficient to reach all children engaged in exploitative labor and, in particular, do not target children working in domestic service or agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guatemala are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guatemala.

In April 2015, the Government of Guatemala published the 2014 National Survey of Employment and Earnings (ENEI), which included an analysis of child labor in the country. According to the 2014 ENEI, approximately 71 percent of child labor in Guatemala occurs among males and nearly 65 percent of all child labor is found in the agricultural sector.(1)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Approximately 40 percent of Guatemalans belong to three ethnic groups representing more than 26 linguistic communities, among which the majority are indigenous.(26, 27) Government data indicate that 57.9 percent of working children in Guatemala are of indigenous heritage.(1) Indigenous Guatemalans, including children, are particularly vulnerable to labor trafficking and often travel to the Mexican border region of Guatemala to work, sometimes as a stop before migrating farther north.(3, 20, 28, 29)

In 2015, Guatemala, like Honduras and El Salvador, continued to be a principal source of the high numbers of unaccompanied children from Central America that were found migrating to the United States.(30-32) Such children often lack economic and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and recruitment by gangs into illicit activities such as committing homicides and drug trafficking.(33, 34) Gangs in Guatemala, including transnational criminal organizations, use children to commit illegal acts such as stealing and transporting contraband; gangs recruit near educational centers, and some of these children are reported to be victims of human trafficking.(4, 12, 17, 20) Children often emigrate to escape such violence and once en route, they are also vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(25, 35, 36)

Reports indicate that children in Guatemala are victims of commercial sexual exploitation in the tourist areas of Antigua, Puerto Barrios, Rio Dulce, Lake Atitlan communities, Peten, and Guatemala City.(37)

In the last several decades, the Government has improved access to education for children, but many significant challenges still remain, particularly for children in rural areas and for girls.(12) Studies by the Ministry of Education and the Human Rights Ombudsman's Office indicate that girls have lower participation rates in elementary school than boys and that indigenous children receive less years of schooling than non-indigenous children.(5) In the Western Highlands, indigenous children only complete an average of 5.6 years of school. There are not enough qualified teachers throughout the country who can speak and teach in children's native languages, nor are sufficient classroom materials available in these languages.(38)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guatemala has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 74 of the Constitution (2, 40, 49, 50)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 74 of the Constitution; Article 1 of Government Agreement 226-2008 (40, 46, 51)

Guatemala's Constitution establishes compulsory education for all children through grade 9. The Ministry of Education expects most children to enter first grade by age 7.(40, 50) Therefore, most children are required to be in school until age 15.

In November 2015, Congress enacted legislation modifying the Migration Law to broaden the definition of human trafficking and include more severe penalties for the human trafficking of minors.(47)

Although Articles 32 and 150 of the Labor Code allow the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS) to authorize children under age 14 to work under exceptional circumstances, including if the MTPS determines that children must work to support their family due to poverty, the law does not define the total number of hours, kinds of tasks, or age range applicable for this exception which is inconsistent with international standards on light work.(39) The President's Office and the MTPS have an agreement reiterating the Labor Code's prohibition of the employment of children under the age of 14 and committing the MTPS to grant exceptions only in very extraordinary cases and the MTPS did not approve any requests for exceptions during the reporting period.(2, 41)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security's (MTPS) Inspection Division (IGT)	Enforce child labor laws, including prohibitions on the worst forms of child labor, by inspecting businesses and responding to child labor complaints.(2) Refer children to government social services and complaints to the MTPS Adolescent Workers Protection Unit.(52-55) Establish deadlines for employers to remedy violations and refer unresolved cases to labor courts for review and sanctions, as appropriate.(14, 39)
Secretariat of Social Welfare and Departmental Social Welfare Offices	Lead government efforts to protect children and oversee the implementation of the Protocol for Identifying and Assisting Child and Adolescent Victims of Commercial Sexual Exploitation.(56) Departmental Social Welfare Offices coordinate services for children outside of Guatemala City.(54)
Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET)	Assist child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. Receive cases involving human trafficking or forced labor from the IGT and refer them to the Public Ministry's Public Prosecutor's Office. (2) Provide trainings to law enforcement agencies and businesses on indicators of human trafficking and strategies for preventing the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(3)
National Civil Police	Maintain Trafficking in Persons and Forced Labor Unit located within the Special Investigation Police, and a hotline to receive reports of suspected child trafficking cases. Investigate cases of child trafficking.(15, 17, 36)
Public Ministry, Public Prosecutors' Office	Receive case referrals involving the worst forms of child labor from labor inspectors.(2) Investigate cases of human trafficking and forced labor through the Special Prosecutor's Office against Human Trafficking. Prosecute crimes against minors not involved in human trafficking through the Special Prosecutor's Office for Children.(2)
Human Rights Ombudsman	Receive complaints regarding child victims of human trafficking.(35)
Solicitor General's Office	Receive complaints regarding the exploitation of children. Initiate legal proceedings to protect children in cases of violation of criminal law and ensure the legal representation of children whose rights have been violated.(21, 35, 36) Maintain a Child Rescue Unit that assesses the risk of children whose rights have been violated, including making determinations on whether children should remain with family members and requesting appropriate protection measures.(21)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Guatemala took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Guatemala should employ roughly 313 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(59-61) In 2015, the Government of Guatemala suffered budget shortfalls and less than 4 percent of the MTPS's budget was allocated for carrying out labor inspections. Inspectors, especially outside of Guatemala City, lacked the necessary resources, such as vehicles and fuel, to carry out inspections; the Government also indicated that the inspectorate lacked up-to-date computers and Internet connections.(2, 4, 8, 15, 62-64)

Although labor inspectors may conduct unannounced inspections, the MTPS holds press conferences announcing the sectors it will target, after which these sectors undergo random inspections.(15) There are reports that question the quality of child labor inspections, particularly the scope and coverage across industries.(15) Although laws governing the minimum age for work and hazardous work apply in both the formal and informal sectors, labor inspectors rarely inspect informal workplaces where child labor violations are most likely to occur.(2) The MTPS increased training for labor inspectors on child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking and published a labor inspection protocol that standardizes training and procedures across the ministry, including specific procedures for cases of child labor and human trafficking.(2, 3, 64)

The MTPS cannot directly impose fines for labor law violations and must transfer cases of violations to the labor courts for their review and sanction, as appropriate. This leads to significant delays in penalizing employers for labor law violations. (15, 54, 65) Furthermore, the ILO has noted that the number of child labor violations forwarded to labor courts is inadequate given the size of the problem.(2, 66) In cases in which the courts impose sanctions, including remediation for labor violations, court orders are often not enforced.(67)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guatemala took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In March 2015, the Human Rights Ombudsman published a report containing statistics on the number of human trafficking complaints received by the Human Rights Ombudsman and the Public Ministry in 2014.(2, 68) In April 2015, the National Civil Police hired 20 officers trained in cybercrimes, and the Public Prosecutors' Office of the Public Ministry provided training on investigating and gathering evidence of cybercrimes to its Special Prosecutor's Office against Human Trafficking. Subsequently, the Public Prosecutors' Office of the Public Ministry and the National Civil Police initiated the Government of Guatemala's first significant action to combat online child pornography by raiding two distribution centers of a child pornography ring in June 2015.(3) Although the Special Prosecutor's Office against Human Trafficking received three new vehicles and 10 additional assistant prosecutors in 2015, and some reports indicate the quality of investigations may be improving, law enforcement agencies still lack sufficient training and resources, including investigators and staff, to effectively enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, particularly outside of Guatemala City.(2, 15, 21, 36) The Government has established specialized courts to hear cases of human trafficking and gender-based violence, however prosecutors generally note that judges are often unable to schedule hearings and trials in a timely manner.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAPETI)	Coordinate government policies and efforts to combat child labor.(2) Led by the Vice President's Office and composed of several government ministries, including the MTPS and the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES), as well as representatives from industry associations and trade unions. (14, 69) In 2015, CONAPETI met six times, compared to twice in 2014, and its technical level secretariat continued to meet on a monthly basis.(2)
Departmental Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor at the departmental or regional level. Composed of department-level representatives of CONAPETI member agencies as well as NGO and business representatives.(2, 15) Active in 14 of 22 departments. Replaced the Labor Ministry Executive Secretariats.(2) In 2015, held awareness-raising events for vulnerable populations in four departments; a series of workshops for members to develop a conceptual guide, attention protocol, and sustainability plan to advance efforts to eliminate child labor; and six follow-up trainings on implementing these new guidelines.(2) Also developed guidance to assist municipalities in collecting and analyzing data on child labor.(2)
Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET)	Coordinate all government efforts against human trafficking, including for commercial sexual exploitation of children and forced child labor. Operate under the auspices of the Vice President's Office.(35, 36) Establish and oversee networks in all departments that respond to human trafficking cases and provide support for victims.(37) In 2015, SVET provided human trafficking prevention training to 2,405 individuals, including 17 businesses and three government agencies.(3)
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Trafficking	Develop and manage initiatives to combat human trafficking. Coordinated by SVET and co-chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; include 28 government and civil society institutions.(21, 35, 36)

Although there have been improvements in interagency coordination, Guatemala continues to lack effective coordination among government institutions and civil society actors who provide services and protection to child victims of child labor.(4, 15, 21)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guatemala has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala (2013–2015)	Aimed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Guatemala by 2015 and integrate child labor issues into anti-poverty, education, and health programs. Called for legal reform to remove exceptions to the minimum age in the Labor Code.(65)
Action Plan to Make Guatemala Free From the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2015)	Specified actions for government agencies to implement the Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala. Included three advisers in Guatemala City and one in each departmental capital.(15) In September 2015, the MTPS began drafting the 2016–2018 Action Plan to Make Guatemala Free From the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(2)
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Guatemala participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(70, 71) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(70, 72)
Intra-Institutional Coordination Protocol to Assist Child Laborers	Sets guidelines for MTPS inspectors to identify child laborers, remove children from the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate services for such children with other government agencies.(43)
Protocol for Providing Comprehensive Health Care to Children and Adolescents in the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Requires public health workers to enter information about any child whose injuries may have been labor related into a database. Implemented by the Ministry of Public Health and Social Assistance.(14, 73)

Guatemala

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Guatemala at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(74-76)
Urban Social Protection Strategy	Seeks to prevent children from engaging in street work and to increase training and employment opportunities for youth.(14)
Protocol for Identifying and Assisting Child and Adolescent Victims of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Establishes procedural guidelines for government agencies and NGOs responsible for the protection and care of child and adolescent victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Overseen by the Secretariat of Social Welfare and Departmental Social Welfare Offices and implemented by SVET.(2, 56)
Public Policy on Human Trafficking and the Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2014–2024)	Includes a National Plan of Strategic Action that directs the Government's actions on preventing and combating human trafficking.(21) Replaces the Public Policy on Human Trafficking and the Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2007–2017). Plan includes the creation of SVET-run TIP shelters.(15, 37)
Central American Regional Coalition to Combat Human Trafficking	Aims to improve Government and civil society efforts to combat human trafficking in Central America. Includes the participation of civil society organizations and the national police and public prosecutor's offices in Central America.(21, 77) Includes the MOU Between El Salvador and Guatemala on Protecting Trafficking Victims and the Illicit Trafficking of Migrants, which establishes actions for the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador to improve the protection of trafficking victims and reduce the trafficking of migrants along the Guatemala-El Salvador border. Includes a focus on improving services for children.(21, 78)
Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle	Aims to create economic growth, increase educational and vocational training opportunities for youth, and reduce violence in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, in part to reduce the number of unaccompanied minors who leave Guatemala and other Central American countries for the United States and who are vulnerable to human trafficking. Signed by the presidents of each country in 2014.(79-81)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation in order to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by Guatemala at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November 2015).(82, 83) In 2015, Guatemala participated in two meetings with the Ad Hoc Group on Migrant Children and Adolescents of the Regional Conference on Migration to identify ways for member states to increase protections for underage migrants and refugees. These meetings promoted the exchange of information on migrant children's rights and experiences, guiding principles relating to migration, and the holistic protection of children and adolescents.(84)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Guatemala funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Business Network for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala*	Program that aims to address child labor by fighting poverty and promoting education. Members include the ministries of Education and Agriculture, MTPS, CONAPETI, ILO, UNICEF, UN Food and Agriculture Organization, and representatives from the private sector.(85-87)
Over-Age Population Educational Program†	Office of Bilingual Education program for child workers ages 12 to 17. Offers an accelerated, two-year program that is equivalent to six years of education, designed for children who delayed entering school due to work.(58)
Chiquimula School*†	Ministry of Education program that assists children who were living and working in a landfill in Chiquimula. The school provided scholarships to 35 students in 2015 and is staffed with social workers who provide outreach to connect families living in the landfill to additional social services.(2)
I Don't Allow Sexual Exploitation of Children in Tourism†	SVET-administered national campaign against the commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourism. (3) Displays messaging in Spanish, English, and French in airports, hotels, and restaurants. Provides a code of conduct for businesses to sign and display; signed by 306 new businesses and 52 individuals in 2015.(3)

Program	Description
Human Trafficking Referral and Grant Funding†	Government program that provides funding for NGOs to provide shelter and services to child victims of human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(37)
Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Mi Bono Seguro)†	MIDES program that provides cash assistance to families with school-age children, conditioned on children's school attendance.(14, 55, 88)
Food Assistance Program (Mi Bolsa Segura)†	MIDES program that provides food assistance to poor families, with the requirement that their children attend school.(55, 89, 90)
Zero Hunger Pact (Pacto Hambre Cero)†	Government programs to combat malnutrition, increase access to education, and reduce the economic vulnerability of approximately 701,000 families.(14, 57, 91)
Young Protagonists (Jóvenes Protagonistas)†	MIDES program that provides at-risk adolescents with training and formative activities outside of school hours.(88, 92, 93)
My First Employment (Mi Primer Empleo)†	MIDES program that places working-age youth in apprenticeship programs and grants them on-the-job training and a monthly stipend.(73, 88, 94)
Stay Training Center (Quédate)*†	Secretariat of Social Welfare and IOM funded program with support from local businesses, large corporations, and the municipality that provides psychosocial care and reintegration services to returned unaccompanied migrant children.(64, 95)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Guatemala.

While the Government has implemented programs to assist children and families with conditional cash transfers, food assistance, and education services, research found no evidence of government programs specifically designed to assist children, especially those of indigenous descent, who perform hazardous work, including in agriculture and domestic service.(4)

Budget shortfalls limited the Government's ability to disburse allocated funding to existing social programs in 2015. As a result, by November 2015, the Ministry of Social Development only expended 40 percent of its allocated budget and its conditional cash transfer program (Mi Bono Seguro) often failed to reach families in the rural interior.(2) NGOs in the Human Trafficking Referral and Grant Funding program did not receive government funding during the second half of the year and government-run shelters for vulnerable children, including child trafficking victims, also lacked sufficient translators for children who speak roughly two dozen Mayan languages, causing additional difficulties in service provision.(2, 17)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guatemala (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits all children under 14 from working, or establish a light work framework for children 12 to 14 outlining restrictions on working conditions, type of work, and number of hours of work.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce laws related to child labor.	2015
	Eliminate significant delays in the process for penalizing labor law violators, including in cases of child labor, by authorizing the MTPS legislatively to assess penalties for labor law violations. At a minimum, enact legislation to allow the MTPS to recommend sanctions to the labor courts and expedite the process for the judiciary to adopt such recommendations, issue fines, and order and enforce remediation of labor law violations.	2014 – 2015
	Make publicly available the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, the number of child labor violations found and for which penalties were imposed and collected, and whether the underlying violations have been remedied.	2011 – 2015

Enforcement	Increase resources for the labor inspectorate, including vehicles and fuel for inspections, particularly outside of Guatemala City.	2009 – 2015
	Strengthen the inspection system by conducting unannounced inspections across all industries, particularly in the agriculture sector and in the informal sector.	2015
	Apply penalties to violators of child labor laws.	2014 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of complaints received involving child victims of trafficking and the number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions.	2014 – 2015
	Dedicate more resources, staff, and training to law enforcement agencies, particularly outside the capital, responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Strengthen coordination efforts to institutionalize relationships between civil society representatives and government agencies that provide services to child victims of child labor.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Strengthen access to education for girls and children in rural and indigenous areas, including by recruiting and training more teachers to provide instruction in indigenous languages.	2015
	Initiate social programs to address child labor, especially with a focus on indigenous children, in agriculture, domestic work, and for children who perform other types of hazardous work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure existing social programs receive all allocated funding, have adequate geographical coverage to reach families living in both urban and rural areas, and are staffed with service providers able to assist children in their native languages.	2013 – 2015

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary. Total. [accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
60. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets

- index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country’s total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.

In 2015, Guinea made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a national action plan to address human trafficking and funded and participated in multiple programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor. However, children in Guinea are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining. The Government lacks a coordinating mechanism and national policy to address all relevant worst forms of child labor. In addition, the Government does not adequately enforce child labor laws or implement social programs to address the extent of the problem. In 2015, the Government continued to focus its activities and limited resources on addressing an outbreak of Ebola Virus Disease.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guinea are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-4) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining.(2, 3, 5, 6) According to the National Survey on Child Labor and Trafficking (2010), more than 40 percent of children ages 5 to 17 were engaged in child labor in Guinea. In addition, more than 76 percent of working children ages 5 to 11 and 88 percent of working children ages 12 to 15 were performing hazardous work.(2) The survey also revealed that incidents of child labor were higher in rural areas than in urban areas.(2, 5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	32.3 (1,152,064)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	49.6

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor as market vendors and in domestic work, mining, herding,* fishing,* and farming, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 5, 6, 12, 27)
	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (6, 12)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (3, 6, 14, 16, 20)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are sent to the coastal region of Boke for forced labor on farms and to Senegal for education in Koranic schools, in which some may be forced to beg.(6, 28) Some Guinean boys and girls are subjected to forced labor in gold mining, including in Senegal and Mali. Girls may be trafficked into domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation in various countries in West Africa, the Middle East, and the United States, while boys may be trafficked for prostitution to the Netherlands.(2, 6, 12, 28)

In Guinea, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education; however, some Koranic teachers (marabouts) force their students (talibés) to beg; the students must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers.(6, 12, 14, 16, 29, 30) In addition, through the system of confiage, parents who are unable to care for their children send them to relatives or strangers who are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling in exchange for the children performing housework. In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(2, 3, 12, 20)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education, in practice, this provision is not enforced effectively because many children do not attend school. The causes are a lack of school infrastructure; cost of school fees, uniforms, and supplies; a shortage of teachers; election closures; and reported school violence, all of which impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 4, 10, 12, 14, 28) The Government does not prohibit discrimination in education or make efforts to support children with disabilities in regular schools.(4) In addition, many children in Guinea are not registered at birth, which may impede their access to services such as education.(4, 24, 27, 28).

The Ebola Virus Disease outbreak, which continued in Guinea throughout 2015, had a detrimental effect on the country’s economy and social structure, hindering Government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(31)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 137.5 of the Labor Code; Article 412 of the Child Code (32, 33)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2–4 of Order 2791 Working Conditions for Employees Aged Under 18 Years; Article 137.4 of the Labor Code (17, 33)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 415–418 of the Child Code; Articles 2 and 4 of Order 2791 Working Conditions for Employees Aged Under 18 Years; Article 135 of the Mining Code; Article 137.6 of the Labor Code (17, 32-34)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 326–330, 338 and 339, 377, 385–396, and 401 and 402 of the Penal Code; Articles 4 and 137.6 of the Labor Code; Articles 356–360, 385, and 397–399 of the Child Code (32, 33, 35)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 326–330, 377, and 385–396 of the Penal Code; Articles 356–360 and 385 of the Child Code (32, 35)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 329 and 331 of the Penal Code; Articles 356–360 of the Child Code (32, 35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 137.6 of the Labor Code; Article 383 of the Child Code (32, 33)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 429 of the Child Code (32)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 6, Title 1 of Education Decree 97/196-/PRG/SGG (36)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 23 of the Constitution (37)

* No conscription.(38)

Guinean law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. The law contains prohibitions against minors performing work that is dangerous or harmful to their physical or moral health.(17, 33) However, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover agriculture, an area that shows evidence of work in unhealthy environments that expose children to hazardous substances and dangerous equipment.(2, 12) A more specific list of hazardous child labor activities in all relevant sectors was developed, but it was not approved during the reporting period.(14, 16) In addition, although Article 2.6 of Order 2791 prohibits children under age 18 from working in mines and quarries, Article 135 of the Mining Code allows children between ages 16 and 18 to work in mines and quarries as assistants, leaving the possibility for children to work in hazardous activities.(34)

The law allows children between ages 12 and 14 to perform light work in sectors such as domestic work and agriculture.(17, 32) However, the law does not prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, nor specify the conditions in which light work may be undertaken, as defined by international standards on child labor.(25) The minimum age protections under the law do not apply to children in unpaid or non-contractual work.(25, 27, 33) In 2012, the Government drafted an anti-trafficking law, with assistance from UNDP; however, this law has not been finalized by the Ministry of Justice for submission to the National Assembly for approval.(31)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Guinea

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL) Labor Inspection Service	Enforce labor laws and investigates Labor Code infractions, including those on child labor, in the formal sector. Provides advice to workers and employers and conducts studies and research on social issues on the request of MOL.(4, 5, 39) MOL also chairs the Child Labor Monitoring and Surveillance System, which includes the National Coordination Unit in the National Directorate of Employment and various prefectural committees.(25)
Office for the Protection of Gender, Children, and Morals (OPROGEM) Special Police Unit	Enforce laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor.(4, 6) Serves as a member of the National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP).(4, 6, 13)
Ministry for Social Action, Promotion of Women and Children (MASPFE)	Provide protection and social services for victims of child labor and human trafficking.(12) In 2015, conducted raising awareness campaigns on child labor in mining.(40, 41)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Guinea did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) had 20 inspectors in Conakry and one inspector in each of the country's 33 regional offices.(14) According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the Government of Guinea should employ about 131 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(14, 42-44) Reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(3, 6, 14, 16)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Office for the Protection of Gender, Children, and Morals (OPROGEM) had 23 agents in Conakry and one in each of the country's 33 regional offices.(14, 16) OPROGEM remained understaffed, underfunded, and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor effectively.(3, 6, 14, 16) The budget for the Ministry for Social Action, Promotion of Women and Children, decreased from $13 million in 2014 to $9 million in 2015 as a result of the Ebola epidemic.(14)

Two NGOs conducted training for government officials in charge of enforcing child trafficking laws, including victims' rights.(31) However, corruption in law enforcement agencies and the judiciary impeded government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(4, 6, 14)

While a referral mechanism exists between criminal law enforcement agencies and social welfare services, the social services available to victims were not adequate to meet the needs.(14, 16) The Government relied on NGOs to provide shelter and other basic services to victims.(31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP)	Coordinate anti-human-trafficking efforts, including for children. Led by the MASPFE, includes representatives from the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Security OPROGEM, MOL and other agencies, the police, NGOs, and other stakeholders involved in human trafficking issues.(6, 12, 13) In September, the CNLTP collaborated with the International IOM on a 3-day workshop to improve its capacity, including its National Action Plan to counter TIP.(31) CNLTP officials attended EU- and State Department-funded anti-trafficking workshops in Nigeria, Guinea, and Morocco.(31)
Committee for Monitoring, Protection, and Defense of the Rights of the Child	Implement, coordinate, and monitor Government efforts on child protection.(16, 28)

During the reporting period, the National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP) met to develop the National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and work on human trafficking cases.(45) However, the effectiveness of the CNLTP was hampered by budget constraints.(31)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guinea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
A World Fit for Children (2002–2015)	Sets mandatory procedures for government institutions to assist children by increasing their access to quality education; protecting children against child labor, exploitation, and violence; and combating HIV/AIDS.(46)
Education Sector Program (2015–2017)*	Addresses the welfare of children, which includes initiatives on health, education, legal protection, and access to clean water. Overseen by the MOE and implemented in partnership with UNICEF and the World Bank.(47, 48)

Policy	Description
PRSP (2013–2015)*	Provides a framework for Guinea’s growth and poverty reduction agenda. Aims to improve access to education and its quality and increase food security, employment opportunities for youth, and protection for women, children, and vulnerable groups and provide programs to assist them.(49)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The Government of Guinea produced a National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, but was unable to implement the Plan or renew its 2005 anti-trafficking agreement with the Government of Mali.(31) Research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Guinea funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Plan Guinea-Conakry Program	Attempts to change the attitudes and behaviors that are preventing children from realizing their rights. Strengthens the capacity of key actors to respect children’s rights in the areas of education, survival, and protection.(20)
WFP Country Program-Guinea (2013–2017)	WFP-funded, 4-year program, improves elementary school attendance and promotes education for girls. Aims to assist 437,000 beneficiaries for 5 years.(50) Implemented in partnership with the Ministry of Cooperation.(29, 50, 51)
Center in Ratoma, Conakry†	Government program, helps vulnerable children reintegrate into society.(13)

† Program is funded by the Government of Guinea.

Although the Government of Guinea has implemented programs in children’s rights and education, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs specifically designed to assist children in agriculture, domestic work, mining, and street work.(12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guinea (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Guinea that fall into an R.190 category are prohibited to children under age 18.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that all children are prohibited from participating in hazardous mining.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the law’s light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2015
Legal Framework	Ensure that the minimum age provisions apply to children in unpaid or non-contractual work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Increase the resources, training, and number of criminal law enforcement officials and labor inspectors to adequately enforce child labor laws.	2009 – 2015
	Collect and make publicly available complete information on labor inspectorate funding, whether unannounced inspections are permitted, training for criminal investigators, and the number of criminal violations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure the labor inspectorate has authority to determine and assess penalties.	2015
Enforcement	Address corruption in law enforcement agencies and the judiciary that impedes efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the CNLTP receives adequate funding to fulfill its mission.	2010 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Program and PRSP.	2010 – 2015
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by taking the following actions: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Increase school infrastructure and teacher availability; ■ Eliminate school-related fees; ■ Ensure school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to attend school; ■ Make regular schools accessible to children with disabilities; and ■ Take measures to prevent discrimination in education and ensure the safety of children in schools. 	2010 – 2015
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, domestic work, mining, and street work.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that social services are properly funded and adequate to meet the needs of victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children in manufacturing to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
43. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
44. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Guinea-Bissau made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government began investigating a potential case of child trafficking and eliminated school registration fees. However, children in Guinea-Bissau are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. The Government has not determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. Law enforcement officials do not receive the appropriate training and resources to effectively conduct inspections or investigate and prosecute cases of child labor. In addition, the Government did not make any efforts to implement the National Action Plan on Trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guinea-Bissau are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(1-6) Research did not find information on whether the full results of the national child labor survey conducted by the Ministry of Civil Service and Labor have been published.(7) However, in February 2015, the Government announced the survey had revealed that 39 percent of children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in child labor; with a high prevalence of child labor in the Cacheu region in the north.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea-Bissau.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	47.3 (219,734)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	56.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	34.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		62.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of cashews* (1, 4, 6, 11)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (1, 2)
Industry	Mining* (1)
Services	Domestic work* (2, 6)
	Street work, including car washing and shoe shining* (2)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking*(3, 6)
	Forced labor in domestic and street work, including begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (5, 6)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Guinea-Bissau, organized networks of former male trafficking victims affiliated with Koranic schools traffic boys to Guinea, Mali, and Senegal, where they are forced to beg for money.(2, 5) Boys are also forced to beg in Guinea-Bissau.(5) It is tradition for parents to send their children to be educated by Koranic teachers, called marabouts. Although many teachers carry out the intended tradition of providing religious education, some instead force the students, known as talibés, to beg on the streets for money and food, and to then surrender their earnings to their teachers.(2) Teachers who force talibés to beg typically set a daily quota; if the students do not meet the quota, they may be beaten. Most talibés originate from the predominantly Muslim areas of Bafatá and Gabú in the east of the country.(2) Research found that politicians in Guinea-Bissau do not confront Koranic teachers for trafficking boys because of the teachers' influence on the Muslim electorate.(12)

Guinea-Bissau

Boys are forced to work in street vending in Guinea-Bissau; they are trafficked for forced labor in agriculture, mining, and street vending in Senegal, particularly in the southern cities of Kolda and Ziguinchor.(5, 12) Girls are subjected to forced labor in street vending and domestic work in Guinea and Senegal. Some girls may also be subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in these countries.(5) Research found limited evidence that European tourists traffic boys and girls for sexual exploitation on islands in the Bijagos Archipelago.(7)

Although the Government eliminated school registration fees for the 2014–2015 school year, hidden fees may still exist.(13, 14) Lack of birth registration can result in denial of education; however, authorities generally waive the birth certificate requirement for primary school enrollment.(6) Some children left school to work with their families in the 3-to-4-months long annual cashew harvest.(6, 15, 16)

In October 2015, a new Government was established, overthrowing the one elected in 2014; this may impact the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea-Bissau has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 146 of the General Labor Law (18)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 148 of the General Labor Law (18)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2, 4, and 15 of the Law to Prevent and Combat Human Trafficking; Article 106 of the Penal Code; Child Code (19, 20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 2, 4, and 15 of the Law to Prevent and Combat Human Trafficking; Child Code (5, 20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 3–5 of the Law to Prevent and Combat Human Trafficking; Articles 134 and 136 of the Penal Code (19, 20)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 3 and 7 of the Decree on Narcotic Substances (21)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Law No. 3/80 and Decree No. 20/83 (22)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17	Article 31 of Law No. 4/99 (23)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 12 and 13 of the Education System Law (24)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 12(2) of the Education System Law (24)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed and children in domestic work.(18, 25)

The General Labor Law prohibits children under age 18 from conducting heavy work, work in unhealthy or dangerous conditions, and underground work; it also states that complementary legislation will further specify prohibited occupations or activities.(18) However, the Government has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.

Laws regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children are not sufficient, as the possession and distribution of child pornography are not criminally prohibited.(19, 20)

The Education System Law states that basic education is compulsory and lasts 9 years; however, it only makes basic education free through grade six.(24) The Government's failure to provide for complete, free, basic education may increase the risk of children becoming involved in the worst forms of child labor.

Research did not uncover a public version of the Child Code, Law No. 3/80, Decree No. 20/83, and Law No. 4/99 for review.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspectorate General of Labor and Social Security	Monitor compliance with the provisions of the labor law, including child labor.(22)
Ministry of Interior's Public Order Police and National Guard; Ministry of Justice's Judicial Police	Conduct child labor prevention and enforcement, including preventing human traffickers from entering or exiting the country with children.(2, 4, 26)
Ministry of Justice and Ministry of Civil Service and Labor	Enforce child labor legislation in collaboration with the National Institute for Women and Children (INMC).(2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Guinea-Bissau did not take actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Government reported that the number of labor inspectors employed was insufficient. The Government also did not have the necessary resources to conduct proper labor inspections.(17)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea-Bissau took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

During the reporting period, the National Guard intercepted 22 children at the Senegalese border.(16, 27) Research did not find information on whether the children were referred to social service providers. In March 2015, the Judicial Police began investigating a potential case of child trafficking for labor exploitation.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Trafficking	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking. Led by INMC and includes representatives from various NGOs and from the Ministries of Interior, Justice, Health, Education, and Transportation.(26) Did not meet in 2015.(27)
National Institute for Women and Children (INMC)	Coordinate and monitor NGOs and activities of other rehabilitation partners to defend and protect children.(2)
Ministry of Civil Service and Labor	Implement and coordinate actions to combat child labor in Guinea-Bissau.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guinea-Bissau has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Trafficking UNDAF (2013–2017)	Aims to guide implementation of the Law to Prevent and Combat Human Trafficking.(5)
EFA Action Plan (2000–2015)*	Strengthens the Government’s capacity to ensure respect, promotion, and protection of social rights. Aims to assist in the implementation of a national action plan against child labor within the framework of the Decent Work Country Program.(28)
Political Letter for Educational Sector (2010–2020)*	Facilitated interagency coordination to ensure universal access to free and compulsory education. (3, 29)
National Strategy for Social Protection of Children	Outlines actions to be developed for preschool, primary, and secondary school; technical and professional training; and university studies.(3)
National Action Plan for Birth Registration*	Guides the Government and national and international partners so they can adequately focus on providing social protection for vulnerable children, including orphans; HIV-positive children; working children; and children who have been exploited or trafficked for financial gain.(3)
National Strategy for Poverty Reduction (2011–2015)	Provides free birth registration to children.(13) The Ministry of Justice partners with civil society organizations implement mobile birth registration units in rural and urban areas.(30)
	Sought to reduce poverty from 69.3 percent in 2010 to 59 percent by 2015, and extreme poverty from 33 percent in 2010 to 20 percent by 2015, by improving access to basic services and generating income and employment opportunities. Strengthened government coordination and mechanisms to protect at-risk children, including those engaged in child labor.(31)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The Government did not implement the National Action Plan on Trafficking during the reporting period.(5, 7)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Guinea-Bissau participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program	UNICEF-funded program in collaboration with the Government to prevent and combat child trafficking in the most disadvantaged communities through social safety nets, education, and other social protection mechanisms.(30)
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	Targets the expansion of the social protection system, particularly for women in the informal economy and child victims of the worst forms of child labor. Specific objectives include adopting a national action plan against child labor and publishing results from the national survey on child labor.(15)
Friends of the Child (Amigos da Criança) Transit Shelter†	Government and donor-funded program implemented by an NGO that provides social services to victims of human trafficking through two shelters.(5, 16) Received approximately $9,280 from the Government in 2015; however, facilities lacked the financial and human resources needed to adequately assist victims.(5)
School Lunch Program	Government, WFP, and U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded program implemented by International Partnership for Human Development that provides school lunches to more than 200,000 children.(11)

† Program is funded by the Government of Guinea-Bissau.

Although Guinea-Bissau has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guinea-Bissau (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children who are self-employed and in domestic work.	2015
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the legal framework provides penalties for possessing and distributing child pornography.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that all 9 years of basic education are free.	2015
	Make publicly available the Child Code, Law No. 3/80, Decree No. 20/83, and Law No. 4/99.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Make law enforcement data publicly available, including information on the labor inspectorate's funding; the inspectorate's ability to assess penalties; number and type of labor inspections conducted, and complaint mechanism; as well as the number of violations found during criminal investigations; and referral mechanisms between labor and law enforcement agencies and social service providers.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that a sufficient number of law enforcement officials receive proper training and resources in order to inspect, investigate, and prosecute cases of child labor.	2009 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Trafficking meets regularly in order to coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Increase free birth registration for all children to encourage higher primary and secondary school enrollment.	2014 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure implementation of the National Action Plan on Trafficking.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Publish the complete results of the national child labor survey.	2013 – 2015
	Develop social programs to ensure that informal fees do not hinder access to education.	2011 – 2015
	Increase funding for transit shelters to ensure that facilities have adequate resources to assist child trafficking victims.	2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Guyana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Guyana made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government released findings from the 2011 Child Labor Rapid Assessment Survey and achieved its first child trafficking conviction. However, children in Guyana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Law enforcement agencies have insufficient funding and capacity to enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms, and legislation does not fully protect children. Moreover, the Government does not have a comprehensive policy to combat child labor or targeted social programs to fully address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guyana are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guyana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	23.0 (44,787)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	94.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	23.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		84.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015. (13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006–2007. (14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of rice* (2-4, 7-10, 12, 15-18)
	Forestry,* including logging,† preservation of lumber, and work in sawmills*† (2-4, 7-10, 16)
	Fishing,† activities unknown (3, 4, 10, 15)
Industry	Construction,*† activities unknown (3, 10)
	Mining,† including gold mining*† (1-4, 7-10, 15, 16, 19-21)
Services	Domestic work* (3, 10, 12)
	Working in scrap iron yards* (12)
	Working in family stores, bars and restaurants (3, 10, 12, 22)
	Street work, including vending and begging (3, 9, 10, 12, 17, 18)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1-12, 16-18, 23)
	Planting marijuana* (12)
	Domestic servitude* (10, 11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Guyana, including girls as young as age 12, are involved in commercial sexual exploitation in Georgetown and in the country's interior. There are reports of young girls being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in mining communities as a result of human trafficking.(5-7, 11, 12) In 2011, with assistance from the ILO, the Government conducted a Child Labor Rapid Assessment Survey to better understand the nature of child labor in the country.(24) In October 2015, the Ministry of Social Protection released the findings of the survey, which found that many children work on farms, sell produce in the streets, and are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.(9, 17, 18)

The 2011 Child Labor Rapid Assessment Survey indicated that 40 percent of working children ages 5 to 15 did not attend school.(12) Although the Constitution of Guyana guarantees free education, some primary schools continue to charge fees and have even attempted to prevent children who cannot pay from attending school.(25) In efforts to address this problem, the Ministry of Education has publicized guidance advising parents and educators that only the Parent Teacher Association has the authority to approve and collect fees from parents, and that no child may be excluded from school for non-payment.(25) Additionally, children in Guyana's interior and rural areas have limited access to education due to poor infrastructure, transportation costs, and a shortage of trained and qualified teachers. This leads to decreasing enrollment and high dropout rates among students.(12, 26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guyana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 2–3 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act; Articles 17–22 of the Education Act (1, 27, 28)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Part 1, Article 2 and Part 2, Article 3 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act; Articles 17, 41, 46, and 75 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (27, 29)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		List of Hazardous Occupation and Processes in Guyana; Part 1, Article 2 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act; Articles 17, 41, and 75 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (15, 30-32)

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 3 of the Combatting of Trafficking in Persons Act (34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 50(3) of the Protection of Children Act (35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 50(1) of the Protection of Children Act (35)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 18 of the Defense Act (36, 37)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 13 and 22 of the Education Act (28)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 27 of the Constitution (33)

* No conscription (8, 38)

Although the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act prohibits night work in industrial undertakings, and hazardous work for anyone under age 18, the law does not fully protect adolescents ages 16 and 17 from engaging in hazardous work. Part 1, Article 2 of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act only prohibits night work for minors employed in industry and provides an exception allowing adolescents ages 16 and over to perform certain work requiring continuity through day and night, including gold mining reduction work and the production of iron, steel, glass, paper, and raw sugar, without provisions to ensure that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected or that they receive specific instruction or training in these activities.(27)

While Article 351 of the Criminal Law Offences Act prohibits the selling, publishing, and exhibiting of obscene material, Guyanese law does not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, as laws related to prostitution, pornography, and pornographic performances do not prohibit the use, procuring, and offering of a child for each of these purposes.(3, 16, 34, 39, 40)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Protection	Monitor and enforce child labor laws in collaboration with the Ministry of Education; Forestry Commission; Geology and Mines Commission; National Insurance Scheme; and Guyana Police Force. The chief labor officer handles special investigations stemming from child labor complaints and oversees routine labor inspections.(9, 16) Includes the Childcare and Protection Agency, to which children identified during labor inspections are referred.(9)
Guyana Police Force	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Works in consultation with the Director of Public Prosecutions; the Ministry of Public Security; the Ministry of Social Protection; the Ministry of Education; and the Ministry of Indigenous Peoples' Affairs, depending on the circumstances of each case.(9)
Ministry of Public Security	Lead enforcement of human trafficking laws. Chair the Ministerial Task Force on Combating Trafficking in Persons.(9)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Guyana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Guyana should employ roughly 21 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(41-43) The Ministry of Social Protection reported that funds in 2015 were insufficient to carry out inspections.(9) In particular, the Ministry of Social Protection noted the lack of inspections in gold mining areas and stated that there are sometimes delays in accessing the resources necessary for inspections in remote areas.(9, 16) During the last quarter of 2015, however, the Ministry of Social Protection received funding for child labor inspections in several remote villages.(9)

The Government has acknowledged challenges in monitoring and enforcing the provisions established in Articles 41 and 46 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, which aim to protect children from work that may harm their physical health or emotional development.(44)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Guyana took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	4 (31)	4 (46)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	1 (45)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (9)	Yes (9)

In September 2015, the Government of Guyana issued the country's first conviction with full remediation, including imprisonment and restitution, for the crime of human trafficking of a minor. The offender received a sentence of 3 years' imprisonment and a $500 fine.(47) In December 2015, the Trafficking in Persons Unit of the Ministry of Social Protection rescued two underage girls working in a bar. Additionally, during the reporting period, the Guyana Police Force identified 16 child victims of human trafficking.(22)

The Government has acknowledged that there is an insufficient number of staff within the Trafficking in Persons Unit.(45) In general, the Government's capacity to carry out prosecutions is limited. With only 33 justices and magistrates, the courts have a backlog of cases and more than a 2-year waiting period on all legal matters.(4, 7-9, 48) Furthermore, human trafficking victims may be charged for crimes occurring as a result of their being exploited, if authorities do not identify them as victims of human trafficking.(49)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Ministerial Task Force on Combating Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministerial Task Force on Combating Trafficking in Persons	Report on the nature and magnitude of trafficking in persons in Guyana, document the Government's response, and carry out public education and prevention measures.(50) Combats commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities through member agencies.(9) Chaired by the Minister of Public Security. Other members include the Ministries of Amerindian Affairs, Natural Resources and Environment, Education, Legal Affairs, and Foreign Affairs.(9, 16) Did not meet in 2015, in part due to restructuring delays after the general elections.(9)
National Tripartite Committee	Address national labor legislation and policy. Includes representatives from government agencies, labor unions, and employers, including the Ministry of Social Protection, the Consultative Association of Guyanese Industries, the Guyana Trades Union Congress, and the Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Guyana.(9, 46, 51)
Commission on the Rights of the Child	Protect and promote children's rights in accordance with the UN CRC, which includes addressing the worst forms of child labor.(9) In 2015, the Ministry of Social Protection hosted a forum to discuss the implementation of systems to combat child labor and raise awareness of the problem.(9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guyana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Five-year Strategic Plan on the Rights of the Child (2012–2017)*	Protects and promotes children's rights in Guyana and advances the UN CRC.(4)
National Education Policy*	Aims to provide equal access to quality education for all children and eliminate barriers to education, especially for the poor.(52)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Guyana at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(53, 54)
Ministerial Task Force on Combatting Trafficking in Persons Action Plan (2014–2015)	Seeks to prevent and raise awareness of human trafficking, provide direct assistance to victims, improve law enforcement's capacity to identify and respond to human trafficking, and strengthen interagency coordination and referral mechanisms.(49, 55)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In December 2015, Guyana participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(56, 57) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and development of social protection policies for children and families.(56, 58)

According to the Ministry of Social Protection, the Government of Guyana does not have a comprehensive written strategy for combating and responding to child labor.(9, 16)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Guyana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Human Trafficking Hotline†	Government-funded hotline to assist human trafficking victims.(7)
Shelter for Domestic Violence Victims†	Government-funded, NGO-run shelter that houses victims of domestic violence and human trafficking. Provides services, including psychological counseling and practical skills training.(8) Accommodates teenage girls under age 16 who are placed at the shelter at the request of the Government's Childcare and Protection Agency.(16) Receives $50,000 annually from the Government.(23)
School Meals and Uniforms†	Government program to provide hot meals to 16,000 students at schools in the interior, and transportation for students in several remote areas. All students in Government-run schools, from nursery to secondary school, receive vouchers to purchase school uniforms, shoes, and backpacks.(2, 4, 9, 59-61)
Child Advocacy Center	Ministry of Social Protection and NGO partnership to provide services for abused children. Overseen and referrals made to the center by the Ministry of Social Protection's Childcare and Protection Agency; funded by private sector donations.(49, 62)
Board of Industrial Training†	Attempts to deter early school dropouts by providing job skills to at-risk youth between ages 15 and 17 who may not be able to complete their formal education.(9)

† Program is funded by the Government of Guyana.

The scope of government programs to target the worst forms of child labor is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(9, 16) In particular, government resources provided to victims of human trafficking are inadequate.(23)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guyana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law fully protects all children under age 18 from engaging in hazardous work, including night work.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the law sufficiently prohibits the commercial sexual exploitation of children by prohibiting the use, procuring, and offering of a child for prostitution, pornography, or pornographic performances.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce laws related to child labor.	2015
	Make information publicly available on the labor inspectorate's funding, the training system for labor inspectors, the number of inspections conducted by desk review, and whether inspections are routinely targeted.	2015
	Ensure sufficient resources are allocated in a timely manner to facilitate labor inspections, particularly in remote areas and in gold mining areas.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure the appropriate application of Articles 41 and 46 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act.	2015
	Make information publicly available on the training system for investigators and the number of criminal labor violations found.	2015
	Dedicate more resources, including judicial personnel, to investigate and prosecute court cases related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that victims of human trafficking are not charged for committing crimes as a result of being subjected to human trafficking.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms, and ensure these bodies engage in regular meetings and coordination efforts.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the 5-Year Strategic Plan on the Rights of the Child and the National Education Policy.	2010 – 2015
	Establish a comprehensive strategy for combating child labor.	2014 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Ensure children are not prevented from attending school because of transportation costs or failure to pay school fees.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the number of trained and qualified teachers, particularly in rural and interior areas.	2015
	Develop new initiatives and expand existing programs to reach all children involved in the worst forms of child labor; in particular, increase funding to identify and assist victims of human trafficking.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Report No. GB.297/ESP/3. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
43. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies; "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Haiti

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Haiti made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, which will provide protection and social assistance to victims of human trafficking, including children. The Government also trained local judges on the 2014 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law and continued to participate in a number of programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, including a new program to combat child labor and improve working conditions in agriculture. However, children in Haiti are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and agriculture. Haiti lacks a clear, easily applicable minimum age for domestic work. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Haiti are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and agriculture. (1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Haiti. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	34.4 (815,993)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	34.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary Completion Rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête Mortalité, Morbidité et Utilisation des Services (EMMUS-V), 2012.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Use in illicit activities, including by criminal groups as messengers and to carry weapons* or transport drugs* (3, 17, 18)
	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 19, 20)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

A 2015 study found approximately 286,000 child domestic workers in Haiti, 207,000 of whom were found to be lagging behind in school.(12, 13) Some parents unable to care for their children send them to residential care centers, or to relatives or strangers who are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to these children in exchange for household work. In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become child domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(3-7, 13, 14, 17, 21)

Children are trafficked both internally and to the Dominican Republic. NGOs have reported that children crossing the Haiti-Dominican Republic border illegally are often accompanied by adults who are paid to pretend to be the children’s parents or guardians until they reach the Dominican Republic.(17, 22-25) Some of these children are reunited with relatives in the Dominican Republic, whereas others engage in commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, or agriculture; some children also work on the streets shining shoes, picking up waste, washing car windows, and begging.(4, 25, 26)

Many Haitian children’s births are not registered; the 2010 earthquake and ensuing infrastructure and paperwork destruction further exacerbated the lack of identity documentation.(3, 11, 13, 14, 18, 22) In Haiti, personal identification documents are required in order to enter into an employment contract, access the justice system, and receive social protection services. The lack of personal identification documents makes it more difficult to protect children against labor and criminal violations, and for children to access the social assistance services and educational programs provided by the Government.(3, 27-29)

On August 14, 2015, the Government of the Dominican Republic began involuntary repatriations of individuals with irregular migration status to Haiti, pursuant to the Dominican National Plan to Regularize Foreigners and the General Law on Migration.(30) By January 2016, the Government of the Dominican Republic reported that it had deported 13,756 individuals with irregular status to Haiti.(31) From June 2015 to January 2016, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) reported that 37,836 individuals migrated spontaneously to Haiti, including 970 unaccompanied minors.(13, 14, 31) As of the end of 2015, approximately 3,000 individuals, including nearly 1,000 children under age 17, who had been deported or who migrated spontaneously to Haiti, were residing in camps in Haiti near the border with the Dominican Republic.(13, 14, 30, 32)

Children, including those who have been deported to Haiti or who voluntarily left the Dominican Republic for Haiti, as well as unaccompanied child migrants, are vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, school attendance rates are particularly low for children recently arriving from the Dominican Republic, as schools are not available in or near the border camps; these children’s parents also lack the financial means to enroll their children in school, and these children may not speak French, the language of instruction in most Haitian schools.(13, 14)

Although the Constitution guarantees free primary education, public schools often charge fees for books, uniforms, and enrollment. There are not enough public schools (private schools represent approximately 90 percent of available schools), and many teachers lack official teaching credentials.(33-36) As a result, most Haitian children are enrolled in private schools that charge tuition and other fees. Many others, especially in rural areas, simply do not attend school.(3, 11, 13, 18, 33, 36) Out-of-school children are at increased risk of engaging in child labor or of becoming victims of human trafficking.(18, 33)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Haiti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription (45)

† No standing military (45)

Article 335 of the Labor Code sets the minimum age for contractual work at 15 in industrial, agricultural, and commercial establishments. The Labor Code only applies to workers who perform work under an employment agreement.(3, 37, 46) It is unclear whether the Labor Code applies to situations in which there is no written agreement, such as informal employment relationships. Article 340 provides penalties for employers who employ minors without proper work permits or health certificates, which are required for all children ages 15 to 18. However, the limited penalties, usually the equivalent of between $48 and $81, are not sufficient deterrents to protect children against labor exploitation.(3, 37, 38) Although there is not a specific penalty for employing underage children, Article 513 of the Labor Code notes that a fine of $81 may be applied to any violations without specific fines, which may not be not adequate to deter violations.(37)

The Act on the Prohibition and Elimination of All Forms of Abuse, Violence, Ill Treatment, or Inhumane Treatment Against Children of 2003 (Act of 2003) annulled Chapter 9 of the Labor Code that had set a minimum age for domestic work at age 12 and had provided for protections for domestic workers and fines in cases of violations.(37, 38) Since the Act of 2003 annulled the minimum age provisions for domestic child workers, it is unclear whether there is a minimum age for domestic work.(38, 46) The Government has drafted legislation that would set the minimum age for domestic work at 15 years, but that legislation has not been enacted.(47-49)

The Labor Code prohibits children ages 15 to 18 from working at night in industrial jobs and in establishments where alcohol is served.(37) However, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover agriculture, an area of work where there is evidence of exposing children to hazardous substances, agents, or to temperatures damaging to their health. A specific list of hazardous child labor activities covering sectors where children work, including agriculture, has been developed but was not approved by Parliament during the reporting period.(47, 49) Even though the Act of 2003 also contains general prohibitions against the worst forms of child labor, including hazardous work, child trafficking, and the use of children in criminal activities, it establishes no penalties for employing children in these activities.(38)

Articles 278–282 of the Penal Code prohibit prostitution and the corruption of minors, but do not prohibit the use of children in pornographic performances. The Act of 2003 specifically prohibits the use of children in pornographic performances; however, it does not establish penalties for perpetrators of this violation.(37, 38)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MAST)	Enforce child protection and child labor laws. MAST labor inspectors investigate Labor Code infractions in the formal sector, including those regarding child labor. MAST's Institute of Social Welfare and Research (IBESR) agents perform inspections in compliance with the Child Protection Law of 2012 and help enforce the Act of 2003.(46, 50-52) In cases of potential criminal violations, MAST labor inspectors and IBESR agents refer cases to juvenile courts for prosecution, while children receive services from IBESR. (3, 10, 16) Collaborate with the Brigade for the Protection of Minors (BPM) to investigate cases of crimes against children and apply the Penal Code to punish the perpetrators.(10, 16, 50)
Haitian National Police's (PNH) La Brigade de Protection des Mineurs (BPM)	Lead anti-child trafficking efforts and investigate Penal Code infractions against children.(16, 22, 33) Investigate reports of cases of the worst forms of child labor and of forced labor, in conjunction with routine police patrols in public places where children can be in physical or moral danger and become victims of crime.(10, 50) BPM agents gather and submit information to judicial and/or social protection authorities to allow criminal prosecution of crimes against minors or to provide social protection and placement services for victims (as needed).(52)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Haiti took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

All Ministry of Social Affairs and Labor (MAST) labor inspectors are required to monitor and ensure compliance with all Labor Code provisions during their inspections, including those pertaining to child labor.(16, 22, 37, 51) MAST inspectors generally lack sufficient resources, such as means of transportation, fuel, and appropriately equipped workplaces, to enforce the law adequately.(10, 34)

In 2015, the Institute of Social Welfare and Research (IBESR) had 150 employees working in all of Haiti’s geographic departments; they included 48 child protection agents and approximately 20 social workers to handle protection cases, including those involving child labor.(10, 48) Each IBESR regional bureau includes a child protection section that employs five to seven agents.(10) The Government budgeted approximately $1.1 million to IBESR for child protection activities. In 2015, approximately 60 IBESR agents received training on child protection issues, including child labor.(48, 53) The remaining agents were not trained, in large part due to lack of funding.(4, 10, 34, 48, 50) It is unclear whether children engaged in child labor found during labor inspections or through other enforcement efforts received appropriate social services in 2015.

IBESR also manages the “133” hotline that receives complaints about the situations requiring child protection.(4, 16, 22) However, the hotline functions exclusively in Port-au-Prince, which makes reporting cases involving child exploitation to IBESR more difficult in rural areas.(16) In addition, the number of calls related to child labor that were received during 2015 is unknown.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Haiti took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In 2015, the Haitian National Police’s Brigade for the Protection of Minors (BPM) maintained a staff of 90 agents in 24 offices around the country, including in 4 offices along the Haiti-Dominican Republic border.(34) Reports indicate that BPM lacks trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(13, 14, 34)

During the reporting period, BPM provided social services to 518 children, of whom 469 were transferred to IBESR and 49 were returned to their parents. Research was unable to determine whether these children were involved in the worst forms of child labor.(13, 14, 54) BPM manages the “188” hotline, which receives complaints about the situations requiring child protection.(14, 16) However, like the IBESR hotline, the “188” hotline functions exclusively in Port-au-Prince, which makes reporting cases involving child exploitation more difficult in rural areas.(50, 55) In addition, the number of calls related to child labor received in 2015 is unknown.

In 2015, some judges received training on the 2014 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law.(14) Although efforts were made to train law enforcement and judiciary officials on human trafficking issues, work remains to be done to ensure that relevant officials, particularly in the provinces, are aware of the law and methods of implementation.(13, 14)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts to Eliminate Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Tripartite Commission for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Elaborate policies; approve programs; and coordinate, supervise, monitor, and evaluate efforts to combat child labor in Haiti.(56-58) Chaired by MAST and comprises officials from BPM; the Citizen Protection Bureau; and the Ministries of Agriculture, Education, Health, Interior, Justice, and Women's Affairs. Also includes non-governmental stakeholders such as NGOs, labor unions, international organizations, and social partners.(16, 58) In 2015, the Commission met regularly to revise the draft List of Hazardous Occupations Prohibited for Children and completed the draft National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(13, 34, 49, 58)
National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons and provide protection and rehabilitation services to victims at the national level.(4, 39) Chaired by IBESR and includes MAST, BPM, the Citizen Protection Bureau, the National Office for Migration, and the Ministries of Education, Foreign Affairs, Health, Interior, Justice, Education, and Women's Affairs.(39, 59) In 2015, Committee representatives for member ministries were appointed by presidential order.(14, 60, 61) During the reporting period, the Committee also met to develop drafts of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, which the Government adopted in March 2015.(4)
Child Protection Working Group	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on child protection, including protection of child domestic workers. Chaired by IBESR and comprises officials from BPM; the Citizen Protection Bureau; MAST; and the Ministries of Education, Health, Justice, Women's Affairs, and Youth.(62, 63) Also includes non-governmental stakeholders such as NGOs, international organizations, and social partners.(62) In 2015, the Child Protection Working Group continued to conduct a comprehensive study on the prevalence of child domestic work, to be released in 2016.(34, 64, 65)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Haiti has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2017)†	Aims to enhance the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implement laws related to human trafficking, provide protection and care for victims, and strengthen social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children. Led by the National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons.(4, 66)
National Strategic Development Plan (PSDH) (2014–2016)	Articulates four pillars—economic, social, territorial, and institutional— and notes the need to prohibit child labor in order to ensure sustained and equitable economic growth. Built on the 2010 Action Plan for National Recovery and Development, which outlined key initiatives to address the structural causes of Haiti's underdevelopment and explore ways to make Haiti an "emerging country" by 2030.(67, 68) The PSDH aims to improve the country's living standards by increasing employment; addressing food insecurity; and providing housing and access to basic services such as health care, education, water, and sanitation. Overseen by the Ministry of Planning and External Cooperation and the Ministry of Economy and Finance.(67, 68)
National Action Strategy for Education for All (2011–2017)*	Aims to increase access to primary education, particularly for vulnerable populations. The strategy is overseen by the Ministry of Education and supported by international donors.(69, 70) Subsidizes school fees for both public and private schools, provides food at school, and offers teacher training to increase the number of qualified teachers. For the 2014–15 school year, the project provided free tuition-fee waivers to nearly 108,000 students and accredited almost 20,000 public and private primary schools.(69, 70)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	In December 2015, Haiti participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(71, 72) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(71, 73).

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Haiti

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, the Government of Haiti drafted a National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor and, in 2015, the Government drafted a National Social Protection Policy; to date, however, neither has been approved.(13, 49, 58, 74)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Haiti funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Reduce Child Labor and Improve Labor Rights and Working Conditions in Haiti, Let's Work for Our Rights (2015–2017)*	$9.99 million USDOL-funded, project implemented by Catholic Relief Services to provide services to households and children engaged in or at-risk of engaging in child labor or other exploitative working conditions in agriculture. The project also provides assistance to the Government, the private sector, and civil society to improve the protection of children and workers.(74, 75) The project aims to reach 10,000 children and adolescents with educational services; 5,000 households with livelihood services; 2,500 children, youth, and adults with legal assistance on child labor, labor rights, and identity documentation issues; and 10,000 adults by raising awareness of child labor, other labor rights issues, and the right to education.(74, 75)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Haiti, the project aims to build the capacity of MAST and works to develop strategic policies to eliminate child labor and forced labor, as well as to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers.(65, 76)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2012–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Haiti.(77)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2015)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Haiti. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(77)
Protecting the Rights of Children, Women, and Youth in Haiti (AKSÈ) (2012–2017)	$22.5 million USAID-funded, 5-year project that supports a partnership between the Government and the private sector to promote children's rights and child protection services. Supports efforts by governmental organizations; NGOs; and community-based organizations to assist victims of gender-based violence, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, forced domestic work, and recruitment into criminal activity.(78, 79)
Help People (Ede Pèp) Program†	Government social program that assists poor families through 16 projects, with a focus on improving children's well-being.(50, 80) Projects include the Ti Manman Cheri project, the Kore Etidyan project, and the Aba Grangou project, among others. Ti Manman Cheri project provides low-income mothers with monthly cash transfers to pay for their children's school tuition.(10, 80) Kore Etidyan project provides financial assistance to students.(50) Aba Grangou project, financed with $30 million from the Government of Venezuela, with additional financial support from the Government of Haiti, provides 2.2 million children with meals through a school food program.(10, 80, 81)
National Free Education Program (PSUGO)†	Government program that aims to increase poor children's access to education. Includes school grants intended to eliminate school fees and accelerated learning programs for students who are lagging behind in school.(55, 82)
IBESR's National Week of the Child	IBESR awareness-raising campaign funded by international NGOs to increase public understanding of children's rights.(3, 83) Engaged local and international NGOs on issues of forced child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation. The theme for the 2015 National Week of the Child was "My vote is a vote for the protection of children."(3, 83)
Government Child Shelter, Census, and National Child Protection Database†	Government program to support child protection. IBESR implements the Government's regulatory framework for residential care centers (orphanages), collects information on vulnerable children, and tracks them through the National Child Protection Database.(10, 50)
Children's Summer Enrichment Program	Office of the Citizen Protector program that provided training for children, with the support of the AKSÈ program. Assists approximately 100 children from Cité Soleil, in Port-au-Prince, during the summer by raising their awareness of Haiti's child protection institutional framework and mechanisms.(10, 55)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Haiti.

Despite IBESR's efforts to collect information for the National Child Protection Database, it does not fully capture all relevant information, including the number of displaced street children and children engaged in domestic work.(16) Although Haiti has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Haiti (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children engaged in work not performed pursuant to contractual arrangements.	2014 – 2015
	Create meaningful penalties for employing children in contravention of the Labor Code.	2009 – 2015
	Clarify the minimum age for domestic work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Haiti that fall into a R.190 category, such as work in unhealthy environments are prohibited to children under age 18.	2009 – 2015
	Clarify the legal framework to ensure that the Act on the Prohibition and Elimination of All Forms of Abuse, Violence, Ill Treatment, or Inhumane Treatment Against Children of 2003 includes meaningful civil and criminal penalties for all violations.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that the use of children in pornographic performances is criminally prohibited.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available information on MAST labor inspections, in particular; the amount of funding for MAST; the number of labor inspectors and whether they received training, the number and type of labor inspections; the number of child labor violations found and cases transferred to judicial authorities; and the penalties imposed and collected for violations.	2013 – 2015
	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties or expedite review of child labor violations in labor tribunals and through other appropriate legal bodies.	2013 – 2015
	Improve institutional mechanisms and practices to ensure that children engaged in child labor during labor inspections or through other enforcement efforts receive appropriate social services.	2013 – 2015
	Strengthen IBESR's enforcement capacity by initiating routine or targeted child protection inspections, rather than by performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2013 – 2015
	Provide sufficient training and resources to increase the capacity of MAST, IBESR, BPM, and of judiciary officials to effectively enforce child labor laws.	2013 – 2015
	Collect and make publicly available information on the number of criminal investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Expand the hotlines operated by BPM and IBESR to facilitate reporting of child exploitation cases in areas beyond Port-au-Prince, including in rural areas; disaggregate complaints by the number of children in child labor.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Action Strategy for Education for All.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by— <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Eliminating school-related fees in public schools; ■ Increasing school infrastructure, especially in rural areas; ■ Addressing the specific educational needs of vulnerable populations, including recent arrivals from the Dominican Republic; ■ Providing teacher training; and ■ Ensuring school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates and uniforms to attend school. 	2009 – 2015
	Expand the National Child Protection Database, including by identifying displaced street children and children in domestic work.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing social programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, particularly in domestic work.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Honduras

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Honduras made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed an executive decree that re-established the National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Eradication of Child Labor and held workshops to build the capacity of five of its Regional Subcommissions. The Secretariat of Labor and Social Security continued to implement the Roadmap for the Eradication of Child Labor, including through trainings for coffee, chocolate, and pepper producers on child labor issues and through public awareness campaigns. In addition, the Government continued to expand key social programs, including the School Meals Program, which now reaches more than 1.3 million students in an effort to bolster school attendance. However, children in Honduras are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. The Government does not employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors to adequately enforce child labor laws across the country, and the Government lacks social programs to eliminate child labor in dangerous activities such as fishing, mining, and domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Honduras are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking. (1-11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Honduras.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2015, Honduras, like El Salvador and Guatemala, continued to be a principal source of the high numbers of unaccompanied children from Central America migrating to the United States.(43-45). Such children often lack economic and educational opportunities, and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and recruitment by gangs into illicit activities such as committing homicides and trafficking drugs.(46-48) Children emigrate to escape violence and extortion by gangs, in addition to searching for economic opportunities and family reunification. Once in route, they are also vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(46-48)

In Honduras, children are sometimes trafficked from rural areas into commercial sexual exploitation in urban and tourist destinations, such as the Bay Islands, San Pedro Sula, and Tegucigalpa. In addition, reports indicate that Honduran children are trafficked to other Central American countries and North America for commercial sexual exploitation.(49, 50) Reports indicate that gangs sometimes threaten families as a means to forcibly recruit children into their ranks, where boys are used in the commission of extortion, drug trafficking, and homicides and where girls are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.(42) Reports indicate that 20 percent of the Honduran population is of indigenous or African descent and that children from these groups are particularly vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(51, 52)

In Honduras, access to education is often limited. Reports indicate that approximately 220,000 children between the ages of 5 and 17 lack access to the educational system in practice.(17) More than 75 percent of these children live in rural areas, where lack of funding for schools and, in many cases, lack of any secondary schools remain a problem.(17) In urban areas, access to education is often hindered by widespread violence and the recruitment of children into gangs. In addition, school completion rates are low; many children fail to complete primary education and, according to 2011 national data, only 50.5 percent of girls and 37.5 percent of boys completed secondary school.(8, 53)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Honduras has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 12 of the Executive Agreement STSS-211-01; Article 276 of the Constitution (54, 55)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Articles 8, 13, and 21–23 of the Fundamental Law of Education; Articles 36 and 39 of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence (56, 62)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 7, 13, and 21–23 of the Fundamental Law of Education; Article 36 of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence; Article 171 of the Constitution (54, 56, 62)

* No conscription (55, 63)

The Constitution states that a child 16 years old or younger may not work unless it is necessary to sustain his or her family and the work does not interfere with schooling. Honduran statutes build upon the protections in the Constitution.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The Labor Code and the Code on Childhood and Adolescence prohibit children under age 14 from working in any circumstances and allow children ages 14 to 17 to work only with written parental consent and authorization from the Secretariat of Labor and Social Security (STSS).^(56, 57) The Code on Childhood and Adolescence states that children ages 14 and 15 may work no more than 4 hours per day and that children ages 16 and 17 may work no more than 6 hours per day; children ages 16 and 17 can also receive special permission from the STSS to work in the evening if it does not affect their schooling.^(56, 57, 64)

Article 120 of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence and Article 15 of the Executive Agreement STSS-211-01 set the minimum age for work at 14 in all undertakings and without exception for their size.^(55, 56) Article 32(1) of the Labor Code also prohibits children under the age of 14 from working. However, children working in agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than 10 workers are not covered by the Labor Code's minimum age protections because Article 2 of the Labor Code excludes these undertakings from its scope.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The ILO has recommended that the Government harmonize the Labor Code with the Code on Childhood and Adolescence to ensure that no child under age 14 is permitted to work, including in agriculture and stock-raising.⁽⁶⁵⁾

Article 8 of the Executive Agreement STSS-211-01 and Article 122 of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence both prohibit children under age 18 from engaging in dangerous activities. Article 22 of the Executive Agreement STSS-211-01 and Article 122(v) of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence allow the STSS to authorize minors ages 16 and 17 to perform dangerous activities if they have successfully completed relevant technical training at the National Institute of Vocational Training or a similar specialized technical institute and upon STSS verification that such minors are fully protected in these activities.(6, 55, 56)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat of Labor and Social Security (STSS)	Inspect labor conditions and enforce child labor laws.(8, 34)
Public Ministry's Office of the Special Prosecutor for Children (OSPC)	Prosecute crimes against children, including trafficking in children, hazardous labor, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation. Coordinate with Honduran National Police to investigate crimes and protect victims.(8, 34)
Public Ministry's Technical Agency for Criminal Investigations (ATIC)	Investigate and technically support criminal prosecutions conducted by the Public Ministry, including by the OSPC, such as human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and child pornography.(9, 33, 34)
Prosecutorial Task Force to Combat Criminal Smuggling of Unaccompanied Children and Trafficking in Persons	Investigate and prosecute criminal organizations that engage in the illegal smuggling of unaccompanied children and trafficking in persons. Created in 2014 and overseen by the Special Prosecutor Against Organized Crime and the Special Prosecutor for Children.(40, 66)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Honduras took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the STSS reported that it allocated approximately $1,325,000 for the salaries of its inspectors in the General Inspection Service; the overall level of funding for the labor inspectorate was unknown.(33) The STSS, labor union confederations, employer organizations, and human rights organizations have indicated that the level of funding and resources for the General Inspection

Honduras

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Service, which includes limited office space, telephones, computers, vehicles, and fuel for vehicles, is insufficient for inspectors to adequately perform their duties.(33, 34) Reports also indicate that the number of labor inspectors employed by the STSS is inadequate to inspect for child labor violations nationwide.(33) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Honduras should employ roughly 243 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(68-70)

During the reporting period, the STSS reported that 119 of its 135 labor inspectors, as well as other government officials, received training on child labor issues in 5 capacity-building workshops that were held in San Pedro Sula, La Ceiba, El Progreso, Comayagua, and Choluteca. The workshops focused on laws and international conventions on child labor, as well as on local strategies to prevent child labor, including its worst forms.(33, 71)

The official process for labor inspections in Honduras includes a preliminary visit, which may be unannounced and through which inspectors identify and inform employers of violations but do not issue fines or citations.(34, 64) Employers are given a specified number of days to remedy violations, typically between 3 and 60 days, depending on the type of violation.(64, 72, 73) Inspectors then conduct reinspections to determine whether the violations have been remediated. If during reinspections inspectors find that the violations have not been remedied, inspectors recommend that the Inspector General of the STSS issue penalties.(72) Reports indicate that if violations involving underage children or children working in hazardous conditions are found during a preliminary inspection, inspectors immediately report them to their supervisors.(74) This two-step inspection process puts an additional strain on the limited human and financial resources of the inspectorate and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote, rural areas where conducting the reinspections that can lead to penalties is especially challenging. Furthermore, a lack of publicly available information on the results of preliminary and subsequent inspections, including whether child labor violations are ultimately remedied, prevents a complete understanding of how effectively this inspection system enforces child labor laws.(75)

Although the total number of labor inspections conducted by the STSS in 2015 is unknown, the STSS conducted 6,680 inspections from January to March 2015.(76) The STSS also reported that it conducted 162 child labor inspections during the reporting period.(67) The STSS and civil society partners have reported that the number of labor inspections is insufficient to address the scope of labor violations in the country, including child labor violations.(33) Reports indicate that most of the inspections take place in the urban areas of Tegucigalpa and San Pedro Sula. Inspections in rural areas and in indigenous communities, where hazardous activities in agriculture and fishing or diving are concentrated, have been insufficient to address the scope of the problem.(7, 51, 64) Although information on the full range of economic sectors and localities in which inspections were carried out does not appear to be publicly available, the STSS reported that regionally-based labor inspectors conducted inspections of businesses engaged in agriculture and fishing, mining and construction, commercial and community services, hotels and restaurants, and transportation. Regionally-based inspectors reported finding 23 violations of child labor laws and regulations; research could not determine the total number of child labor violations found by all STSS inspectors nationwide.(33) The STSS reported that it authorized 212 minors aged 14 to 17 to work from January to September 2015; 101 of these authorizations were permanent and 111 were temporary.(77)

In Honduras, STSS regulations provide a mechanism and procedures for handling complaints regarding child labor. However, NGOs report that, in practice, these procedures are often inadequately followed, largely due to institutional weaknesses and a lack of resources.(33)

The STSS reported that it removed nine children from dangerous work during the reporting period: four in La Ceiba, three in Tegucigalpa, and two in Choluteca. The Directorate of Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (DINAF) is responsible for ensuring that victims of child labor receive government services. DINAF may also investigate complaints of child labor; however, there does not appear to be an effective mechanism by which the STSS and DINAF reciprocally refer cases of child labor to one another for labor law enforcement and the social protection of children, respectively.(33, 34) Research could not determine whether the nine children rescued by the STSS were referred to DINAF.

In December 2015, the Government of the Choluteca Department passed an ordinance that suspended all work at the Cuculmecca mine, due in part to a number of children who had been found engaged in dangerous work.(33, 71)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Honduras took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

In Honduras, the Public Ministry's Office of the Special Prosecutor for Children (OSPC) coordinates investigations of criminal cases involving the worst forms of child labor, including cases of forced child labor referred to it by the STSS.(33) Research could not determine the number of criminal investigators employed by the OSPC during the reporting period. Research could also not determine the level of funding for criminal law enforcement agencies in 2015. Reports indicate that the level of funding and resources available to the OSPC and other criminal law enforcement agencies are insufficient to address the worst forms of child labor nationwide.(33, 34) Despite these challenges, members of the Government's Inter-Institutional Commission Against Exploitation and Commercial Sex Trafficking (CICESCT) conducted or participated in more than 80 trainings and forums related to trafficking in persons issues in 2015.(33)

In 2015, the Public Ministry reported that it was investigating 18 cases of trafficking in persons and 22 cases of commercial sexual exploitation. Eleven cases, including nine for trafficking in persons and two for commercial sexual exploitation, were being prosecuted in the courts.(33) The Public Ministry also reached convictions in 13 cases: 7 for trafficking in persons and 6 for commercial sexual exploitation.(33) However, for 2015, it is not known whether the cases under investigation and prosecution, including those for which convictions were reached, involved children.(33) In Honduras, reports indicate that the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of the worst forms of child labor is not considered sufficient to address the problem.(34, 42)

In 2015, the Public Ministry reported that it rescued 17 trafficked girls, ages 14-17. Research could not determine whether criminal investigations or prosecutions were brought in these cases.(33) Victims of the worst forms of child labor, including trafficked children, are referred to DINAF for services; DINAF is also responsible for referring cases of suspected criminal conduct to the Public Ministry for investigation.(33, 34) Research could not determine how many children rescued by the Public Ministry received services through DINAF, or how many cases of suspected criminal conduct related to the worst forms of child labor were referred by DINAF to the Public Ministry.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Eradication of Child Labor*	Coordinate government policies and efforts on child labor issues, including the implementation of the Roadmap for the Eradication of Child Labor in Honduras. Chaired by the STSS and includes officials from eight government ministries, DINAF, the Supreme Court, and other government entities.(71, 78) Receives guidance from DINAF, which serves as the Commission's Secretary, as well as from a Technical Council, which is overseen by an Executive Secretariat.(71, 78) Oversee regional subcommissions, led by regional representatives of the STSS and DINAF, who implement national efforts locally.(78) In September 2015, the Government passed Executive Decree PCM-057-2015 through which the National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Eradication of Child Labor was re-established. (33, 71, 78) Also during the reporting period, the National Commission, led by the STSS, conducted five workshops to build the capacity of its regional subcommissions in San Pedro Sula, La Ceiba, El Progreso, Comayagua, and Choluteca.(33, 71)

Honduras

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Exploitation and Commercial Sex Trafficking (CICESCT)	Coordinate the efforts of government institutions and civil society groups to combat commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including of children.(37, 79) Consists of representatives from 52 organizations, including several government ministries and various NGOs.(37, 59, 79) Oversee 19 local CICESCT committees.(42)
Directorate of Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (DINAF)	Formulate, coordinate, and implement national plans that concern children, adolescents, and their families; monitor children's rights according to national legislation and other statutes; and coordinate state efforts with civil society and religious institutions to protect children.(80, 81) Created in 2014 through Executive Decree PCM-27-2014 to replace the Honduran Institute for Children and the Family (INHFA) and overseen by the Secretariat of Development and Social Inclusion (SEDIS).(80, 81)
Unaccompanied Children Task Force (UAC Task Force)	Provide for the safe repatriation of unaccompanied migrant children and coordinate their reintegration into their communities of origin. Led by the First Lady and comprising officials from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; DINAF; the Ministry of Human Rights, Justice, Governance, and Decentralization; the National Institute for Migration; and the Public Ministry, with specialized services for returnees provided by the Ministries of Labor, Education, Health, and Development and Social Inclusion.(40, 71, 75)
Ministry of Social Development	Coordinate social protection policies and the provision of services to vulnerable populations, including child and adolescent victims of violence, human trafficking, and sexual and economic exploitation.(8)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Reports indicate that in 2015 DINAF lacked sufficient resources to effectively carry out its mandate.(82)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Honduras has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Second National Plan of Action to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor (NPAPECL II) (2008–2015)	Aimed to prevent children from dropping out of school before they could legally work, to withdraw children who were engaged in the worst forms of child labor, and to ensure that the laws that protect children were enforced.(8, 79, 83) Established regional subcommittees in Choluteca, Comayagua, Danlí, El Progreso, Juticalpa, La Ceiba, and San Pedro Sula to oversee local implementation of NPAPECL II.(35)
Roadmap for the Eradication of Child Labor in Honduras	Aims to improve coordination of the Government's responses to child labor issues. Works at the national, regional, and sub-regional levels and incorporates issues related to poverty, education, health, and social mobilization.(8, 79, 84) Implemented by the STSS.(8, 33) In 2015, the STSS continued to implement the Roadmap for the Eradication of Child Labor in Honduras, including through trainings for coffee, chocolate, and pepper producers on child labor issues, as well as through public awareness campaigns on child labor through national and local media.(33, 71) During the reporting period, the Government also held workshops with representatives from government agencies, the private sector, and NGOs in Tegucigalpa, San Pedro Sula, La Ceiba, Choluteca, and La Esperanza to evaluate the implementation of the Roadmap for the period 2012–2014.(33, 71)
First Public Policy and National Action Plan on Human Rights	Aims to implement the Government's national and international human rights commitments, including those addressing child and forced labor.(34)
National Strategy to Reduce Poverty (ERP) (2001–2015)	Aimed to reduce poverty nationwide by fostering economic development and assisting vulnerable populations. Prioritized the elimination of child labor and increased school attendance, recognizing that both are necessary to national development.(85)
Education for All Plan (2002–2015)	Aimed to increase school attendance to ensure that all Honduran children completed primary schooling, recognizing that a lack of schooling both contributes to and is a consequence of child labor.(85)
Executive Decrees PCM-011-2011; PCM 056-2011	Mandate that all Secretariats and their dependencies incorporate the issue of child labor elimination and prevention into their institutional strategic planning in accordance with the framework of the National Plan.(3, 4, 86-88)
Country Vision (2010–2038) and National Plan (2010–2022)	Guide national policy to reduce extreme poverty. Both Plans address education, the creation of social protection systems, and child labor.(64, 84, 89)

Policy	Description
Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle	Aims to create economic growth, increase educational and vocational training opportunities for youth, and reduce violence in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, in part to decrease the number of unaccompanied minors who leave Honduras and other Central American countries for the United States and who are vulnerable to human trafficking. Signed by the presidents of each country in 2014.(90-92)
US–Honduras Labor Rights Monitoring and Action Plan (2015–2018)	Aims to improve the enforcement of labor laws, including laws related to child labor, by implementing legal and policy reforms, strengthening the STSS, enhancing enforcement activities, and increasing outreach efforts.(93)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on the eradication of child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South–South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Honduras at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(94-96)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and promote education and vocational training for youth.(97, 98) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(97, 99)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation in order to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by Honduras at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November, 2015).(100-102)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Honduras funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Voucher 10,000†	Government conditional cash transfer program that aims to reduce poverty by providing financial assistance to the head of household when children meet educational and health requirements.(79, 103) Objectives include the elimination of child labor.(7) In 2015, assisted 255,991 households.(71)
Program to Combat Child Forced Begging†	DINAF program to identify and rescue children who are subjected to forced begging. Includes a media campaign to raise awareness of child forced begging.(34)
The Friendly Hand Program†	SEDIS program that targets young people working in garbage dumps in San Pedro Sula and Tegucigalpa. Offers a holistic approach to removing these young people from the worst forms of child labor and offers training for children's family members.(39, 104-106)
Civic Saturdays†	Ministry of Education program that reintroduced a Saturday school day in 2013, in part to help reduce child labor. Topics covered during classes are Honduran culture, laws pertaining to children, and recreational activities.(7, 34, 107) Since 2014, components also include tutoring in math and reading.(34)
Better Life Program†	SEDIS program that seeks to assist 800,000 of the poorest families by improving their housing conditions with cement flooring, water filters, and private bathrooms. Targets many of the families whose children are engaged in begging on the streets.(33, 34, 75)
Program for the Reintegration of Returned Unaccompanied Migrant Children	Government program that provides assistance to unaccompanied migrant children who have been returned to Honduras. Participating ministries and agencies include the National Institute for Migration, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, DINAF, SEDIS, and the National Center for Social Sector Information.(67) In 2015, the Government reported assisting 4,650 returned migrant children.(71)
Program to Prevent Sex Tourism Involving Children and Adolescents†	Government program that aims to raise awareness and provide information, training, and a code of conduct for the tourism industry. Implemented by the Honduran Tourist Board, the Ministry of Tourism, and the Tourism Institute.(8, 108)

Program	Description
School Meals Program	Ministry of Education program, implemented with support from the WFP and in conjunction with the Office of the First Lady, that provides school lunches to students to improve nutrition and bolster attendance. In 2015, the program expanded from 1,220,000 students to 1,300,915 students.(34, 71, 75)
My First Job Program†	STSS program that connects disadvantaged youth with vocational opportunities.(37, 79, 109) Includes job skills and vocational training, internships, job placement, and public–private partnerships to support on-the-job training.(34, 37, 64)
Decent Work Country Program for Honduras (2012– 2015)	ILO program that aimed to ensure that workers’ rights and Honduran labor laws were upheld. For the period 2013 – 2015, aimed to implement measures from the Roadmap to help Honduras become child labor-free.(85)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II)*	USDOL-funded capacity building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in at least eight countries to build local and national government capacity to address child labor.(110) In Honduras, aims to build the institutional capacity of DINAF to carry out its mandates related to child protection. In 2015, CLEAR II completed a needs assessment on DINAF and assisted with donor coordination.(111)
Youth Pathways Central America (2015–2019)*	$13 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Catholic Relief Services to prevent at-risk youth, including returned migrant youth, in El Salvador and Honduras from engaging in hazardous work by providing them with vocational training, skills programs, employment services, and other holistic support services. Works with the Government, private sector stakeholders, and community organizations to improve job training models for at-risk youth, increase the number of job opportunities accessible to at-risk youth, and to support self-employment opportunities for youth.(112)
Bright Futures (2014–2018)	$7 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by World Vision to address child labor and improve labor rights and working conditions in Honduras, particularly in Valle, Intibucá, Choluteca, and the San Pedro Sula area.(113) Works with the Honduran Government, industry, civil society organizations, and other stakeholders to build the Ministry of Labor’s capacity to ensure remediation of labor law violations related to child labor, freedom of association, acceptable work conditions, and the right to organize and bargain collectively. Targets 5,150 children and youth for improved educational and livelihood opportunities.(113)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Honduras.(114)
Honduran Youth Alliance	USAID-funded project that focuses on long-term gang prevention, including social reintegration of former gang members. Works at the national and local levels with civil society and the private sector to advocate for policy reform, run public awareness campaigns, and provide support for outreach centers for vulnerable youth in high-risk communities, including through recreational, educational, and vocational opportunities.(115)
Strengthening Local Capacity to Build a Culture of Peace (FORPAZ)	USAID-funded project that aims to improve citizen security by turning schools into community centers that provide extracurricular activities for at-risk youth, as well as develop a media campaign that promotes a culture of peace.(115)
Improving Education for Work, Learning, and Success (METAS)	USAID-funded project that aims to increase educational opportunities for at-risk youth through alternative education programs that provide basic educational skills and workforce development training. Promotes increased access to educational opportunities for youth residing in areas known for drug trafficking and gang activity.(115)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2015)	$1.3 million, Government of Spain-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aimed to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in the Americas, including Honduras. Included the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(116)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million, Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Honduras.(116)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Honduras.

Although the Government of Honduras funds or participates in social programs that aim to eliminate child labor in forced begging, garbage scavenging, commercial sexual exploitation, and the illegal recruitment of children into gang-related activities, research did not identify programs that specifically target children working in other dangerous activities, such as fishing, mining, and domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Honduras (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that minimum age protections in the Labor Code extend to agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than 10 workers to ensure consistency with the protections provided in the Code on Childhood and Adolescence.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information on the level of funding for the labor inspectorate, disaggregated by region, publicly available.	2015
	Ensure adequate funding for the STSS, including resources for sufficient numbers of labor inspectors and labor inspections in areas where child labor is prevalent, such as rural areas and indigenous communities where children engage in hazardous activities in agriculture and fishing or diving.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure all labor inspectors receive training on child labor and make information about the initial training for new criminal investigators publicly available.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the two-step inspection system does not undermine effective child labor law enforcement and consider how the system may strain the limited resources of the inspectorate and whether measures should be adopted to reduce any such strain.	2011 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on all the sectors and localities in which inspections are carried out, as well as on the total number of violations found and sanctions imposed and collected as a result of inspections.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure adequate resources for STSS to follow the established procedures for responding to child labor complaints.	2015
	Ensure that there is an effective, reciprocal referral mechanism between the STSS and DINAF for the enforcement of labor laws and the provision of social services for child labor victims, and publicly report on the number of children rescued from child labor who receive social services.	2014 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on the level of funding for criminal law enforcement agencies that respond to crimes concerning the worst forms of child labor, including the number of criminal investigators assigned to child labor.	2015
	Ensure adequate resources are provided to the OSPC to effectively investigate and prosecute crimes concerning the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Make information on the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions regarding the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2015
Make information on the number of rescued children who receive social services, as well as the number of children referred by social services to criminal law enforcement agencies, publicly available.	2015
Coordination	Ensure DINAF has sufficient resources to effectively carry out its mandates regarding child protection issues.	2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by increasing funding to schools and building more schools, in particular in rural areas.	2014 – 2015
	Create government programs that aim to eliminate child labor in dangerous activities, such as fishing, mining, and domestic service.	2009 – 2015

[accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://www.uis.unesco.org/> Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
69. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
70. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, India made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. More than 35,000 children were rescued from hazardous work conditions and were rehabilitated by the National Child Labor Project. State governments located approximately 30,000 missing children, including many involved in the worst forms of child labor, during two rescue and rehabilitation operations. The Ministry of Women and Children Development launched the Website Khoya-Paya, which allows parents and the general public to report and search for missing children. However, children in India are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the production of hybrid cottonseed and garments. The legal framework is inconsistent with international standards, as it does not prohibit work for children under age 14 or proscribe hazardous work for children under age 18. The law also does not provide legal protection for children working for household-based enterprises.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in India are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the production of hybrid cottonseed and garments. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in India.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	1.4 (3,253,202)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.7

	Forced labor in producing garments, spinning cotton thread and yarn,* embroidering silver and gold into textiles (zari), carpets,* leather goods,* plastic goods,* bangles,* and footwear* (24-27, 75-81)
	Forced labor in domestic work and begging,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (17, 60, 61, 67, 82, 83)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (67, 84, 85)
	Use in armed conflict as a result of forced recruitment* (67, 86)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked within India for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic service.(17, 61, 67, 85, 87) Children are forced to work as bonded laborers in brick kilns to pay off family debts owed to moneylenders and employers.(88) Children from India’s rural areas migrate or are trafficked for employment in industries, such as spinning mills and cottonseed production, where they are forced to work in hazardous environments for little or no pay.(3, 24) Children from marginalized groups, such as low-caste Hindus, members of tribal communities, and religious minorities, are more likely to be victims of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation.(67)

Children are reportedly recruited to serve as soldiers in Maoist armed groups in the states of Bihar, Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, Maharashtra, Odisha, and West Bengal.(67, 86)

Although the primary education completion rate is high in India, many children still face barriers to accessing education. This is particularly due to high rates of teacher absenteeism, the lack of schools in remote and rural locations, and the lack of drinking water and functioning toilets in schools.(74, 89) Children from marginalized groups are sometimes subject to discrimination and harassment from their teachers.(90) Some schools reportedly refuse admission to those children.(74)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

India has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

* No conscription (104)

In 2015, the Government approved a new Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, which serves to consolidate and amend the previous juvenile justice law. The Act strengthens the legal framework prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities by criminalizing the use of children in the trafficking of drugs.⁽⁹⁵⁾ The Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act also mandates that any child in need of care and protection be brought before the Child Welfare Committee. This includes any child age 18 and younger who is found working in prohibited occupations and processes, in excess of permitted working hours, and outside permitted hours of work.⁽⁹⁵⁾

In 2012, amendments to the Child Labor Prohibition and Regulation Act were proposed to set the minimum age for work at 14, proscribe hazardous work for children under age 18, and increase penalties for violations.⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ In 2015, the proposed amendments were revised by the Ministry of Labor and Employment and were re-approved by the Cabinet. The most recent draft includes an exception that allows children under age 14 to work in nonhazardous occupations and outside of school hours.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ The bill awaits approval by both Houses of Parliament and final approval by the President of India.⁽¹⁰⁷⁾

The lack of a national minimum age for employment is inconsistent with international standards and probably increases the likelihood that young children will engage in child labor. The minimum age of 15 for hazardous work is also not consistent with international standards.⁽⁹¹⁾ Additionally, regulations for hazardous work do not extend to children working for their families in household-based enterprises. ⁽⁹¹⁾

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Government Labor Inspectorates	Enforce state and national labor laws. Refer cases in violation of the law to state police.(48) Refer children to Child Welfare Committees for protection and rehabilitation services.(95)
State and Local Police	Enforce laws pertaining to child labor and human trafficking.(108) Submit information to District Magistrates to determine if a case should be prosecuted in District Court.(109) Refer children to Child Welfare Committees for protection and rehabilitation services.(95)
Anti-Human Trafficking Units	Investigate cases of human trafficking. Established in 226 local police jurisdictions throughout India.(110)
Vigilance Committees	Rescue, release, and rehabilitate bonded laborers and family members. Assembled at the district and subdivision levels by the District Magistrate.(93)
State Revenue Department	Issue release certificates to free bonded laborers and family members from debt.(111)
District Court Magistrates	Prosecute cases involving violations of child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking laws in District Courts.(109)
Child Welfare Committees	Refer children in need of care and protection to welfare services providers under the Integrated Child Protection Scheme, including children involved in hazardous work, begging, and human trafficking, as well as those living on the streets.(95) Established in 619 of India's 660 districts.(112)
Ministry of Home Affairs	Provide guidance and training to all state governments by outlining the specific steps that state police and officials must take when handling cases of child trafficking and forced child labor.(113)
Central Bureau of Investigation's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit	Investigate and prosecute cases involving the kidnapping and trafficking of women and children by professional gangs operating across multiple states. Take on cases by request of, or in agreement with, state governments.(114, 115)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in India took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The Constitution of India gives state governments primary responsibility for the enforcement of labor laws.(108, 117) While the central government seeks to collect data on child labor violations and prosecutions, this information for 2015 was not yet released during the reporting period. The central government does not collect data on state government funding and employment of labor inspectors.(118) Labor inspection data represent only the number of inspections that were carried out under the Child Labor Prohibition and Regulation Act.(116)

The penalties for violating the Child Labor Prohibition and Regulation Act by employing children include imprisonment for 3 months to 1 year and/or fines ranging from $160 to $320. These penalties are insufficient to deter employers from employing children in the worst forms of child labor.(107)

During the reporting period, the minimum wage courts in Andhra Pradesh continued to order employers to pay 10 times the amount of the back wages owed to children working in hazardous and nonhazardous occupations, in addition to other penalties imposed for violating child labor laws.(119, 120)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in India took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	1,545 (123)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	37 (123)	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (95)	Yes (95)

The Constitution of India gives state governments primary responsibility for criminal law enforcement, including laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.(117) The central government does not systematically collect and publish data on criminal law enforcement across India's states and union territories.(107) The National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB) does collect data on investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions involving criminal activities. However, not all state governments report these data to the central government.(124)

In 2015, for the first time, the NCRB published data for the year 2014 on criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to crimes against children. In 2014, under the Child Labor Prohibition and Regulation Act, there were only 177 investigations, 74 violations, 74 new prosecutions and 48 continuing prosecutions from 2013, and 3 convictions.(122, 123) In 2014, there were 3,353 investigations, 1,655 violations, 471 new prosecutions and 2,161 continuing prosecutions from 2013, and 34 convictions for crimes related to commercial sexual exploitation of children.(122, 123) According to the NCRB, during 2014 there were 90 investigations, 39 violations, 37 new prosecutions and 79 cases continuing prosecutions from 2013, and 5 convictions in cases involving the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act; however, these data were not disaggregated for adults and children.(125)

During the reporting period, the National Human Rights Commission organized a regional workshop for the states of Uttar Pradesh and Uttarakhand to train law enforcement officials and Vigilance Committees on the laws prohibiting bonded labor and the process for identification, release, and rehabilitation of bonded laborers.(121)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Central Monitoring Committee	Supervise, monitor, and evaluate actions of the National Child Labor Projects (NCLPs) across India. Some state governments maintain State-Level Monitoring Committees to monitor the NCLPs in their states.(126)
Core Group on Child Labor	Coordinate the integration of social protection programs to reduce child labor. Composed of members from the Ministries of Human Resource Development; Women and Child Development; Housing and Urban Poverty Alleviation; Rural Development; Social Justice and Empowerment; Home Affairs; and community government (Panchayati Raj). Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE).(127)
Ministry of Home Affairs' Anti-Human Trafficking Cell	Implement the Government's nationwide plan to combat human trafficking by coordinating with states to establish Anti-Human Trafficking Units and train thousands of officials to combat human trafficking. Requires states to submit quarterly reports to this coordinating body.(48, 108)
National Human Rights Commission	Monitor implementation of the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act. Monitor state government actions to identify, release, and rehabilitate bonded laborers through quarterly submissions and exploratory and investigative missions.(128, 129)
National Commission for the Protection of Child Rights	Ensure that all laws, policies, programs, and administrative mechanisms are in accordance with the constitutional protections for children and the UN CRC. Inquire about child rights violations and failures to properly implement laws relating to child protection.(48, 130) Established in all 29 states and in 3 union territories, including Delhi.(131) During 2015, the Bihar State Commission traveled to districts throughout the state to meet with local government officials, village councils, and schools to raise awareness of the value of education.(17)

In 2015, 275 representatives from state and local governments, law enforcement agencies, and civil society, convened to discuss challenges and solutions to human trafficking trends in the Bihar-Jharkhand region, including child labor trafficking. The meeting was hosted by the United States Consulate General Kolkata and a local NGO.(132, 133)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of India has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy on Child Labor	Describes actions for combating hazardous child labor for children under age 14, including implementing legislation and providing direct assistance to children.(134)
State Action Plans on Child Labor	Details state governments' activities and programs to eliminate child labor from hazardous industries. Only 10 of 29 state governments have child labor action plans: Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, Jharkhand, Karnataka, Maharashtra, Meghalaya, Orissa, Tamil Nadu, and Telangana.(135-140)
National Policy for Children	Seeks to guide laws, policies, plans, and programs affecting children. Sets out the policy that state governments should take all necessary measures to track; rescue; and rehabilitate child laborers, trafficked children, and other vulnerable children; and to ensure that out-of-school children can access education.(141)
National Skills Development Policy	Includes provisions for alternative education and skill development for child laborers and children removed from the worst forms of child labor.(142)
Twelfth 5-Year Plan (2012–2017)	Details how the Government should implement its social protection schemes, including provisions for education, health, and increased livelihood support. Recommends amending the child labor law so that the minimum age for work is consistent with the compulsory education age.(143)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of India funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Child Labor Project (NCLP) Schemet	MOLE scheme that operates at the district level to identify working children under age 14, withdraw them from hazardous work, and provide them with education and vocational training. Sets up and administers NCLP schools, mainstreams children into formal education, and provides them with stipends, meals, and health checkups.(129) Comprises 5,167 NCLP training centers that accommodate approximately 235,000 children. Between April 1, 2015, and September 30, 2015, rehabilitated 35,148 child workers who were rescued from hazardous work conditions.(129)
Grants-in-Aid Schemet	MOLE scheme that funds NGOs to set up special training centers in districts that do not have an NCLP Scheme. Identifies child laborers, withdraws children from hazardous work, and provides former child laborers with vocational training and formal education.(129)
Rehabilitation of Bonded Labor Schemet	MOLE program that rescues and rehabilitates adult and child bonded laborers. Provides rescued bonded laborers with approximately $312 and offers assistance through additional social protection schemes.(129) Supports the funding of surveys at the district level on the prevalence of bonded labor and the rehabilitation of bonded laborers identified through the surveys.(144) As of May 31, 2014, more than $12 million was provided to state governments for the rehabilitation of 279,360 bonded laborers.(129)
Integrated Child Protection Scheme †	Ministry of Women and Child Development (MWCD) scheme that provides children in need of protection—including children withdrawn from hazardous work, forced labor, and human trafficking—with food and shelter in children's homes, shelter homes, and open shelters, as well as non-institutional care in foster homes and adoptive families. Provides rehabilitation and reintegration services to rescued children.(131)
Welfare of Working Children in Need of Care and Protection†	MWCD scheme that provides non-formal education and vocational training to street children and working children living in urban areas not covered by MOLE schemes.(145) From 2014 to 2015, projects funded by this scheme were reduced from 89 to 32, as it is being phased out because the Integrated Child Protection Scheme provides similar services under its open shelter component.(131)
Anti-Human Trafficking Activities†	MWCD-operated anti-human trafficking activities, in collaboration with NGOs and state governments.(146) Supports projects to help reintegrate, rehabilitate, and repatriate human trafficking victims, including children, through the Ujjawala scheme. Also provides short-term housing and rehabilitation services, including vocational training for women and adolescent girls, through the Swadhar Greh scheme.(146)
Childline†	MWCD-funded 24-hour toll-free emergency telephone service for children in distress. Includes Childline India Foundation-operated telephone service in cities across India, which connects children in need of assistance with hospitals, child welfare committees, shelter homes, and police.(131) In 2014–2015, granted $7.8 million to fund Childline services in 283 cities.(131)
TrackChild†	MWCD-implemented online portal that tracks missing children and facilitates information sharing about missing and vulnerable children among stakeholders, including child protection units, police stations, and Child Welfare Committees.(147) In 2015, launched the website Khoya-Paya (Lost and Found), which allows parents and the general public to report and search for missing children.(148)
Testing Methodologies to Support Informal Economy Workers and Small Producers to Combat Hazardous Child Labor in Their Own Sectors*	Irish Aid-funded, 1-year project implemented by the global trade union IndustriALL to build the capacity of informal economy workers to organize themselves and negotiate for better working conditions, including the elimination of hazardous child labor. Targets families working in the sandstone quarry areas of Rajasthan.(151)
Education for All Scheme (Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan)†	Ministry of Human Resource Development (MHRD) scheme that seeks to ensure the achievement of universal elementary education and addresses the education needs of 192 million children, including the provision of appropriate schooling facilities and qualified teachers.(149) Linked to NCLP scheme to ensure children's smooth transition from NCLP schools into the formal education system.(150)
Enhancing Teacher Effectiveness in Bihar Operation*†	Government of Bihar program supported by the World Bank to develop institutions for teacher education, increase the number of qualified elementary school teachers, and improve teacher accountability, including teacher attendance.(151)
Midday Meal Program†	MHRD scheme that provides free lunch to children in government-run primary and upper primary schools, and to NCLP students.(152)
National Rural Employment Guarantee Schemet	Ministry of Rural Development (MRD) scheme that provides 100 days of employment to every rural adult living below the poverty line. Research has shown that this program can lead to a reduction in child labor and increased household expenditures on children's education.(153, 154)
National Rural Livelihoods Mission †	MRD scheme that enables poor households to access gainful self-employment and skilled wage employment opportunities through social mobilization, institutional building, financial inclusion, and livelihood promotion.(155) Includes projects in 10 districts of 5 states that identify and rehabilitate bonded laborers through the provision of loans and the promotion of alternative livelihoods.(156)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of India.

In 2015, two campaigns were conducted by state governments to rescue and rehabilitate missing children, including many involved in the worst forms of child labor.(157) Many of India's missing children are trafficked for forced and bonded labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit activities.(158) In 2015, trained police personnel identified and rescued 9,146 children in January during Operation Smile and 19,742 children in July during Operation Muskaan.(157)

During the reporting period, state governments continued to conduct district-level surveys on bonded labor under the Rehabilitation of Bonded Labor Scheme. However, in surveyed districts, data were not available on the number of victims of bonded labor, including children.(150)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in India (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify ILO C. 182.	2014 – 2015
	Establish a minimum age for employment consistent with international standards.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the minimum age for employment in hazardous occupations to 18 to comply with international standards.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that relevant child labor laws and regulations apply equally to children working in formal businesses as well as household-based enterprises.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect and publish national-level data on labor law enforcement, including the number of labor inspectors and the number of penalties issued for child labor law violations.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the penalties for employing children in the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Collect and publish national-level data on the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Publish disaggregated data on the investigations and prosecutions involving violations for all the laws dealing with the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Work with state governments to develop State Action Plans for the elimination of child labor where they do not currently exist.	2011 – 2015
Social Programs	Reduce barriers to education access through programs to address teacher absenteeism, improve school facilities and sanitation, and promote equal access to education for children from marginalized communities.	2014 – 2015
	Make data and findings from district-level bonded labor surveys publicly available.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Indonesia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons adopted a new 5-year National Action Plan on Preventing Trafficking in Persons that includes the goal of improving social services for victims of human trafficking, including child victims, and strengthening the investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases. The Government also drafted a sectoral action plan on the elimination of child labor in domestic work, and the national child labor program helped to remove 16,000 children from work, enabling many children to return to school. However, children in Indonesia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in commercial sexual exploitation. The Ministry of Labor lacks the financial resources and personnel necessary to adequately enforce child labor laws throughout the country, especially in the informal sector. In addition, comprehensive data on law enforcement activities related to child labor, including in its worst forms, are not available for Indonesia.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Indonesia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-7) Data from the 2013 Indonesian Child Profile, published by the Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection, indicate that there are 3.6 million working children between ages 10 to 17.(8) Child labor is predominantly found in rural areas, with 12.5 percent of children ages 10 to 17 working, in comparison to 5.9 percent in urban areas.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Indonesia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	3.7 (816,363)
Attending School (%)	10-14 yrs.	92.4
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	2.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Labor Force Survey (Sakernas), 2010.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of palm oil, including growing,* fertilizing, cutting, spraying, collecting, and loading palm oil fruits* (1, 3, 4, 11-13)
	Planting, watering, harvesting, and applying fertilizer to tobacco (1, 5, 11, 12, 14)
	Production of rubber, including tapping rubber trees* and using acid to thicken latex* (1, 3, 12)
	Fishing, including processing fish and working on offshore fishing platforms† (1, 2, 6, 15-18)
Industry	Mining,† including gold and tin (1, 19-25)
	Construction,*† activities unknown (26)
	Production of footwear (including sandals) (1, 6, 8, 11)
	Production of bricks,* tile,* furniture,* and textiles* (27)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work,*† activities unknown (3, 28)
	Driving buses* (6, 29)
	Garbage scavenging*† (6, 30)
	Horse jockeying (31-34)
	Domestic work† (2, 3, 6, 35, 36)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including in the sale, production, and trafficking of drugs,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (16, 37)
	Domestic work* and fishing* as a result of human trafficking (1, 7, 38, 39)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 7, 16, 40, 41)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Indonesia is primarily a source country for child trafficking. Children, mostly girls, are trafficked internally and abroad for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work.(3, 7) Girls are also trafficked internally for commercial sexual exploitation near mining operations in several provinces and in the Riau Islands, West Papua, and Bali.(42)

Children are engaged in hazardous work in tin mining, especially in the informal mines of Bankga-Belitung Province. Working at dangerous heights and in deep pits that are prone to landslides, children dig and pan for tin, sometimes operating heavy machinery to separate tin deposits from unwanted materials.(22, 25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Indonesia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 34 of the Act on the National Education System (54)

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) enacted Ministerial Regulation No. 2/2015, which raises the minimum age for employment in domestic work from 15 to 18.(55, 56) The Government previously drafted a Domestic Workers Protection Bill outlining circumstances under which children ages 15 through 17 could perform non-hazardous domestic work; however, it has been on the legislative agenda for several years.(27, 55, 57)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Marine Affairs and Fisheries issued Ministerial Regulation No. 35/2015 on Human Rights Certification in the Fishery Industry, which supports laws protecting children from hazardous work on fishing ships by declaring that businesses in this industry must adhere to minimum age requirements and forced labor requirements.(27, 39, 58)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL) Directorate General of Labor Development and Supervision	Monitor and enforce child labor laws.(8) Provide information to employers on child labor laws and regulations, report child labor violations, and work with law enforcement officials to prosecute child labor violations.(11) Refer children found during inspections to the local Women's Empowerment and Family Planning Body or to the Integrated Service Center for Empowering Women and Children to access appropriate social services.(8)
National Police, Including Women and Children's Service Unit	Conduct inspections and raids and make arrests in response to all crimes, including those related to forced child labor and trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and children participating in illicit activities.(12, 16)
MOL Directorate of Norms Supervision of Women and Child Workers	Receive child labor complaints by telephone, fax, or e-mail.(8)
Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection (MOWECP)	Coordinate the provision of social services to children, including those involved in child labor. Operate a children's helpline to receive complaints on child protection.(36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Indonesia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in less developed economies, Indonesia should employ roughly 8,160 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country. The Government of Indonesia, the ILO, and NGO officials have also noted that labor inspectors are not provided with sufficient resources to carry out labor inspections effectively.(8, 36, 61-64) Due to these constraints, the MOL often encourages NGOs to take action directly with families and employers and to perform spot inspections on homes and workplaces to determine whether school-aged children are at school.(36) The Government reported that to gradually increase the number of labor inspectors, a yearly budget is allocated to provide basic training for at least 60 new employees.(60) The MOL provides 4 months of training to labor inspectors and 2 months of training to civil servant investigators, with specific instruction on issues relating to the worst forms of child labor.(36) The ILO also provides labor inspectors with a guidebook that addresses the worst forms of child labor.(36)

MOL inspectors have the authority to conduct unannounced inspections in all sectors; however, NGOs report that inspectors sometimes give companies advance notice of site visits, which may limit the effectiveness of those inspections.(36) In addition, despite the fact that inspectors have inspection authority in the informal sector, in practice, inspectors tend to focus their efforts on formal workplaces, while relying on NGOs and social workers to inform them of child labor violations in private homes or farms.(36) Children identified in situations of child labor during inspections can be referred to the local Women's Empowerment and Family Planning Body or the Integrated Service Center for Empowering Woman and Children to receive appropriate social services.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Indonesia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Special police units, which focus exclusively on crimes against women and children, are responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor. The Indonesian National Police provides training to members of these special units on the prevention and investigation of cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(36) In addition, the IOM facilitated several training workshops on combating human trafficking for Government officials, NGO representatives, and police in Sukabumi and Cianjur, two major source districts in West Java.(39) Although progress has been made in raising awareness about human trafficking among law enforcement authorities, the National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons reports indicate that some members of the police and prosecutors are still unfamiliar with anti-trafficking legislation and are unclear about their enforcement role, especially in remote regions.(27, 59, 66)

Comprehensive data on law enforcement activities related to the worst forms of child labor are unavailable; however, in 2015, officials initiated prosecutions against several alleged perpetrators of relevant crimes. These prosecutions involved a local government official who is accused of trafficking a girl to work as a nanny in Malaysia; an illegal women's shelter owner and alleged accomplices charged with recruiting at least four girls for commercial sexual exploitation in hotels in Jakarta; and two businessmen charged with operating an online prostitution syndicate that led to the commercial sexual exploitation of numerous women and girls.(39) All prosecutions were ongoing at the close of the reporting period.(39)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Provincial-level and District-level Child Labor Committees	Coordinate and monitor policy and program efforts and develop action plans to eliminate the worst forms of child labor at the local level.(67) The country has 33 provincial action committees and 162 district-level committees.(8)
National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the country's anti-trafficking efforts, including child trafficking.(8) Chaired by the Ministry for People's Welfare, with direction from the Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection. Coordinates the Task Force across 19 ministries and 5 state agencies.(65) Includes six working groups that develop action plans and budgets for programs to address trafficking in persons.(68) In 2015, facilitated the growth of local government task forces responsible for carrying out anti-trafficking activities at the district level, increasing the number of task forces from 166 in 2014 to 191 in 2015.(39)
Provincial and District Task Forces for the Prevention and Handling of Human Trafficking	Coordinate prevention and anti-trafficking efforts at the local level.(69) Commonly chaired by the local Integrated Service Center for Women and Children or the local Office of Social Affairs, and currently operating in 31 out of 34 provinces and 191 out of 497 districts.(39)
Subtask Force on the Prevention of Child Participation in Trafficking in Persons	Organize regular coordination meetings, provide technical training, and produce publications on the prevention of trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Ministry of Education and Culture Director for Early Childhood, Nonformal, and Informal Education, with members from six ministries, the police, JARAK (network of NGOs working for the elimination of child labor), the Indonesian Journalists Alliance, and the National Commission on Child Protection.(8)
Indonesian Child Protection Commission	Disseminate information related to child protection, including child labor legislation; receive complaints, including those that pertain to child labor; monitor and evaluate the implementation of child protection efforts; and provide feedback on child protection to the President of Indonesia.(70)

During the previous reporting period, the Government dissolved the National Action Committee (NAC) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor pursuant to the adoption of the Roadmap for the Acceleration of Making Indonesia Free of Child Labor by 2022 and reverted the functions of the NAC to the MOL.(59) Although the Minister has publicly affirmed the MOL's commitment to mainstream the elimination of child labor into broader national policies, as called for in the Roadmap, the Government no longer maintains a formal mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor.(36) Provincial and district-level action child labor committees have not been officially dissolved, but research found that many are no longer functioning due to lack of funding from local governments.(27)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Indonesia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan (NAP) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2002–2022)	Provides a policy framework for the elimination of child labor in three operational phases.(12, 71-73) Specific activities include improving data collection on the worst forms of child labor, increasing awareness-raising and advocacy efforts, and formulating regulations and policies to prohibit the worst forms of child labor.(46)
National Action Plan on Preventing Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)†	Guides the work of the National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons. Includes the following goals: improve health and social rehabilitation services and repatriation and social reintegration services for human trafficking victims; update anti-human trafficking regulations; strengthen the investigation of human trafficking cases and the prosecution of perpetrators; and enhance coordination among task force members and between national and international stakeholders.(39)
Roadmap Toward a Child Labor-Free Indonesia in 2022 (2014–2022)	Supports implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Aims to mainstream the elimination of the worst forms of child labor into relevant national policies; strengthen coordination between stakeholders at the national, provincial, and district levels; and enhance the capacity of stakeholders to eradicate child labor.(8, 74) Jointly developed by the Ministry for National Development Planning, the ILO, international organizations, local NGOs, and the MOL, which serves as the lead coordinator.(8) Integrated into the Mid-Term Development Plan as part of a comprehensive policy to address child labor.(36) In 2015, inaugurated a new Child-Labor Free industrial zone in Gianyar, Bali. The MOL may establish Child Labor-Free Zones following a series of targeted inspections in the area in question.(36)
Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (ACTIP) (2015)†	Establishes a regional anti-trafficking framework among 10 ASEAN member states, including Indonesia, to improve coordination on investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases and enhance assistance for victims. Unanimously adopted in June 2015, the Convention was signed by the relevant heads of state on November 21, 2015.(75, 76)
UN Partnership for Development Framework (2011–2015)	Tracked the Government’s ability to implement the NAP effectively. Measured the number of district action committees and action plans formed, the number of provincial child labor monitoring systems developed, and the number of district child labor committees with youth and women representatives.(77)

In 2015, a body of tripartite constituents developed a draft sectoral action plan to eliminate child labor in domestic work. This action plan has been submitted to the relevant authorities and it awaits review and potential endorsement.(78) Also during the reporting period, the Minister of Labor declared that all districts and cities in Indonesia must be in compliance with the child-friendly district guidelines established in the Law on Child Protection by 2022. The guidelines require districts to expand access to education and public health services for vulnerable children and to enforce child labor laws, among other child protection measures.(36)

The National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons notes that some Provincial and District Task Forces to Combat Trafficking in Persons lack plans of action to effectively guide efforts to eliminate the trafficking of women and children.(27, 66)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Indonesia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Reducing Child Labor to Support the Family Hope Program (Pengurangan Pekerja Anak-Program Keluarga Harapan)†	MOL program that removes child laborers ages 7 to 15 from their workplaces and temporarily places them in shelters to receive counseling, remedial education for reentry into school, and financial assistance of approximately $21 each month.(8, 12, 79) In 2015, the program reached its target of 16,000 child laborers removed from work during the year, and the MOL reports that 90 percent of those children returned to school.(36)

Program	Description
Family Hope Program (Program Keluarga Harapan)†	Ministry of Social Affairs (MOSA)-managed conditional cash transfer program, which provides services for child laborers who have dropped out of school. Targets the poorest 5 percent of the population and provides cash assistance to families that meet the education criteria, including school enrollment and attendance.(68, 80, 81) In 2015, assisted 3,500,000 families.(27) Research shows that conditional cash transfer programs have slightly reduced child labor in Indonesia.(82)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the National Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research, and strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Indonesia. In 2015, published the results of a sectoral survey on child labor in tin mining.(25, 83)
PROMOTE: Decent Work for Domestic Workers to End Child Domestic Labor (2012–2017)	$5 million, USDOL-funded 4-year program implemented by ILO-IPEC. Expands legal protections for child domestic workers, builds capacity of domestic worker organizations to address child domestic work, and promotes national and regional knowledge, awareness, and research of domestic service.(35) In 2015, convened a workshop during which key stakeholders developed a draft sectoral action plan to eliminate child labor in domestic work in Indonesia.(55)
Combating Child Labor Through Skills Training for Older Children (2014–2015)	$2.6 million, Government of the Netherlands-funded, 1-year global project implemented by the ILO that aimed to combat child labor by enhancing access to decent work for children who have reached the minimum age of employment.(84, 85) In Indonesia, key achievements included the development of a training model to build the capacity of skills training providers and the provision of vocational training for children ages 15–17 who are engaged in or are vulnerable to child labor.(85)
Child Trafficking Services†	MOSA and other government agency program that provides social rehabilitation and shelter services for child victims of trafficking.(65, 66)
West Java and Bandung Municipality Street Children Program†	West Java provincial government and municipality of Bandung programs to assist street children.(71)
Child Social Welfare Program (Program Kesejahteraan Sosial Anak)†	MOSA-administered conditional cash transfer program, which provides conditional cash transfers to street children, abandoned children and infants, children facing criminal charges, and children with disabilities. Also provides grants to implementing partners for the reintegration of trafficked children.(8, 12, 16)
Family Welfare Card (Kartu Keluarga Sejahtera)†	Ministry of People's Welfare initiative to integrate all cash transfer assistance programs into one government program. Provides a bank account to each household in the assistance programs, including the fund for children's education and health.(8)
Social Protection Cards (Kartu Perlindungan Sosial)†	Government program that provides a social protection card for beneficiaries to access social protection programs, such as Unconditional Cash Transfer, Rice for the Poor, and Education Scholarships.(80)
Unconditional Cash Transfer Program (Bantuan Langsung Semetara Masyarakat)†	Government unconditional cash transfer program to enhance livelihoods of the poorest families.(80)
Rice for the Poor (Raskin)†	Government-subsidized food program that provides rice for the poorest 25 percent of households.(80)
Block Grants for Schools (Bantuan Operasional Sekolah)†	Government block grant program that compensates schools for the loss of income incurred when waiving fees to ensure free education for poor and vulnerable children in primary, junior secondary, and senior high schools.(12, 86) In 2015, provided approximately $411.3 million in grants to senior high schools and senior vocational schools to accelerate progress toward the government goal to achieve a 97 percent senior high school attendance rate by 2020.(8, 27)
Minimum Service Standards of Basic Education Program	Aims to improve access to quality public education by limiting the distance of elementary and junior secondary schools from children's households, by specifying minimum teacher-student ratios, and by identifying minimum teacher education qualifications.(87)
UNICEF Country Program (2011–2015)	Program that supported the Government of Indonesia in realizing the rights of children, especially the most vulnerable. Contributed to priorities identified in the National Plan of Action for Children and Women and the Government National Midterm Development Plan (2010–2014).(88)

† Program is funded by the Government of Indonesia.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Indonesia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce and provide sufficient funds for labor inspections.	2010 – 2015
	Strengthen enforcement capacity to conduct unannounced inspections and to address child labor protections for children who are self-employed and children who are working in the informal sector.	2014 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the level of funding for the labor inspectorate; the number of child labor law investigations conducted, the number of violations found, and the number of penalties imposed and collected; and the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions for crimes relating to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Provide additional training for police officers and prosecutors on anti-trafficking legislation and clarify their roles and responsibilities in enforcing these laws.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Clarify how the Government of Indonesia coordinates interagency efforts to address the worst forms of child labor at both the national and local level, following the liquidation of the National Action Committee.	2015
Government Policies	Create provincial and district plans of action on the elimination of trafficking of women and children.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the types of activities carried out by children working in construction and street work to inform policies and programs.	2014 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable

- indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
64. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Iraq made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a new Labor Law, which establishes a new complaint mechanism at the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs to receive and investigate child labor complaints. The Government also provided financial support for low-income families with the condition that their children remain at school. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict. Child labor laws are not sufficiently enforced and criminal law enforcement information remains unavailable. The Government continues to lack programs that target children in relevant worst forms of child labor, particularly those used by armed groups.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Iraq are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict.(1-9)
Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Iraq.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	5.3 (454,330)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	75.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2007, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of rice,* wheat,* orchard fruits,* and vegetables* (12, 13)
	Herding water buffalo* and other livestock* (12, 13)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (12, 13)
Industry	Making bricks* (6, 12, 14, 15)
	Working in steel factories* (15)
	Working in plastic recycling factories* (14)
Services	Street work, including selling goods, washing cars, sweeping the streets,* picking up trash,* begging,* and shining shoes* (12, 13, 15-18)
	Working at gas stations and auto repair shops (6, 13, 16, 19)
	Scavenging at dump sites* (13, 20)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 7, 21)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking* (2, 22)
	Use in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced recruitment (1-9)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of trafficking (2, 15, 22-25)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Iraq

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Da'esh (also known as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL)) recruited children and used them in combat operations, including as informants, human shields, suicide bombers, bomb makers, executioners, in creating propaganda materials, and manning checkpoints.(1-3, 6, 8) In 2015, Da'esh continued to abduct boys and forced them to participate in military training.(26) Da'esh also continued forced military training of boys abducted in Iraq in 2014, who were then trafficked to Syria.(27, 28) UN and media reporting indicate that armed groups involved in the conflict against Da'esh recruited and used children in combat, including as part of the Popular Mobilization Forces.(1, 4, 8) Research found no evidence of the Government recruiting children into the Iraqi Security Forces.(6) According to UN reports, in June 2015 the Ministry of Youth and Sports sent a letter to all directorates encouraging the use of youth clubs for military training of children.(29)

Throughout the country, some girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation by their families, who seek financial gain through temporary marriages.(2, 24) This practice involves a dowry paid to the girl's family and an agreement to dissolve the marriage after a predetermined length of time.(30) Da'esh fighters subjected girls, primarily from the Yezidi community, but also from other ethnic and religious groups, to commercial sexual exploitation, forced marriages, or forced domestic work in Iraq and Syria.(21, 31-33) Limited evidence points to trafficking of girls from Iran into the Iraqi Kurdistan Region for commercial sexual exploitation.(7)

Children faced barriers accessing education because of attacks on schools, including the targeting of teachers and school personnel, and the use of schools as shelters by internally displaced persons (IDPs) and as detention centers by Da'esh.(5, 22, 25) As of August 2015, approximately 42 percent of Syrian refugee children remained out of school in Iraq.(34) For these refugees, the majority of whom live in the Kurdistan Region, access to education was limited because of school-related costs, such as transportation and uniforms, as well as security concerns, and language issues because most classes in the Kurdistan Region are taught in Kurdish and not Arabic.(35)

In 2015, Iraq continued to witness large-scale violence perpetrated by Da'esh. As of June, Iraq hosted more than 295,000 refugees and asylum seekers, from Syria and elsewhere, and more than 3.9 million IDPs, including children.(36) Refugee and IDP children are more vulnerable to child labor.(6)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Iraq has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Iraq and Kurdistan Region	Yes		Articles 91.3(c) and 91.4 of the Labor Law (37)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Iraq and Kurdistan Region	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Iraq and Kurdistan Region	Yes	18	Section 6(2) of the CPA Order 22 (41)
Compulsory Education Age	Iraq	Yes	12‡	Articles 8.1.1 and 11.1 of the Education Law; Article 1.3 of the Law on Compulsory Education (42, 43)
	Kurdistan Region	Yes	15	Articles 6 and 10 of the Kurdistan Regional Government Ministry of Education Law (44)
Free Public Education	Iraq	Yes		Article 34.2 of the Constitution; Article 9 of the Education Law (42, 45)
	Kurdistan Region	Yes		Article 10 of the Kurdistan Regional Government Ministry of Education Law (44)

* No conscription (41)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

The Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) must endorse laws passed by the Government of Iraq after 1991 for such laws to enter into force in the Kurdistan Region, which comprises the provinces of Erbil, Dahuk, and Sulaymaniyah.(21, 46) Because the KRG has not endorsed the Law to Combat Human Trafficking, it is not enforced in the Kurdistan Region.(44, 47) Research could not find a KRG law prohibiting child trafficking.

Article 1 of the Law to Combat Human Trafficking requires force or coercion to be present as an element of the crime of child trafficking, which is inconsistent with Article 3 of the Palermo Protocol.(39)

The Government adopted a new Labor Law in 2015, which entered into force in 2016, and eliminates the prohibition on using children in illicit activities, which previously existed in the old Labor Law. It also eliminates the prohibition on compulsory recruitment of children for armed conflict.(48) Therefore, children who are being compulsorily recruited and used in armed conflict are not protected.

Under Articles 8 and 11 of the Iraqi Education Law and the Law on Compulsory Education, children are required to attend primary school for 6 years, which is typically up to age 12.(42, 43, 49) This standard makes children ages 12 to 15 particularly vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to be in school, yet they are not legally permitted to work. In the Kurdistan Region, children are required to attend primary school for 9 years, which is typically up to age 15.(44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA)	Enforce child labor laws and regulations through its Child Labor Unit. Conduct research on child labor through its Childhood Welfare Authority.(6)
Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs	Enforce child labor laws and regulations in the Iraqi Kurdistan Region. KRG Ministry of Interior's Police units play a supporting role in the daily activities of the Ministry.(6)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor. Collaborate with MOLSA, the Iraqi Industries Federation, and the Confederation of Trade Unions to conduct inspection campaigns.(6) Maintain a hotline for victims of human trafficking that is routed directly to the Ministry's Anti-Trafficking Department.(6)
KRG Committee in Erbil*	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(7)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Iraq took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

‡ Data are from January 1, 2015 to November 30, 2015.

Although information on MOLSA's exact funding was unavailable, MOLSA officials stated that their funding was limited, and that in 2015 they lacked sufficient transportation and fuel to effectively enforce child labor laws. In addition, due to the conflict against Da'esh, MOLSA had no access to large areas of the country, including the Anbar and Ninewa provinces.(6) In 2015, MOLSA employed 120 labor inspectors to enforce child labor laws outside the Kurdistan Region.(6) According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Iraq should employ about 593 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country, and therefore, the number of labor inspectors in Iraq does not satisfy this recommendation.(6, 50-52) Due to the conflict, however, it is unclear how many workers may be in territories outside of the Government control.

The Labor Law of 2015 requires MOLSA to establish a child labor complaint mechanism and investigate complaints.(48) Child labor law enforcement data in the Kurdistan Region and the number of inspectors in the KRG Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs are unavailable.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Iraq took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Violations Found	Unknown	Unknown (6)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	Unknown (6)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	Unknown (6)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Unknown	Unknown

In 2015, the Ministry of Interior employed two to three inspectors for each of the 15 provinces, excluding the three provinces in the Kurdistan Region and areas under Da'esh control.(6) The Ministry of Interior held training sessions for its staff on identification of human trafficking victims. Government officials, including KRG representatives, participated in training sessions on identifying human trafficking victims and investigating such cases.(7) While comprehensive information was unavailable, research found evidence that authorities investigated six individuals suspected of child trafficking in Baghdad. The Government convicted one individual of child trafficking in Karbala.(7)

KRG officials charged three individuals suspected of child trafficking.(7) Research did not discover other information of criminal law enforcement in the Kurdistan Region. In 2015, child victims of human trafficking and forced labor faced prosecution for acts committed while being trafficked and underwent deportation proceedings.(2, 32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interministerial Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate overall government efforts to combat child labor, research policies regarding child labor, and design and manage projects. Members include MOLSA; and the Ministries of Interior; and Ministries of Health; Education; and Foreign Affairs.(6)
Joint Committee on Street Children	Coordinate the implementation of measures for removing and rehabilitating street children. Members include MOLSA and the Ministry of Interior.(23)
Central Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Oversee implementation of the Law to Combat Human Trafficking and serve as the national coordinating body on trafficking in persons. Includes representatives from the Ministries of Health; Finance; Migration and Displacement; MOLSA; Human Rights; and Justice; as well as the State Ministry for Women's Affairs; the Council of Ministers Secretariat; the High Commission on Human Rights; and a representative from the KRG Ministry of Interior.(6) In August 2015, the Prime Minister abolished the Ministries of Human Rights and State Ministry for Women's Affairs.(33) In 2015, the Committee met several times in the presence of KRG representatives. KRG officials stated that despite attending meetings, the Committee did not fully engage them in all efforts to combat human trafficking.(7) The Committee held training courses on combatting human trafficking and the provision of assistance to victims. It formed a working group to draft the procedures for referring victims of human trafficking to assistance.(7)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Iraq has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Coalition Provisional Authority Order No. 89	Calls for programs to be designed to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor; to provide direct assistance for the removal of children in these labor situations; and to ensure that children have access to basic education.(37) The Labor Law of 2015, which came into effect in February 2016 and repealed Order 89, includes many of the same protections.(48)
National Action Plan on Human Rights	Establishes goals and discrete steps to be taken in specific timeframes to promote and protect human rights as a core value, in line with recommendations adopted by Iraq following its submission to the Universal Periodic Review. The Action Plan recognizes Iraq's obligations to international conventions, including the CRC and its optional protocols and ILO C.182 and C.138 with respect to child labor, and states that such conventions may be applied in Iraqi courts.(53) Sets an action plan to fulfill the right to education in Iraq, including through financial incentives to families living in poverty, to encourage completion of primary- and secondary-level education.(53)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Iraq funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Rights Hotline	Operated by the KRG to receive calls for advice or complaints with respect to children's rights.(54)
Informal Education‡	Government-supported informal education systems, including evening school programs and fast education mode, to encourage children ages 12 to 18 who have dropped out of school to continue their education.(23)
Programs for Vulnerable Populations	Programs funded by international organizations and foreign donors, including the United States, to address the needs of vulnerable populations, such as IDPs and refugees at risk of the worst forms of child labor.(47)
Shelters for Human Trafficking Victims‡	MOLSA-operated shelter for human trafficking victims, including children involved in the worst forms of child labor in Baghdad; other facilities are in Basrah, Ninewa, and Kirkuk provinces.(47) The KRG operated three shelters for female victims of human trafficking and violence.(19)
Action to Protect and Assist Vulnerable and Exploited Migrant Workers (2013-2016)	$1.8 million EU and Italian Ministry of Interior-funded, 2-year regional project implemented by the IOM in five countries to build the capacity of governments and civil society organizations to apply international standards to migrant workers, provide assistance to migrant workers, raise awareness among the workers of their rights, and reduce bias and discrimination in the general public against migrant workers.(55, 56)

The Government opened a shelter in Baghdad for male and female victims of human trafficking.(33)

In 2015, the Inter-ministerial Committee on Child Labor provided vocational training to children ages 15 to 17 to prevent their involvement in child labor. The Committee also held a child labor awareness-raising campaign targeting street-based children, and included these children in its social services programs.(6) MOLSA provided financial assistance to low-income families with the condition that their children remain at school.(6)

Research found no evidence of specific programs targeting children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, brickmaking, or armed conflict.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Iraq (Table 9).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the laws prohibit child trafficking in all parts of Iraq, including the Kurdistan Region.	2015
	Ensure that child trafficking laws do not require a showing of force, coercion, or threat, in accordance with international standards.	2015
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits compulsory recruitment of all children under 18, the voluntary recruitment of children under 15 by non-state groups, and the use of all children in hostilities.	2013 – 2015
	Increase the age of compulsory schooling to at least 15, the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Make publicly available information on the funding of the labor inspectorate; the training for labor inspectors; the number of inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review; the numbers of penalties and whether they were collected; whether routine inspections were targeted; and whether a reciprocal referral mechanism exists between labor authorities and social services.	2011 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors and ensure adequate funding to effectively enforce legal protections against child labor, including its worst forms.	2011 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on child labor inspections in the Kurdistan Region.	2011 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on the training of criminal investigators, the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions, and whether a reciprocal referral mechanism is in place between criminal authorities and social services.	2013 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on criminal law enforcement on the worst forms of child in the Kurdistan Region.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that child victims of human trafficking are not prosecuted.	2015
	Ensure sufficient coordination between the central Government and the Kurdistan Regional Government, particularly in efforts to combat human trafficking.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure children are discouraged from enlisting into armed groups and receiving military training.	2015
	Ensure universal access to education, including for refugee and internally displaced children.	2013 – 2015
	Implement programs to address relevant child labor sectors in Iraq, such as commercial sexual exploitation and brickmaking.	2010 – 2015
	Implement programs to demobilize and reintegrate children engaged in armed groups.	2009 – 2014

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

52. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Jamaica

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Jamaica made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government approved the National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, which outlines goals for assisting victims of human trafficking and child labor and increasing awareness of trafficking violations through public education. In addition, the Government's special Multi-Agency Strategic Development Child Protection Program ran a center to assist victims of the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Jamaica are engaged in child labor, including in street work and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Although the Government has laws prohibiting the use of children in some illicit activities, it does not prohibit the use, procurement, and offering of children for drug trafficking and production. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Jamaica are engaged in child labor, including in street work.(1, 2) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(2-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Jamaica.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	5.4 (28,298)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	99.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		96.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's Analysis of Statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (2, 3, 7)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (1, 8)
Industry	Construction,*† activities unknown (2)
Services	Garbage scavenging,* items include scrap metal* (2, 9)
	Working in shops and markets (1, 2, 8)
	Street work, including begging† and vending (1, 3, 10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 7, 10, 11)
	Forced labor in domestic work (2)
	Use in Illicit activities, including executing financial scams* and serving as drug couriers and dealers* (12-14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jamaica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 34(1) of the Child Care and Protection Act (15, 16)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 34(3) of the Child Care and Protection Act (15, 16)
Prohibitions of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 34(3)(b) and 41 of the Child Care and Protection Act of 2004; Section 55 of the Factories Act: Docks (Safety Health and Welfare) Regulations; Section 18 of the Mining Act; Section 49 of the Factories Act: Building Operations and Works of Engineering Construction Regulations (15-19)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 4 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prevention, Suppression and Punishment) Act; Section 10 of the Child Care and Protection Act (16, 20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 4 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prevention, Suppression and Punishment) Act; Section 10 of the Child Care and Protection Act (16, 20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 4 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prevention, Suppression and Punishment) Act; Section 3 of the Child Pornography (Prevention) Act; Section 40 of the Sexual Offences Act (20-27)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Section 18(2) of the Defense Act (28, 29)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Section 21 of the Education Act (30)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 13 of the Jamaican Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms (22, 31)

* No conscription.(29)

Although Section 40 of the Child Care and Protection Act prohibits the use of children in selling tobacco and alcohol, it does not address using, procuring, or offering a child for producing and trafficking drugs.(16) Likewise, the Dangerous Drugs Act prohibits the illegal manufacture and distribution of dangerous drugs, such as opium, morphine, and cocaine; however, it does not specifically penalize using, procuring, or offering a child for the production and distribution of these dangerous drugs.(32)

The Child Care and Protection Act establishes the minimum age for employment at age 15, but allows children ages 13 to 14 to engage in light work; however, the Government has not finalized the list of occupations and hours considered as light work. The draft list includes hair braiding, clerical work, newspaper vending, supermarket packing, and household chores.(15, 16, 33) Although the Government has some prohibitions on hazardous work for children in specific industries, in 2010, the Government drafted the Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act that would introduce a comprehensive list of prohibitions on hazardous work for children, but the OSH Act has yet to be adopted. The list under review by Parliament would specify 45 hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18. (3, 25, 26, 33) The draft statute identifies those hazardous occupations, which include, among others, fishing at sea, working on construction sites, participating in the production of pornography, and engaging in illicit activities that involve weapons. If adopted, the OSH Act will increase current fines for employers who illegally use child labor and enable labor inspectors to access formerly prohibited workplace environments in the informal economic sector. (3, 10, 33)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS), Child Labor Unit and the Occupation Safety Health Department	Enforce and administer child labor laws in the formal economy. (3, 10, 34) Developed tracking system through flow charts to aid multiple-agency responses. Share information with all other agencies involved in child labor issues. (34)
Child Development Agency (CDA)	Enforce child labor laws, monitor related violations, and oversee efforts to address the problem. (3, 10)
Office of the Children's Advocate (OCA)	Promote and protect the rights of children by establishing strategic partnerships to serve the best interest of the child.
Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF)	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. Includes a Trafficking in Persons Unit that investigates and prosecutes cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (10, 35, 36)
Center for the Investigation of Sexual Offences and Child Abuse	Investigate and prosecute sexual offenses and child abuse. Work in victim rehabilitation and conduct public education programs. Branch of the JCF. (37)
Office of the Children's Registry (OCR)	Receive complaints and reports of suspected cases about child abuse.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Jamaica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from March 30, 2014, to April 1, 2015.

‡ Data are from April 1, 2015, to March 31, 2016.

According to the ILO standard of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Jamaica should employ about 33 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(38-40) In addition, labor inspectors conduct inspections only in the formal sector, such as factories, building sites, docks, and ships.(1) The Office of the Children’s Advocate (OCA) serves as a monitoring and public awareness-raising agency, while the Office of the Children’s Registry (OCR) is the repository for mandatory reports of child abuse.(1, 8) The Government has established a system to file and respond to complaints about child labor. During the year, the number of complaints received through the OCR 24-hour hotline has risen. The OCR receives reports of offenses against children, including child labor, child abuse, and human trafficking.(8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Jamaica took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The Government provided training to the Jamaica Constabulary Force officers on child labor laws and the tools and training to carry out investigations and prosecutions.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MLSS Program for the Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate the Government’s child labor policies and programs and identify gaps in legislation across ministries. The MLSS collaborates with the other ministries, such as the Ministry of Youth and Culture (OCA, OCR, CDA); the Ministry of Justice (National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons); and the Ministry of National Security, to address the legislative gaps.(41)
National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons	Facilitate information exchanges between government agencies and external stakeholders and create momentum for counter-trafficking efforts. Oversee the implementation of the country’s National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.(26, 36) Led by the Ministry of Justice and includes representatives from the Ministries of National Security and Foreign Affairs; the JCF; the Department of the Public Prosecutor; and representatives from the Ministries of Health, Education, Labor, and Youth and Culture.(4, 10) Meets regularly with the JCF, Director of Public Prosecutions, and other ministries.(34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Jamaica has established policies on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on Child Labor (2012–2015)	Aims to strengthen current legislative frameworks to address all forms of child labor, specifically focusing on children engaged in domestic service, prostitution, forced labor, and hazardous work in the agricultural and fishing industries. Identifies four primary objectives: (1) to collect current and reliable data on child labor, (2) to establish public awareness and sensitize the Jamaican people to the problem, (3) to improve the Labor Ministry personnel capacity to identify child laborers, and (4) to work with trade unions and the Jamaican Employers' Federation to raise awareness among employees.(1, 10, 13, 42)
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2018)†	Targets law enforcement officials to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, conducts public awareness campaigns, and implements outreach programs.(43)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through efforts by the signatories to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor in October 2013 and signed by Jamaica at the ILO 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru, October 2014.(44-46)
Compulsory Education Policy*	Ensures that all children between ages 3 and 18 have access to a learning institution or vocational training program. Includes the Career Advancement Program, which provides children ages 16 to 18 with an additional 2 years of schooling upon completion of the 11th grade.(47)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In December 2015, Jamaica participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico, participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015, which aims, in part, to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and promote education and vocational training for youth.(48, 49) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(49, 50)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Jamaica funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor through Education Project (2008–2015)	Jointly launched by the European Commission and the ILO to combat child labor through education in 12 African and Caribbean countries and the Pacific group of states.(51) The Government worked closely with NGOs RISE and Children First to provide direct support to children engaging and at risk of engaging in child labor activities.(52, 53)
Program for Advancement through Health and Education (PATH)†	Funded by the Government of Jamaica and the World Bank, the conditional cash transfer program helps to reduce child labor by requiring participants to attend school at least 85 percent of the academic days in a month.(54-56) Recent evaluations of the PATH program reveal that children at the primary and secondary levels are not likely to reach that target.(56, 57). During the year, PATH assisted 223,000 beneficiaries, with 89 percent of boys and 90 percent of girls achieving education compliance at the primary level and 87 percent of boys and 90 percent of girls achieving education compliance at the secondary level. The Government expanded the program to assist parents whose children needed financial assistance to attend school.(1)
Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO to increase the knowledge base on child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(58)
Multi-Agency Strategic Development Child Protection Program†	Government program, established a center to assist victims of the worst forms of child labor.(1)
Sheltert	Government shelter to aid women and children trafficking victims.(10, 22)

† Program is funded by the Government of Jamaica.

Although Jamaica has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem of children in domestic work and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Jamaica (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that legislation prohibits the use of children for all illicit activities, including procuring, and offering a child for drug trafficking and production.	2009 – 2015
	Determine the specific light work activities and hours permissible for children between ages 13 and 14 to facilitate enforcement.	2014 – 2015
	Enact the new Occupational Safety and Health Act that would specify prohibitions on hazardous occupations and activities for children under age 18.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors have authority to conduct unannounced inspections, issue fines, and determine penalties for child labor law violations to facilitate enforcement of child labor laws.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws on child labor to provide sufficient coverage of the entire workforce.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted in not just the formal sector, such as factories, building sites, docks, and ships, but also in the informal sector in urban and rural communities.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Compulsory Education Policy.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children who are working, especially for children working in agriculture and construction to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Expand programs that assist children in the worst forms of child labor and develop programs to aid children in domestic work and street work.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Jordan made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched a national child labor survey and initiated a program to institutionalize the regular training of school teachers on child labor. The Government strengthened enforcement of minimum age protections by hiring 66 new labor inspectors, and it also approved a national mechanism to refer victims of human trafficking to rehabilitation or repatriation services. In addition, the Government expanded the implementation of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor to three additional governorates, a total of nine out of twelve, and supported a new program that will conduct research on hazardous child labor in specific sectors. However, children in Jordan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work. Children in Jordan face barriers to access education, and programs to combat the worst forms of child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Jordan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-3) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work.(4-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Jordan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	0.8 (11,255)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	94.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	0.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		86.0

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is limited evidence of temporary marriage of Syrian refugee girls as a form of commercial sexual exploitation.(10, 22-24)

According to a Ministry of Labor official, about 40 percent of the child laborers identified by the Ministry of Labor during inspections in 2015 were non-Jordanian, most of whom were Syrian refugee children.(11) Many of these children are the sole breadwinners of their families.(4, 25) Syrian refugee boys work primarily in retail and services, while some Syrian girls work in domestic service and agriculture.(4) Reports state that some Syrian refugee children peddle goods inside and outside the Za’atari refugee camp and are engaged in begging in Jordanian cities.(26) The influx of refugees has led to economic distress in the country; as a result, more Jordanian families have put their children to work.(11)

Syrian children are granted access to Jordanian public schools with 143,259 Syrian students currently enrolled.(27) The Government has committed to enroll the remaining 43,000 that are currently outside the public school system in the 2016-2017 school year.(27) About 100 schools (out of about 3700 schools in the country) have a split day, with two shifts, for Jordanian children to attend in the morning and Syrian children to attend in the afternoon to accommodate the large number of students.(11, 27) Children attending double-shifted schools are vulnerable to child labor because shorter school hours leave more time to work.(28) The number of children dropping out of school is rising.(11) Syrian refugee children face additional barriers to education, including distances to school, and being unprepared for their appropriate grade-level due to instability in their early years of schooling.(29)

In June 2015, the Government launched the National Child Labor Survey, under the leadership of the Ministry of Labor in cooperation with the ILO. A key feature of the Survey is that it covers all children, regardless of nationality, thereby including Syrian refugee children.(29) The University of Jordan Center for Strategic Studies began to carry out the Survey.(29) The data will be published and shared with the public in mid-2016. The Department of Statistics will routinely collect information on child labor because questions on child labor were incorporated in the quarterly report.(11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Jordan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor Directorate of Labor Affairs and Inspection	Carry out labor inspections, including child labor violations.(11) Identify cases of child labor through work site visits and refer cases to relevant services. Register child labor instances into a National Child Labor Database, which allows ministries to monitor and track children as they are identified and referred to services.(39) Maintains a 24/7 hotline to receive labor-related complaints in Arabic, including complaints of child labor.(27, 40)
Ministry of Labor Child Labor Unit	Coordinate Government efforts to campaign against child labor, conduct trainings, and raise awareness about child labor issues. In 2015, piloted the child labor monitoring system as a data collection, coordination, and referral mechanism.(11)
Public Security Directorate Criminal Investigation Unit	Investigate and prosecute violations of the Penal Code, including allegations of the worst forms of child labor. Operate a section to combat human trafficking.(11)
Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit of Ministry of Labor and Public Security Directorate	Investigate cases of human trafficking and forced labor, refer cases for prosecution, and coordinate with foreign embassies to identify victims of human trafficking and repatriate workers.(26)
Municipal Business License Inspectorate	Inspect business licenses in the municipality.(41)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Jordan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor hired 66 new inspectors and responded to 39 complaints of child labor cases, received through its Child Labor Unit hotline.(11) The Unit also launched a bilingual web site in Arabic and English that the public can use to report cases of child labor.(11, 43) Additionally, the Ministry of Labor carried out targeted inspections in sectors in which children are engaged in child labor, including in restaurants, bakeries, and auto mechanic shops, and issued 576 warnings and imposed 440 fines.(11) A warning requires the employer to sign a pledge declaring that it will cease employing children within one week. Without the pledge, the Ministry can close the business.(11) During the reporting period, 206 businesses signed pledges, and 100 were closed following a warning. Subsequent to labor inspections, 119 children were removed from worksites and referred to the Ministry of Social Development for social services.(11)

The Ministry of Labor drafted bylaws to help improve enforcement of child labor laws in the agricultural sector, but funding constraints limited inspections in agriculture, about 2% of the total number of inspection visits.(11, 27)

During the year, 10 senior inspectors of the Municipal Business License Inspectorate of Greater Amman Municipality received training on the monitoring and prevention of child labor. The senior inspectors then trained all inspectors of Greater Amman Municipality.(29)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Jordan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, staff of the Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit of the Ministry of Labor and Public Security Directorate participated in training workshops. The Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit, in cooperation with IOM or the local NGO, Tamkeen, held trainings for employees of the Public Security Directorate and the Ministries of Health and Social Development.(45) The Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit investigated 206 cases of potential human trafficking cases and referred 28 cases to the Attorney General's Office. None of the identified victims were children.(45)

The National Committee for the Prevention of Human Trafficking approved the first national referral mechanism to coordinate and refer victims to services for rehabilitation or repatriation and opened the country's first government-run shelter for trafficking victims, including children.(27, 45) The committee establishes roles and responsibilities of various Government agencies to provide victims with legal, medical, psychological, and social services and refers victims to the Attorney General's office or the Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit.(45)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor	Form new policies, amend legislation as necessary, and oversee the implementation of child labor policies, including the National Framework to Combat Child Labor. Led by the Ministry of Labor, includes the Ministry of Education, Ministry of Social Development, National Council on Family Affairs, and international and civil society organizations.(46) In 2015, the Committee worked with the ILO on the child labor project, discussed the issue of child labor in the tourism sector, and considered a new project to establish a center to provide social services to child laborers.(27)
The National Center for Family Affairs	Coordinate policies on child exploitation issues, including child labor.(47)
Steering Committee of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor	Coordinate referrals between Ministries of Education, Labor, and Social Development, and the National Council on Family Affairs to identify child laborers and withdraw them from work. Provides child laborers with services and monitors their progress.(11, 46, 48)
National Committee for the Prevention of Human Trafficking	Coordinate the implementation of the National Strategy and Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking.(49) Chaired by the Ministry of Justice. Other members include representatives from the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Health, Interior, Labor, Social Development, and Trade and Industry, and the Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit of the Ministry of Labor and Public Security Directorate Criminal Investigation Division, the National Commission on Human Rights, and the National Council for Family Affairs.(44)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Jordan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Framework to Combat Child Labor	Outlines the roles and responsibilities of the key government agencies, including the Ministries of Education, Labor, and Social Development; NGOs; and other stakeholders involved in identifying and responding to cases of child labor. Based on the Framework, Ministry of Labor inspectors monitor child labor and refer cases to Ministry of Social Development and Education to provide services.(48) In 2015, the Government expanded the implementation of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor to 3 additional governorates, for 9 out of 12. Training on the implementation of the Framework was provided for 189 officials from the Ministries of Labor, Education, and Social Development.(29) The Steering Committee of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor helped finalize the terms of reference for an impact assessment of the Framework.(29)
Jordan Response Plan	Facilitates humanitarian and development response in Jordan to the needs of incoming Syrian refugees and Jordanian host communities, a joint effort of the Government and the UN.(50) Includes elements aimed at reducing refugees' vulnerability to child labor by improved access to education.(51, 52)
Plan of Action to Eliminate Child Labor in Tourism in Petra	Employ counsellors to respond to children at risk of truancy, raise children's awareness of the hazards of child labor and the significance of education, incorporate child labor prevention strategies into mainstream programs for legally employed children age 16 and older, and inform students of high-quality employment in the tourism sector.(53)
The National Agenda (2007–2017)*	Provide a comprehensive reform framework for political, economic, and social policies, including the restructuring of Jordan's social safety net system.(54)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Jordan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Moving Towards a Child-Labor Free Jordan (2010–2016)	$4.04 million USDOL-funded, 6-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to facilitate Government implementation of the National Framework to Combat Child Labor. Includes conducting a national child labor survey.(55) The Ministry of Education, in cooperation with the ILO, agreed to add a module on child labor to the training of school teachers to inform all teachers of the basics of child labor and provide in-depth training for at least one focal point in each school.(29) In 2015, the Ministry of Social Development began revising and updating a training manual on child labor to train 15 master trainers who will then train all social workers in the Ministry.(29) The Municipal Business License Inspectorate and Children’s Municipal Council of Greater Amman Municipality initiated a joint pilot program in which young Council members visit areas with high prevalence of child labor to raise awareness. Child laborers and employers are more receptive to this approach because the Council members appear less threatening than Government officials.(29) The Ministry of Labor held an event in Amman to raise awareness about child labor and commemorate the World Day against Child Labor, attended by 1,000 children.(29)
Tackling Child Labor among Syrian Refugees and their Host Communities in Jordan and Lebanon (2015–2016)*	EU-funded, 1.5-year project, implemented by the ILO to conduct research on the hazards of child labor in certain sectors; promote awareness of child labor, including raising awareness among children of their rights; build technical capacity of governments, employers, and workers’ organizations to improve referrals and respond to cases of child labor; and provide training on preventing child labor, removing children, and providing services.(56)
Child Begging Assistance†	Ministry of Social Development implements an identification and services referral system for child beggars. Connects children with shelter and education services.(57) Returns children to their parents, who must then pledge in writing that their children will not return to the street.(57) In 2015, a shelter in the city of Madaba admitted 1,262 children who had been found begging.(11)
Nonformal Education Centers†	Ministry of Education program of centers throughout the country that seek to bring school dropouts, including those engaged in or at risk of child labor, back into the educational system. Children attend classes 3 hours a day in a flexible learning environment with class size around 20 students and specially trained teachers.(28) Targets children ages 13 and older. Upon completion of the curriculum, students receive a certificate equivalent to a 10th-grade education.(28) In 2015, the Ministry of Education opened 49 new centers, for a total of 100.(11)
Social Support Center in Markat	Funded by the Ministry of Labor and operated by the Ministry in cooperation with the ILO. Include activities to identify child laborers, provide services that include nonformal education, training, and rehabilitation for school dropouts and child laborers, and assist families in finding alternate forms of supplemental income.(11) In 2015, provided services to 2,080 children identified by labor inspectors and to 251 parents.(11)
Nonformal Education Center in Petra†	Part of a trilateral project between UNESCO, the ILO, and the Petra Authority, operates a nonformal education center to provide services to children at risk of child labor in the local tourism industry in the Um Sayhoun community and in Petra.(40, 58)
Sustaining Quality Education and Promoting Skills Development Opportunities for Young Syrian Refugees in Jordan (2013–2015)†	$5.6 million EU-funded, 2-year project implemented by UNESCO in cooperation with the Ministry of Education. Offer informal and nonformal education for Syrian and Jordanian youth in Jordan.(59)
Karamah Shelter*†	Established in Amman, it is the first permanent Government shelter for victims of human trafficking. Operated by the Ministry of Social Development, includes three sections for men, women, and children.(60) Provide counselling and rehabilitation services. Coordinate legal assistance with civil society organizations.(60)
The National Aid Fund†	Under the Ministry of Social Development, pay families approximately $50 monthly through a conditional cash transfer program for withdrawing a child from the labor market and reenrolling the child in school.(40)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Jordan.

As the Ministry of Social Development has no mandate to protect Syrian refugee children, Government officials refer Syrian children identified through the child labor monitoring system to international organizations and NGOs. The Ministry of Labor Child Labor Unit has a process to refer Syrian child laborers to UNHCR.(11)

The Juvenile Law of 2014 expanded the responsibilities of the Ministry of Social Development in providing services for children engaged in child labor. The Ministry established a Child Labor Unit and is working to clarify the roles and responsibilities between this Unit as opposed to those of the Ministry of Labor Child Labor Unit.(29, 61) In 2015, the Ministry of Labor Child Labor Unit conducted several campaigns to raise awareness of issues of child labor, including workshops and television and radio interviews.(11)

Although Jordan has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs does not address the extent of the problem, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Jordan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make information publicly available about training provided to labor inspectors and criminal investigators on worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Make information publicly available about the number of penalties collected for child labor violations.	2015
	Ensure that the Ministry of Labor inspectors have the resources needed to carry out inspections in the agricultural sector.	2014 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention into the National Agenda.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that the commitment to enroll Syrian refugee children in school is realized.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs to address the worst form of child labor in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and street work.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 61. ILO-IPEC. Technical Progress Report of Project Moving Towards A Child Labour Free Jordan - Appendix 106 (Terms of Reference). Technical Progress Report; October 2015.

In 2015, Kazakhstan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Kazakhstan adopted a policy to combat human trafficking, which included elements to prevent child labor in the production of cotton and ensure access to education for noncitizen children living permanently in Kazakhstan. The Government also carried out inspection raids in some economic sectors in which children are likely to be engaged in child labor, provided access to education for children of foreign migrants, and conducted awareness-raising campaigns on human trafficking. However, children in Kazakhstan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in harvesting cotton and working in restaurants. The Government lacks a comprehensive policy that addresses all worst forms of child labor. There is also a lack of current, comprehensive, and detailed research on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kazakhstan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in harvesting cotton and working in restaurants.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kazakhstan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.2 (79,690)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	3.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		113.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including weeding, collecting worms, and harvesting cotton† (1, 2, 6-9)
	Production of vegetables* (1-3)
Industry	Construction,* activities unknown (3)
Services	Working in markets,* activities unknown (3, 10, 11)
	Domestic work* (3, 12)
	Working in gas stations* (10, 12)
	Car washing (3, 10-12)
	Working as bus conductors* (3)
	Working in restaurants as waiter† (10-12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking* (13-15)
	Forced begging as a result of human trafficking* (13, 14)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* domestic work,* and construction,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (13, 16)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Kazakhstan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

There is no current, comprehensive research on child labor in Kazakhstan. The last national child labor survey was conducted in 2006; since then, a baseline study prioritizing child labor in agriculture in the Almaty and South Kazakhstan areas was completed in 2012.(17) There is limited evidence that children from the neighboring countries of Uzbekistan and the Kyrgyz Republic migrate with their families to work in the cotton fields in Kazakhstan.(1, 10, 18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kazakhstan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 30 of the Labor Code (19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 179 of the Labor Code (19)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Decree of the Government No. 1220 of 2011; Decree of the Minister of Health and Social Development No. 391 of 2015 (20, 21).
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 8 of the Labor Code; Article 135 of the Criminal Code (19, 22)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 135 of the Criminal Code (22)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 134, 135, and 312 of the Criminal Code (22)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 132 and 133 of the Criminal Code; Article 179 of the Labor Code (19, 22)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 31 of the Military Service Act (23)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	19	Article 38.1(2) of the Military Service Act (23)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17‡	Article 30 of the Constitution (24)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 8.2 of the Education Act (25)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.

The law does not comprehensively criminally prohibit the offering of a child or the benefiting from a monetary transaction involving a child, for the production of pornography.

In Kazakhstan education is compulsory until grade 11 or completion of vocational school.(26) Children generally enroll in schools at the age of 6 or 7 and attend primary school (grades 1-4) and basic secondary school (grades 5-9). After grade 9, they either go to general secondary school (grades 10-11) or vocational schools (for 2-3 years).(3, 27) Therefore, they are 17 or 18 years old when education stops being compulsory.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Health and Social Development, Departments of Control and Social Protection	Enforce child labor laws and manage child labor cases during broader investigations.(28) In 2015, functions of the Ministry of Health and Social Development as a central labor inspection body were transferred to the Ministry's oblast -level departments of Control and Social Protection.(3, 29)
Ministry of Education and Science	Receive complaints of child labor and determine if law enforcement should investigate cases. Mediate cases of child labor in the agricultural sector to encourage parents to keep their children in school.(28)
Ministry of Education and Science Center for the Adaptation of Minors	Provide assistance to child victims of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation, and to children involved in illicit activities; make referrals to appropriate government services or NGOs for further assistance.(30, 31)
Ministry of Internal Affairs	Enforce child labor laws in criminal offenses and train criminal and migration police in investigating the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(30, 32)
Ministry of Internal Affairs, Criminal Police Department, Anti-Trafficking Unit	Identify and investigate allegations of human trafficking, including trafficking of children.(28)
Assistance Hotlines	Provide hotlines for child-related issues, including child labor and child trafficking, through the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Ministry of Education and Science. Refer all child labor and trafficking cases to the police or NGOs, which in turn refer victims to shelters or crisis centers.(33)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Kazakhstan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Labor Inspectorate Funding	Unknown	Unknown

According to the ILO recommendation of one inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitional economies, Kazakhstan should employ about 450 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws in the country.(3, 36-38) Therefore, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient to adequately enforce the law in Kazakhstan.

The President's Decree No. 757 prohibited announced labor inspection.(39) The Ministry of Health and Social Development labor inspectors can conduct unannounced inspections only if they have evidence of labor violations or in response to complaints.(3)

Kazakhstan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Cases of illegal child labor may be reported to the police, an education official, a labor inspector, or one of several Government-operated hotlines. An official from the oblast-level Department of Education responds to the report and determines whether law enforcement should investigate the claim.(3) For cases in which the alleged child labor occurs in an agricultural setting, local officials meet with the child's parents and with school administrators to reinforce the message that during the school year, children should be in school and not in the fields.(3) In 2015, inspectors identified 400 children who missed school to work in cotton fields.(34)

In addition to labor inspectors, the Ministry of Education and Science and the Ministry of Internal Affairs, in cooperation with other Government agencies, carried out targeted raids in areas in which children were likely to be engaged in child labor, such as local markets, gas stations, and construction sites. As a result of such raids, 139 child laborers were identified, including those who worked as bus conductors or in car wash stations.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kazakhstan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	Unknown

Number of Violations Found	Unknown	5 (3)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	5 (3)
Number of Convictions	18 (11)	4 (3)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (14)	Yes (3)

The Ministry of Internal Affairs Legal Academy in the city of Karaganda and the Judicial Training Institute of the Supreme Court in the capital city of Astana held human trafficking trainings for 300 judges, and 103 police officers in different police units; additionally 150 labor inspectors were trained on a regional level.(3) Law enforcement officials of the Ministry of Internal Affairs carried out targeted operations for the proactive identification of individuals at risk of human trafficking and forced labor.(40)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Council on Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to address the worst forms of child labor and prepare proposals and recommendations on implementing state policy to eliminate child labor.(17) Chaired by the Minister of Health and Social Development, includes representatives from the Ministry of Internal Affairs, the Ministry of Education and Science, the Prosecutor General's Office, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and NGOs.(3) The Council convened in April 2015.(34)
Interagency Trafficking in Persons Working Group	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking and recommend improvements to anti-human-trafficking legislation, prevention strategies, protection of victims, and prosecution of offenders. Chaired by the Minister of Internal Affairs, its coordinating role is shared on a 2-year rotation between the Ministry of Internal Affairs and the Ministry of Health and Social Development.(40) Includes representatives from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Education and Science, the Ministry of Culture and Sports, the Committee for National Security, the Office of the Prosecutor General, the National Human Rights Commission, and the Supreme Court. Met twice in 2015.(40)
Committee for the Protection of Child Rights	Work to protect children from exploitation. Operate under the Ministry of Education and Science at the oblast-level departments of education.(28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Kazakhstan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2015–2017)†	Aims to strengthen coordination among Government ministries and with foreign governments and international organizations. Emphasizes victim assistance and prevention, specifically to prevent child labor in the production of cotton and in construction, to provide access to education for children of stateless and foreign individuals permanently living in Kazakhstan, to monitor and exchange data on the trafficking of children and child pornography, and to enforce criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(41)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of Kazakhstan has adopted the Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy on other forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Kazakhstan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Labor in Central Asia — Commitment Becomes Action (PROACT CAR Phase III) (2010–2016)	$4.5 million, Government of Germany-funded, 5-year regional project implemented by the ILO, designed to mainstream child labor issues in national policies and legislation, to build the capacity of stakeholders, and to provide direct services to children removed from the worst forms of child labor.(12, 42)
Assistance to Trafficking Victims‡	Provides medical and legal assistance, pretrial safe houses, security services, housing, food, clothing, and transportation to trafficking victims. Authorities can help victims or witnesses change residences, find employment, or change their physical appearance.(43)
Improving Identification and Referral of Victims of Human Trafficking (August 2014–July 2015)	$175,000 USDOS-funded, one-year project implemented by the IOM to improve identification of human trafficking victims and refer them to services. The Government of Kazakhstan has committed to extend identification functions to all police units, such as migration or and administrative police and labor inspectors, and to train them to identify victims and refer these victims for further assistance.(44, 45)
Ministry of Education and Science Program of Education Development (2011–2020)‡	Aims to provide equal access to education, to transition to a 12-year education model, and to improve technical and vocational training.(46)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Kazakhstan.

The Ministry of Internal Affairs, in cooperation with IOM, conducted the awareness-raising campaign, “Let’s stop trafficking together!” in 2015, which consisted of conferences, roundtables, and discussions with local government agencies.(15) The Ministry of Education and Science, in cooperation with other Government agencies, also carried out child labor awareness-raising campaigns that reached 1.6 million individuals through conferences, meetings, and competitions.(3) Local government bodies of several oblasts in Kazakhstan provided grants to NGOs to conduct awareness-raising campaigns about human trafficking and provide social and legal services to victims.(40)

In 2015, the Government provided access to education for approximately 3,400 children of foreign migrants in Kazakhstan.(40) Previously, access to education was a challenge for some migrant children who did not have an Individual Identification Number, which became a requirement for school enrollment in September 2014.(28) Based on available information, migrant children were not denied access to education in 2015 due to lack of Individual Identification Numbers.(45)

Although the Government of Kazakhstan implemented programs to combat human trafficking and provide assistance to trafficking victims in 2015, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor in services and agriculture, particularly in the production of cotton.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Kazakhstan (Table 9).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law clearly and comprehensively criminally prohibits the offering of a child and benefiting from a monetary transaction involving child, for the production of pornography.	2015
Enforcement	Make information about the training system for labor inspectors and criminal investigators publicly available.	2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2015
	Resume routine labor inspections to enforce child labor laws, particularly targeting cotton fields and other areas where children are commonly employed.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, including harvesting cotton.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to gather comprehensive data on child labor, including the activities carried out by children working in the construction and services industries, to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in services and agriculture, particularly in the production of cotton.	2014 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
37. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection (GB.297/ESP/3). Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. Report No. GB.297/ESP/3. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
38. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Kenya

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Kenya made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continues to expand social cash transfers to additional households as part of its National Safety Net Program for Results, and implemented and participated in several programs to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Kenya are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in sand harvesting and commercial sexual exploitation. Kenya has yet to ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, and its minimum age for work law and compulsory education age are not harmonized due to the lack of a specific compulsory education age. The Government has also not committed sufficient resources for enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kenya are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in sand harvesting and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kenya.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	6-14 yrs.	32.5 (2,943,310)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	74.9

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Most trafficking of children in Kenya is internal trafficking of Kenyan children and often involves relatives or friends of the family.(35) Children in Kenya scavenge dumpsites and streets for scrap material, including metal and glass.(4, 5, 16) These children earn about $1–$2 per day, while often risking injury and exposing themselves to infectious diseases, such as tetanus, by sorting through waste. Evidence suggests that such children are also exposed to mercury.(4) The commercial sexual exploitation of children, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, is also a problem in Kenya, especially in Eldoret, Kisumu, Nairobi, Nyeri, and in coastal areas.(4, 5, 16, 17, 30, 31) The majority of children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation are girls, but boys are also involved.(4, 5)

Although the Basic Education Act and the Children Act provide for free education, and the Basic Education Act prohibits schools from charging tuition fees, the cost of unofficial school fees, books, and uniforms keeps some children from attending school.(18, 23, 36-39) In addition, even though the Births and Deaths Registration Act makes birth registration compulsory, many children in rural areas are not registered at birth, thus at times making it difficult for nonregistered children to access services such as education.(5, 40) Furthermore, teacher and school shortages in Kenya, especially secondary schools, hinder children’s access to education and contribute to overcrowding in schools.(6, 41) School administrators also limit some children’s access to education by denying pregnant girls admittance to schools.(5, 41) Difficulties attending school are made worse by the prevalence of sexual abuse in schools.(5)

The last national child labor survey was conducted in 2000.(8) As a result, data may no longer be reflective of the current child labor situation in Kenya.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kenya has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Kenya has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, although commercial sexual exploitation of children continues to be a problem in Kenya.

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Section 56 of the Employment Act; Section 10.4 of the Children Act; Section 12 of the Employment (General) Rules, 2014 (39, 42, 43)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 2 and 53.1 of the Employment Act; Sections 2 and 10.1 of the Children Act (39, 42)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Section 12 and the Fourth Schedule of the Employment (General) Rules, 2014; Section 10.1 of the Children Act (39, 43)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution; Sections 4.1 and 53.1 of the Employment Act; Sections 174 and 254–266 of the Penal Code; Article 3 of the Counter-Trafficking in Persons Act; Article 13 of the Sexual Offences Act; Section 13.1 of the Children Act (39, 42, 44–47)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 3 of the Counter-Trafficking in Persons Act; Article 13 of the Sexual Offences Act; Section 13.1 of the Children Act; Section 53.1 of the Employment Act; Sections 174 and 254–263 of the Penal Code (39, 42, 45–47)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14–16 of the Sexual Offences Act; Sections 2 and 53.1 of the Employment Act; Section 15 of the Children Act (39, 42, 47)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Sections 2 and 53.1 of the Employment Act; Section 16 of the Children Act (39, 42)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Section 10.2 of the Children Act; Article 243 (1) of the Kenya Defence Forces Act (39, 48)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	14‡	Sections 28 and 30 of the Basic Education Act (38, 49, 50)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 7.2 of the Children Act; Sections 28, 29, and 32 of the Basic Education Act; Article 53(b) of the Constitution (38, 39, 44)

* No conscription (48)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (49, 50)

The minimum age protections in Kenya only protect children working under a contract. (39, 42) The Government of Kenya has reported children are only required to attend school until age 14. This standard makes children ages 14–15 particularly vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work. (49, 50) The Ministry of Labor, Social Security and Services (MLSSS), Child Labor Division held meetings in 2015 with the Ministry of Education, Science, and Technology and civil society on harmonizing the Basic Education Act with the minimum age for work law. (6)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Security and Services (MLSSS)	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor, through county labor officers in Kenya's 47 counties. (4, 51, 52) Through its Child Labor Division, coordinate activities to eliminate child labor. (4)
MLSSS Department of Children's Services	Coordinate services provided to children, ensure that child protection activities are being implemented countrywide, and maintain records on children and the services provided to them. (4)
National Police Service	Enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor. (4)
Anti-Trafficking Police Unit	Enforce laws related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. (4)
Tourism Police Unit	Enforce laws related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry. (53)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions	Enforce laws through the prosecution of criminal offenses, including labor-related offenses. (6)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Kenya took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2015, research was unable to determine the budget for the MLSSS or its Child Labor Division; however, the MLSSS budget is inadequate to address Kenya's labor enforcement needs.(4, 6, 55, 56) The Child Labor Division did receive approximately $9,900 to pay for child labor meetings and to hold a World Day Against Child Labor event.(6) According to the ILO's standard of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Kenya should employ roughly 455 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country. Labor officers were not provided training on the enforcement of child labor laws during the year.(6) There were 262 formal child labor inspections conducted in 2014, the most recent year for which data were available. In addition, 2,011 child labor complaints were received and investigated.(6) There were no penalties assessed in these cases.(6) The Government operates an emergency, toll-free, nationwide child hotline to report child abuse, including child labor, and refers callers to organizations for social protection services.(4, 57, 58) In 2014, the last year for which data are available, the Child Helpline received 227 calls regarding child labor and 4 calls regarding child trafficking.(27)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kenya took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Police Service personnel. Standard operating procedures on how to respond to trafficking in persons cases were developed and implemented for all new police officers.(32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Oversee efforts to eliminate child labor.(4) Composed of government agencies, private employers, workers' organizations, and civil society organizations. Chaired by the Permanent Secretary, with coordination duties performed by the MLSSS Child Labor Division.(27, 59)
National Council for Children's Services	Coordinate, on a quarterly basis, government efforts on child-related issues, including child labor.(4) Operate the National Children Database, which collects comprehensive data on children, including child labor.(4) Led by a presidential appointee and composed of 18 NGOs, private sector representatives, faith-based organizations, and representatives from various ministries.(59)
National Labor Board	Advise the Cabinet Secretary on all issues related to labor and employment, including legal and policy issues.(27)
Counter-Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee	Coordinate the implementation of policies related to human trafficking and provide prevention and protection services to victims. Mandated by the Counter-Trafficking in Persons Act.(46) Composed of multiple government agencies, private employers, workers' organizations, and civil society organizations.(35)
Local, Advisory, and District Child Labor Committees	Coordinate activities to eliminate child labor at the local level.(4)

The Counter-Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee met more than four times in 2015.(35)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Kenya has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor (2004–2015)	Aimed to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 by targeting vulnerable populations and addressing the root causes of child labor, such as poverty and lack of access to education. Prioritized law enforcement, raising awareness, and universal basic education.(60)
National Plan of Action Against Sexual Exploitation of Children in Kenya (2013–2017)	Aims to prevent, protect, and reintegrate child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Emphasizes identifying children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation; raising the awareness of community leaders, parents, and tourism employees on commercial sexual exploitation; and implementing programs to assist victims.(58)
Framework for the National Child Protection System for Kenya (2011)	Described the laws and policies that protect children from violence and exploitation, and the roles and responsibilities of the Government to protect children from exploitative work.(61)
Vision 2030: Second Medium-Term Plan (2013–2017)	Identifies child labor as a major challenge that Kenya faces, and aims to finalize and implement the National Policy on Child Labor.(62)
County Integrated Development Plan	Serves as a guide for a county's development planning processes. Required of all 47 counties in Kenya.(63) For example, in Kiambu County, it addresses child labor on coffee and tea estates.(64) In Turkana County, it addresses the issue of street children.(65)
The National Children Policy (2008)	Seeks to protect children from exploitative labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation through the enforcement of relevant laws.(66)
The National Education Sector Support Program (2013–2018)*	Aims to enhance access to, and the quality of, basic education.(67)
Kenya National Social Protection Policy (2011)*	Aims to reduce the vulnerability of Kenyans to social, economic, and environmental shocks. Seeks to provide children with access to education and health services.(68)
UNDAF (2014–2018)*	Promotes improved access to education and provides adequate technical and financial capacities to the National Council for Children's Services to align national law with international standards.(69)
Policy for Alternative Provision of Basic Education and Training (2009)*	Provides guidelines for the development and implementation of alternative basic education and training for vulnerable groups.(70)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The National Plan of Action Against Sexual Exploitation of Children in Kenya did not include a corresponding budget.(58) In 2015, the Government sent the drafted National Policy on Child Labor to the Kenyan Parliament for adoption. The National Policy on Child Labor seeks to eliminate child labor by 2015.(27)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Kenya funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor-Free Zones	Government-implemented program, with support from the ILO and an Italian NGO, Cooperazione e Sviluppo (CESVI), to create child labor-free zones in fish farms and commercial fishing operations. There are 70 child labor-free zones in 50 villages and on 80 beaches.(4, 6)
Child Labor-Free Supply Chain Certifications	Government program supported by CESVI that develops child labor-free supply chain certifications.(4, 71)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010.(72) Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research. Also aims to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Kenya.(72) During 2015, awareness-raising activities were conducted in Kisumu, Mombasa, and Nairobi counties against child labor in domestic work.(73)
Combatting Child Labor Through Education Project	Jointly launched by the Government of the Netherlands and the ILO to combat child labor in Bolivia, Indonesia, Kenya, Mali, and Uganda. In 2015, the project launched the World Report on Child Labor and Youth Employment.(74)
National Safety Net Program for Results†	Government-implemented, 5-year cash transfer and social safety net program, with support from the World Bank, that assists the families of working children, orphans, and vulnerable children to meet their basic needs and pay for school-related costs. Household participants grew by 10 percent in 2015.(4, 6, 27, 75) Approximately $411 million has been committed by the Government of Kenya to the program. In the 2015/2016 budget, the Government allocated approximately $89 million to the program.(4, 6, 27) An impact evaluation found that this program led to a significant reduction in child labor on family farms.(76)
National Labour Force Survey with Child Labour Module	Government survey to determine the prevalence of child labor in Kenya. Government currently lacks funding to conduct the survey.(27, 77) The last national child labor survey was conducted in 2000.(8) As a result, data may no longer be reflective of the current child labor situation in Kenya.
Child Protection and Rescue Centers†	Government-implemented child protection centers that provide counseling and reintegration services for children in Eldoret, Garrisa, Kakamega, Malindi, Mombasa, Nairobi, Nakuru, and Siaya. In addition, in Garissa, Machakos, Malindi, and Thika, the Government operates rescue centers that temporarily house child victims.(17, 29)
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2016)	ILO-IPEC program that seeks to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by establishing a referral system for victims and implementing child labor legislation and policies.(78)
Trafficking in Persons Survey†	Government survey to determine the prevalence of human trafficking in Kenya.(29)
Trafficking in Persons Data Collection and Referral Mechanism Project	$750,000 USDOS-funded, UNODC project to develop a national trafficking in persons data collection and referral mechanism database to share information and improve data collection nationally.(35)
School Meals Program†	Government program that provides school meals to vulnerable children. Since its inception, it has provided more than 1.5 million children with school meals, which has resulted in improved school attendance.(79)
Wings to Fly Program (2011–2016)	Government program, in partnership with USAID, the Equity Group Foundation, the MasterCard Foundation, and UK Aid, that provides secondary school scholarships to children from needy backgrounds. Provided educational support to 4,090 children to date.(6, 27, 80)
Strengthening Human Security in Turkana (2012–2016)	$741,615 government program, in partnership with the ILO and multiple UN agencies, to improve human security issues in the area. The program has withdrawn 1,215 children from child labor.(6, 74)
Kitui County Child Rescue Center†	Government program that aims to withdraw and rehabilitate child laborers by providing counseling and life skills training. The government-funded center cost approximately $34,500.(81)
Refugee Assistance Programs	Government program, with support from UNICEF, that provides educational and nutritional services to 320,250 children.(82)

Program	Description
Regional Counter-Trafficking Project	Government project, with support from the IOM, that aims to combat human trafficking through prevention, protection, and support for victims.(83)

† Program is funded by the Government of Kenya.

Although Kenya has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, especially the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Kenya (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that minimum age laws apply to children working in non-contractual employment.	2011 – 2015
	Raise the compulsory education age to 16 to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on labor inspectorate funding, training, inspections, child labor violations, penalties imposed, and whether routine and unannounced inspections are conducted; and ensure that labor enforcement efforts are adequately funded.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that there is a sufficient number of labor inspectors based on the ILO benchmark.	2015
	Implement measures to make assessing penalties and fines for child labor violations easier.	2010 – 2015
	Make information publicly available about investigating criminal cases related to the worst forms of child labor, including the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the UNDAF, National Education Sector Support Programme, Kenya National Social Protection Policy, and Policy for Alternative Provision of Basic Education and Training.	2013 – 2015
	Include a budget in the National Plan of Action Against Sexual Exploitation of Children in Kenya.	2013 – 2015
	Adopt the National Policy on Child Labor.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Update data on child labor by conducting a national child labor survey.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that children can attend primary school either by ensuring that school is free of fees or by subsidizing or defraying the cost of school fees, books, and uniforms. Improve access to education by training new teachers, ensuring that pregnant girls can remain in school, addressing sexual abuse in schools, and ensuring that children are registered at birth.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, including children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Original data from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2, 2000 Analysis received December 18, 2015. Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" section of this report.

In 2015, Kiribati made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Occupational Safety and Health Act, which includes a list of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18. It ratified the UN CRC on Armed Conflict and the UN CRC on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. However, children in Kiribati are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Existing laws fail to fully protect children under age 18 from all forms of commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Government did not make sufficient efforts to provide services to children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kiribati are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Kiribati. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		112.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cutting toddy palm trees for toddy* (3)
	Fishing* and harvesting clams* (3)
Services	Street vending* and entertaining in bars* (3, 6-8)
	Construction* and portering* (3, 8)
	Seafaring* (3, 8, 9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 8, 9)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Kiribati, a small number of minors are reported to be engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in hotels and bars.(10) Evidence suggests that the crew members of foreign fishing vessels accounts for much of the demand for children in the commercial sex sector.(1, 2, 11) Girls are reported to receive financial support, food, alcohol, or goods in exchange for sexual services.(2)

Kiribati

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

While education is free and compulsory for all children until age 15, children face barriers to accessing education due to prohibitive costs of education and the lack of schools in remote areas.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kiribati has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 115 of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (12)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 117 of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (12)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Occupational Safety and Health Act (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 6 of the Constitution; Sections 244 and 249 of the Penal Code; Sections 118(a–d) and 122 of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (12, 14, 15)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 43 of the Measures to Combat Terrorism and Transnational Organized Crime Act; Section 118(b) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (12, 16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 136, 141, and 142 of the Penal Code; Sections 118(f) and 118(g) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (12, 14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 142 of the Penal Code; Sections 118(h) and 118(i) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (12, 14)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Section 7 of the Education Act (17)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 11 of the Education Act (17)

† No standing military (18)

In 2015, the Government passed the Occupational Safety and Health Act, which includes a list of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18.(13) The Government also passed the Employment and Industrial Relations Act, which maintains the minimum age for employment at 14 and the minimum age for hazardous work at 18. The Act also sets 12 as the minimum age for light work, but does not specify the activities and hours of work per week, that are acceptable for children engaged in light work or the conditions under which light work can be undertaken.(12) It also prohibits the use, procurement, and offering of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(12)

During the year, the Government ratified two international conventions on child labor: the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.(19, 20)

Kiribati's laws prohibiting child trafficking are insufficient because they do not specifically prohibit trafficking children domestically.(16) The laws related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because they do not prohibit financially benefitting from the use of children for prostitution or possessing and distributing child pornography.(12, 14)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources Development	Enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.(13)
Kiribati Police Force	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Investigate cases of human trafficking and sexual exploitation of children through a special Domestic Violence and Sexual Offenses Unit.(6)
Kiribati Director of Public Prosecutions	Take responsibility for criminal prosecutions, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(22)
Child Protection Officer, Ministry of Women, Youth and Social Affairs (MWYSA)	Remove children from harmful situations, including as a result of sexual exploitation and harsh or exploitative labor. Bring children in need of care and protection to the Court Magistrate to ensure their health and safety.(13, 23)
Court Magistrate	Issue care and protection orders for children who have been harmed, including as a result of sexual exploitation and harsh or exploitative labor.(23)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Kiribati took action to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2014	2015

labor officers, six of whom are based in the capital city, Tarawa, and they are tasked with conducting inspections.(6, 13) The MOL does not have an adequate number of officers to provide inspection services.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kiribati took action to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the Ministry of Women, Youth and Social Affairs conducted training and workshop sessions for police officers, public prosecutors, and social welfare officials on implementing the Children, Young People, and Family Welfare Act, which establishes the referral mechanisms and support services available for children who have been abused and exploited.(27)

The Government does not employ investigators to specifically enforce laws dealing with the worst forms of child labor.(13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although mechanisms exist to coordinate Government efforts to improve the welfare of children, the Government has not established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Secretary of MWYSA	Coordinate Government authorities and other stakeholders to respond to abuse, neglect, and exploitation of children and young people.(23)
Kiribati National Advisory Committee on Children	Implement the UN CRC, with regard to the worst forms of child labor. Members include the MOL, the Ministry of Education, and the Kiribati police.(13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Kiribati has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Children, Young People, and Families Welfare System Policy	Focuses on strengthening the welfare system, in part by implementing services to prevent the abuse, violence, neglect, and exploitation of children and young people, including in hazardous labor.(28)
UNDAF for the Pacific Region (2013–2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in 14 Pacific Island countries and territories: Cook Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu.(29) In Kiribati, includes initiatives to prevent and respond to abuse and exploitation of children.(30)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2012–2015)*	Establishes goals to guide the planning and delivery of high-quality and relevant education for all children. Includes providing conducive learning environments in schools and professional development for teachers and staff.(31)
The Beijing Declaration on South-South Cooperation for Child Rights in the Asia Pacific Region	Commits signatories to advancing efforts to protect children’s rights, including pertaining to child labor, child trafficking, and child pornography.(32)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, the Government developed a draft action plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.(33)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Kiribati funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Pacific Sub-Regional Child Labor and Trafficking Program	ILO-supported program that expands the work and lessons learned from its TACKLE program in Fiji to Kiribati, Samoa, and Solomon Islands.(8) Activities include facilitating meetings, conducting research, raising awareness, providing trainings, and building government capacity to address child labor.(34) In April 2015, representatives from Kiribati participated in the Program forum, which brought together national policymakers from five countries to discuss best practices for addressing child labor and trafficking issues.(8)
Safenet‡	MWYSA-coordinated program that allows government, churches, and NGOs to collect data, share information, and provide assistance to child victims found in exploitative and violent situations.(13)
Hotlines‡	MWYSA-supported 24-hour hotline for children to report violations, request information, or obtain access to services.(6) Domestic Violence and Sexual Offenses unit operates two 24-hour phone-line services for reporting exploitation and abuse.(21)
Awareness-raising Radio Broadcasts	MWYSA-operated weekly radio program and workshops with community and educational leaders to address child protection issues, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(21, 27)
Kiribati Educational Improvement Program	Multipartner aid program to provide greater protection and educational opportunities to children through policy and legislative review, workforce development, improvement of school curriculum, and infrastructure development in the education sector. Partners include the Government of Kiribati, Australian Agency for International Development, UNICEF, and UNESCO.(35)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Kiribati.

In July 2015, Kiribati participated in the ILO Sub-Regional Skills and Livelihood Training for Older Out-Of-School Children in Child Labor or At Risk in the Pacific. The training focused on highlighting opportunities to develop the skills of children under age 18 who are at risk of engaging in child labor, as well as identifying opportunities to mainstream skill development initiatives into existing social programs.(36)

During the reporting period, the ILO released the results of the Rapid Assessment on Child Labor in Tarawa, conducted by ILO-IPEC and the Government in 2012.(3)

Although Kiribati has programs that target the commercial sexual exploitation of children, these programs are insufficient to fully address the scope of the problem. Specifically, the Government does not have programs that offer targeted services to victims.(2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Kiribati (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law specifies the activities and number of hours of work per week that are acceptable for children engaged in light work, as well as, the conditions under which children can engage in light work.	2015
	Ensure that the law specifically prohibits the trafficking of children domestically.	2015
	Ensure that the law prohibits financially benefiting from the use of children in prostitution and distributing and possessing child pornography.	2015
Enforcement	Collect and publish data on the enforcement of child labor laws, including the number of labor inspections conducted, child labor violations found, and penalties imposed. Collect and publish data on the enforcement of criminal laws prohibiting the worst forms of child, including the number of violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions completed.	2012 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Ensure employment of an adequate number of labor inspectors and police officers; allocate sufficient resources to investigate child labor violations, including the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Establish a mechanism for child labor complaints.	2015
Coordination	Establish a mechanism to coordinate the Government's efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2015
Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into policies that seek to prevent and respond to child exploitation.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Implement programs to alleviate the financial burden of education and to increase access to schools in remote locations.	2014 – 2015
	Implement programs to sufficiently identify and serve victims of commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Kosovo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government increased funding to the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare's Social Assistance Benefits program by 25 percent, which increased benefits available to children in low income families, who are most vulnerable to situations of child labor. The Directorate of Trafficking in Human Being Investigation also conducted targeted investigations to identify child beggars who were victims of human trafficking. However, children in Kosovo are engaged in child labor, including in street work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Children from minority communities continue to face barriers to accessing education. In addition, the Labor Inspectorate continues to face financial and human resource constraints that impede its ability to conduct targeted and unannounced inspections in all relevant sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Kosovo are engaged in child labor, including in street work.(1-4) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 2, 4-6) A Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) conducted from 2013 to 2014 determined that 5,398 children in Kosovo were engaged in child labor.(7) A parallel MICS targeting the Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian communities in Kosovo found that 2,168 children from these communities were engaged in child labor.(8) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 4, 5, 16)
	Use in illicit activities* (2, 4)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Kosovo is a source and destination country for child trafficking. The majority of child trafficking victims are girls ages 14 to 17, who are primarily trafficked domestically for commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 17, 18)

Children from Kosovo and neighboring countries are also subjected to forced begging in Kosovo, sometimes by organized criminal groups.(1, 5, 18) The majority of children involved in begging and other street work are members of the Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian minority ethnic groups.(1)

Children from the Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma communities continue to experience difficulty accessing education.(19) A shortage of native-language teachers continues to contribute to low school attendance rates among ethnic minority children, despite some government efforts to ensure the right to native-language education.(3, 20) In addition, the prohibitively high fee for birth registration leaves some children in these communities without registration, which sometimes prevents children from enrolling in schools.(3, 20, 21) Children who are unable to access education are more vulnerable to exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Kosovo is not a UN member country; therefore, the Government is not eligible to ratify any ILO or other UN conventions. Article 22 of Kosovo’s Constitution, however, incorporates the UN CRC into the national legal framework.(22)

* No conscription (27)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

In June 2015, the Kosovo Committee for the Prevention of Hazardous Forms of Child Labor, chaired by the Minister of Labor and Social Welfare, approved a regulation reauthorizing the Committee's working group in charge of updating the prohibitions of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children, after its mandate expired earlier in 2015.(4, 30)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Agriculture also proposed a draft amendment to the Law on Forestry that would ban children from working in all areas of forestry.(4) The Administrative Instruction 05/2013 already prohibits children from engaging in the collection of wild fruits, harvesting of trees, opening of holes for planting trees, and cutting and processing of wood.(15)

Article 9 of the Law on Pre-University Education makes education compulsory beginning at the start of the school year following a child's sixth birthday and continuing for five years of primary education and four years of lower secondary education. As a result, children typically complete compulsory education at age 15.(28)

Laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient, as the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MLSW) Labor Inspectorate	Conduct inspections to enforce labor laws, including child labor laws, with a focus on protecting children who are legally employed. Refer all cases of children under age 15 involved in hazardous child labor practices to the MLSW Regional Centers for Social Work.(4)
MLSW Department of Social Welfare	Remove children determined to be in situations of hazardous child labor.(14)
MLSW Regional Centers for Social Work	Address cases of child labor involving children under age 15 and enter these cases into a nationwide database accessible by all relevant stakeholders. Provide social services to identified child laborers, including reintegration into school, age-appropriate employment for children ages 15 to 17, and provision of remedial classes.(4)
Kosovo Police	Enforce criminal laws against forced child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Enforce criminal laws against human trafficking, including child trafficking, through the Directorate of Trafficking in Human Beings Investigation.(4, 31)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce criminal laws against forced child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(31)
Ministry of Education, Science, and Technology	Conduct education inspections to ensure that students have an appropriate balance of school and work hours.(32)

Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MLSW) and Labor Inspectorate officials reported that the current number of labor inspectors is inadequate to fully address child labor issues in Kosovo, but that requests to increase the number of labor inspectors have been repeatedly denied since its establishment in 2002.⁽⁴⁾ Labor Inspectorate officials also reported inadequate office space, work materials, transportation, and equipment such as official cell phones and cameras.⁽⁴⁾ Inspectors noted that resource constraints prevented them from conducting unannounced or proactively targeted investigations outside of the construction sector in 2015.⁽⁴⁾

The Labor Inspectorate does not oversee the employment of children younger than age 15, the minimum age for work. Child labor involving children below the legal working age falls under the mandate of the MLSW's Regional Centers for Social Work.⁽⁴⁾ In 2015, the Regional Centers for Social Work identified 157 children engaged in child labor in agriculture, street work, scavenging, mining, and the hotel and hospitality sectors. Of these children, 93 were permanently removed from hazardous work situations and reintegrated into schools.⁽⁴⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Kosovo took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

The Kosovo Judicial Council does not publish quantitative data on cases tried; therefore, information on the number of prosecutions, convictions, and implementation of penalties related to criminal laws on child labor is not available. Additionally, the Kosovo Police do not systematically track whether children involved in child labor are referred to providers of social services as a result of investigations.(31)

Research found that judges and prosecutors sometimes incompletely or incorrectly apply human trafficking laws, which hinders effective prosecutions. Human trafficking cases have sometimes been classified as less severe offenses, resulting in lighter penalties for the perpetrators.(5, 33)

In 2015, the Kosovo Police's Directorate of Trafficking in Human Being Investigation conducted an operation in all seven districts of Kosovo to identify child beggars who are human trafficking victims. With the assistance of the Regional Centers for Social Work and municipal police stations, 41 child beggars were interviewed.(4) None of the children interviewed were determined to be human trafficking victims. However, criminal charges were filed against the parents of eight children under Article 250 of the Criminal Code, which prohibits mistreating or abandoning a child, including by compelling a child to beg.(4, 25)

In 2015, Kosovo Police identified 13 victims of child trafficking, including 7 children subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, 5 engaged in show business, and 1 child engaged in begging.(4) All 13 children were reportedly referred to a shelter for human trafficking victims and provided with social services.(4)

In 2015, the Directorate of Trafficking in Human Being Investigation reported that, in contrast to 2014, the unit is now adequately equipped with vehicles and work equipment for undercover investigations due to a donation from the EU Rule of Law Mission in Kosovo.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Kosovo Committee for Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor	Oversee and provide policy guidance for activities to prevent and eliminate child labor. Members consist of representatives from government agencies, the Kosovo Police, trade unions, the Kosovo Chamber of Commerce, and a child protection NGO.(14)
Child Labor Monitoring System (CLMS)	Coordinate approach to address child labor at the municipal level, including by overseeing Municipal Local Action Committees. Address child labor by promoting best practices for the identification and provision of services to child laborers, documenting child labor trends in specific sectors, planning for measures to be undertaken at the local level for the prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labor, and evaluating the efficiency of existing responses at local levels.(4)
National Authority against Trafficking in Human Beings	Coordinate policy implementation, monitoring, and reporting on the implementation of actions to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Efforts are led by a National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator through the Ministry of Interior Affairs.(6, 30, 34)
Municipal Local Action Committees	Coordinate municipal-level approach to preventing and eliminating child labor, and report to the CLMS. Members consist of representatives from local schools, municipal education departments, the Kosovo Police, and the MLSW.(14, 21)

All 38 municipalities in Kosovo have a Directorate of Health and Social Welfare and a Municipal Center for Social Work (CSW) that serve as child labor monitoring bodies.(21) Directorates and CSWs are individually responsible for monitoring the child labor situation in a given municipality, and they share data at the local level.(14, 21, 29) In late 2013, the MLSW began using new software to collect and process data on labor violations, and to make these data available to all ministries and law enforcement bodies.(4) Despite this technological advance, however, the Child Labor Monitoring System lacks quality data analysis and would benefit from an increased focus on using data to develop meaningful policy responses to identified child labor issues.(30)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Kosovo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy and Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Kosovo (2011–2016)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Kosovo by 2016, with a focus on prevention, as well as withdrawal of children from the worst forms of child labor, protection of young workers, and integration of gender concerns into anti-child labor efforts.(35)
National Strategy and Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)†	Aims to prevent and combat human trafficking, through awareness-raising, increased victim identification, and strengthened investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases. Also aims to coordinate provision of services to victims.(36) Action plan includes the goal of conducting and publishing research on children transiting Kosovo, Albania, and Macedonia, who are at high risk for human trafficking.(37)
Strategy for the Integration of Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian Communities (2009–2015)	Promotes the protection of the Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma communities, and calls for their full integration into Kosovar society. Includes actions in various areas, including education, and established a fund specifically dedicated to improving these communities' access to educational opportunities.(38)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the MLSW reported that the lack of human and financial resources continues to constrain the full implementation of the National Strategy and Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Kosovo.(4)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Kosovo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Kosovo Shelter Coalition and Hope and Homes for Children†	MLSW-funded coalition of eight NGOs that provide shelter to victims of human trafficking and domestic violence, as well as at-risk youth.(18) Beneficiaries include the NGO Hope and Homes for Children, which provides services only to victims of child trafficking.(6, 18)
Social Assistance Benefits†	MLSW program that provides monthly social assistance benefits to needy families. Benefits are increased per child, conditioned on the child's school attendance.(14) In November 2015, the Government approved the MLSW's recommendation to increase social assistance funding by 25 percent.(4)
Free School Meals and Text Books†	Ministry of Education, Science, and Technology program that provides free school meals for children up to age 15, and free textbooks through fifth grade.(14)
Social Inclusion and Improvement of Living Conditions for Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptians, and Other Vulnerable Groups in Kosovo (2013–2016)†	Government and foreign donor-funded project implemented by Terre des Hommes and a local NGO.(39) Focuses on four basic areas: empowerment and advocacy; basic, secondary, and tertiary education; sanitation and housing; and vocational education, employment, and income to improve the lives of minority communities in Kosovo. Based on the Government's Strategy for the Integration of Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma communities.(39)
Trafficking Awareness Campaign†	Annual government program to raise awareness of human trafficking among potential human trafficking victims.(18)

† Program is funded by the Government of Kosovo.

Although children begging is a problem in Kosovo, the Director of the Center for Social Work in Pristina has stated that there are no shelters or rehabilitation centers to which child beggars can be referred, nor are there any facilities capable of providing social reintegration services to these children.(1, 21)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Kosovo (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits the use of children in all illicit activities, including the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Provide initial training and refresher courses on laws related to child labor to labor inspectors.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the Labor Inspectorate's budget, number of personnel, and access to needed resources to facilitate effective targeting and investigation of cases of child labor, including ensuring that unannounced inspections are conducted in all relevant sectors.	2009 – 2015
	Make publicly available all information on the training of criminal law enforcement officials.	2015
	Improve the collection and publication of data on the number and results of investigations related to criminal violations of child labor laws, including the number of related prosecutions, convictions, the implementation of penalties, and the referral of children found in child labor to appropriate services.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the penalties in the legal framework regulating the crime of human trafficking are correctly applied, including by providing training to prosecutors and judges on the legal framework for human trafficking.	2012 – 2015
Coordination	Strengthen the Child Labor Monitoring System to better collect and analyze data on child labor, and to synthesize data and develop appropriate policy responses at the national and municipal levels.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Provide adequate funding to implement the National Strategy and Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Kosovo.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase efforts to address barriers to education for children from the Ashkali, Egyptian, and Roma communities, including the lack of birth registration and of native-language teachers from minority communities.	2011 – 2015
	Develop an infrastructure for the provision of social services to children found in street work, including begging.	2014 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, the Kyrgyz Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a Coordination Council for Social Protection and Children's Rights and passed a resolution to set up a procedure for the identification of children living in difficult conditions, including those engaged in child labor. In addition, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. However, children in the Kyrgyz Republic are engaged in child labor, including in cultivating cotton and selling items in the bazaars. The State Inspectorate did not conduct inspections to ensure compliance with legal minimum age protections. The compulsory education age remained lower than the minimum age to work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Kyrgyz Republic are engaged in child labor, including in cultivating cotton and selling items in the bazaars.(1-4) According to the most recent child labor survey conducted in 2007, child labor is concentrated in agriculture, primarily in the oblasts (provinces) of Issyk Kul and Osh. Children also transport and sell items in local bazaars.(5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	33.9 (397,407)
Attending School (%)	10-14 yrs.	86.5
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	41.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		105.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey, 2014.(7) Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between the surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Cultivating cotton, tobacco,† rice,* potatoes,* sugar beets,* and wheat* (3, 4, 8-13)
	Raising cattle* and sheep* (8, 11-13)
Industry	Coal mining*† (4, 8, 12, 13)
	Brick making* (8, 12, 13)
	Construction, including lifting and portering construction materials,* and cutting metal sheets for roofs* (8, 13)
Services	Loading and unloading goods, portering, collecting plastic bottles* and garbage, and selling items, including food and newspapers, in bazaars (2-5, 10, 14-16)
	Washing cars* (10, 15)
	Working in restaurants and cafes, including serving food* and washing dishes* (3, 12, 17)
	Street work, including begging and shoe shining* (12, 15, 18, 19)
	Domestic work, including child care* (4, 9, 19, 20)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Raising cattle and sheep, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 8)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (8, 15, 16, 19, 20)
	Use in illicit activities, including trafficking illegal drugs, as a result of human trafficking* (20, 21)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some girls from Uzbekistan are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking in the Kyrgyz Republic.(20) In addition, some parents who migrate to Kazakhstan, Russia, or other areas of the country to work leave their children behind, oftentimes without birth certificates and guardianship documents. As a result, some of these children cannot enroll in school and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 5, 12, 22) While there are estimated to be few ethnic Lyuli, a subgroup of the Roma people living in Central Asia, in the Kyrgyz Republic (approximately 3,500), many children from this community are vulnerable to child labor as they do not attend school.(5, 21, 23) Children with disabilities and those living and working on the street also have difficulty accessing education.(2, 5, 8, 24) The practice of schools requiring residence registration, known as propiska, for enrollment may also hinder access to education, although, according to the Ministry of Education and Science, this is not mandatory.(8, 9, 16)

In 2014, the National Statistical Committee of the Kyrgyz Republic, in cooperation with the ILO, conducted a National Child Labor Survey in 2014, the results of which were presented in a roundtable discussion in 2016. The results show that while the rate of child labor has decreased from 32.9 percent in 2007 to 27.8 percent in 2014, the rate of children engaged in hazardous child labor has increased from 12.5 percent in 2007 to 18.6 percent in 2014.(25) The full report of the survey is expected to be published in 2016.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Kyrgyz Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 18 of the Labor Code (26)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 294 of the Labor Code; Article 15 of the Code on Children (26, 27)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 294 of the Labor Code; Decree 314; Annex I of Decree 548 (26, 28, 29)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 10 of the Labor Code; Article 15.2 of the Code on Children; Article 1 of the Law on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking; Article 124 of the Criminal Code (26, 27, 30, 31)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking; Article 124 of the Criminal Code (30, 31)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 157 of the Criminal Code; Articles 5 and 15 of the Code on Children (27, 30)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 157, 247, 249, and 375 of the Criminal Code; Articles 5 and 15 of the Code on Children (27, 30)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Articles 17.1 and 22.1 of the Law on Military Service (32)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 24.1 of the Law on Military Service (32)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 16 of the Law on Education (33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Law on Education (33)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

According to Article 6 of the Labor Code, protections, such as the minimum age of employment and prohibition on hazardous work, are not extended to children engaged in non-contractual employment.(26) Most incidences of child labor occur in employment relationships in which the child has no signed employment contract with the employer.(3, 11)

Although the Kyrgyz Republic has ratified the Palermo Protocol, which necessitates waiving requirements related to the use of force, deception, or fraud for child victims of human trafficking, both the Law on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking and the Criminal Code require these elements during the human trafficking process.(30, 31)

Children in the Kyrgyz Republic are required to attend school only until grade nine, which is typically until they reach age 14 or 15.(3, 9, 34) This standard makes children ages 14 and 15 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to be in school, but they also are not yet legally permitted to work.

The Government drafted a revised list of hazardous work for children in 2011, which is pending review by the Ministry of Labor and Social Development.(1)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety	Monitor work sites and refer child laborers to social services. Cooperate with the Inspectorate for Minors' Affairs in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, the Prosecutor General's Office, and regional State District Administration authorities to enforce child labor laws.(35)
Ministry of Internal Affairs, Inspectorate for Minors' Affairs	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor, including its worst forms; conduct independent inspections and joint raids with the State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety to find neglected or abused children; and refer children to social institutions for care.(35)
Prosecutor General's Office	Enforce and apply laws concerning labor, including by conducting labor inspections and investigating child labor violations in coordination with the State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety.(35, 36)
Oblast Administration	Enforce child labor laws at the oblast level.(35)
Ministry of Labor and Social Development	Serve as the key government agency for child issues. Charged with protecting children and families in difficult conditions, including child laborers.(21) The Ministry's Department of Child Protection covers child labor issues. Monitor for children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(21) Coordinate with oblast -level authorities to pursue violations of child labor laws.(37)

According to the ILO recommendation of 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transitioning economies, the Kyrgyz Republic should employ about 132 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(2, 39-41) The State Inspectorate on Ecological and Technical Safety acknowledged that the number of labor inspectors was inadequate to ensure appropriate enforcement of child labor laws.(2) The Inspectorate conducted child labor inspections but since inspectors monitor a number of conditions in addition to child labor, it does not publish disaggregate statistics on child labor.(23)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Kyrgyz Republic took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the Government passed a resolution establishing the identification process for children in difficult living conditions, including those engaged in the worst forms of child labor. An integral part of this process is the referral of identified children to social and educational services.(38)

There were no reports of police misconduct, nor of children engaged in child labor being treated as criminals.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordination Council for Social Protection and Children's Rights*	Develop policies to eliminate child labor.(1) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, members include representatives from the Ministries of Labor and Social Development, Internal Affairs, Finance, and Education and Science, as well as civil society organizations.(43, 44) During the reporting period, the Council drafted a National Action Plan on Child Labor and submitted it to the Ministry of Labor and Social Development for review.(1) The Council also asked the Ministry of Labor and Social Development to provide information on what measures the Ministry has taken to establish guardianship for children whose parents migrate to other areas or countries.(44)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Kyrgyz Republic has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Regulations on the Procedure for the Identification of Children and Families in Difficult Situations†	Establishes the identification process of children in difficult living conditions, including those engaged in the worst forms of child labor. Actors involved in the identification process include employees of the Ministries of Education and Science, Labor and Social Development, Internal Affairs, and Health.(38) The process includes receiving complaints, conducting outreach activities, devising an individual action plan, removing the child from the worst forms of child labor, and providing financial and educational services.(38)
National Program Against Human Trafficking and Action Plan for the Implementation of the Program (2013–2016)	Aims to provide protection to children in difficult situations to prevent them from becoming victims of sexual, labor, or criminal exploitation.(35)
Sustainable Development Plan (2013–2017)	Addresses child labor by undertaking a child labor survey, strengthening enforcement mechanisms for monitoring child labor, and replicating best practices to improve access to education.(35, 45)
Roadmap on Out-of-School Children*	Seeks to collect information on the problem of school non-attendance and develop a comprehensive list of activities to address the issue. Developed by UNICEF, the ILO, and the Ministry of Education and Science.(45)
National Education Strategy (2012–2020)*	Seeks to expand coverage of preschool education, improve access to basic and general secondary education, and develop skills based on labor market needs. Also promotes adult and non-formal education for those who never attended school or dropped out early due to child labor.(34)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The Ministry of Education and Science is reviewing a change in the definition of out-of-school children to replace 45 missed days in an academic year with 10 days in 1 month. This change is expected to facilitate the identification of children who engage in child labor in agriculture during the harvest season.(1)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of the Kyrgyz Republic funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Labor in Central Asia—Commitment Becomes Action (PROACT CAR Phase III) (2010–2016)	$4.57 million Government of Germany-funded, 5-year project, implemented by the ILO-IPEC to mainstream child labor issues into national policies and legislation, build the capacity of stakeholders, and provide direct services to children withdrawn from the worst forms of child labor.(45) A manual for teachers on non-formal education was developed and incorporated in the regular teacher training package.(46) A pilot program in two districts consists of evening classes for children engaged in child labor and child labor monitoring by teachers and social workers.(8, 47)
Implementing Practices to Address Child Labor in Tobacco in Kyrgyzstan (IMPACT) (2013–2015)	$709,943 Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco Growing Foundation-funded, 2-year project implemented by the Alliance on the Protection of Child Rights that worked to eliminate child labor in tobacco-growing communities in southern areas of the Kyrgyz Republic. Objectives included withdrawing or preventing 3,000 children from entering child labor and improving access to education, water, and sanitation.(48)
Evening Classes for Child Laborer†	ILO and Ministry of Education and Science project that provides evening classes to secondary school students in districts with a high concentration of child laborers. Includes weekly or biweekly family consultations with social workers who observe the children and provide parents with information on the hazards of child labor.(49)
Social Support for Children and Families in Difficult Living Condition†	Social workers monitor places where children may be working, with a primary focus on bazaars, and return children to school.(37)
Technical Assistance to the Government of Kyrgyzstan to Strengthen the Legal and Operational Framework for Combating Trafficking in Persons (2015–2018)*	$750,000 USDOS-funded, 3-year project implemented by the IOM to establish an anti-trafficking task force; support the development of a National Referral Mechanism; and provide anti-human-trafficking trainings to government officials, such as judges, prosecutors, and law enforcement officers.(50)
Cash Transfer Program*†	Government cash transfer program for families living in difficult conditions.(1) In 2015, the Government helped 4,403 children in difficult conditions, including those engaged in child labor.(51)
Ministry of Education and Science National School Attendance Database†	Pilot national electronic database to track children who do not attend school. After the database is developed and used throughout the country, database information will be shared with the Ministry of Labor and Social Development to assist children engaged in child labor.(9) The Ministry of Internal Affairs will also be informed of cases of criminal violations of child labor laws. In addition, social pedagogues will work with families to ensure that children attend school.(9)
Toll-Free Hotline for Human Trafficking†	Ministry for Social Development toll-free line provided to the IOM that offers information to potential labor migrants and assistance to victims of human trafficking.(23)
Awareness-Raising Campaign†	One-month joint campaign of the Ministry of Labor and Social Development and the Ministry of Education and Science to raise awareness on child labor called “No to child labor, Yes to quality of education,” consisting of competitions and roundtables.(52)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Kyrgyz Republic.

Although the Kyrgyz Republic has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Kyrgyz Republic (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law’s minimum age provisions and hazardous work prohibitions apply to all children, including those working without a signed employment contract.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that child trafficking laws do not require an element of force or deception and are in accordance with international standards.	2015
	Increase the age for compulsory schooling to 16, the minimum age to work.	2014 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make publicly available information about the funding of the State Inspectorate, the training system for labor inspectors and criminal investigators, the number of labor inspections, including those conducted at worksites or by desk review, the number of child labor violations found, and the number of penalties imposed and collected, and information about whether inspections are routine or targeted.	2011 – 2015
	Strengthen the labor inspection system by permitting and conducting unannounced inspections.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors and provide inspectors with adequate resources to conduct inspections.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that cases of the worst forms of child labor are investigated and prosecuted.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Roadmap on Out-of-School Children and the National Education Strategy.	2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children have access to free education, including children with disabilities and those without birth certificates.	2009 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2014 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
41. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies;" "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Lebanon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Education and Higher Education participated in an initiative to provide free education up to grade nine for 200,000 Lebanese and refugee children. In addition, the Government participated in programs to assist children engaged in street work and Syrian child laborers. However, children in Lebanon are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and commercial sexual exploitation. Labor law enforcement is weak due to a lack of resources, and enforcement agencies do not maintain enforcement data. There are not sufficient programs and services to address the extent of child labor, specifically targeting domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Lebanon are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of tobacco and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Lebanon. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Working in small shops (13, 14, 16)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* and arms dealing* (1, 17, 21-23)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 23, 24)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4, 14, 22, 25)
	Forced labor in agriculture, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 19, 23, 26)
	Use in hostility-related activities, including manning checkpoints or working as guards* (27)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child labor has increased and its conditions have worsened since the influx of Syrian refugees into Lebanon.(14) As of December 2015, approximately 1.07 million Syrian refugees in Lebanon registered with UNHCR, about half a million of whom are children.(14, 28) Child labor is also prevalent in other refugee communities in Lebanon, including the Palestinian and Iraqi communities.(14)

Some Lebanese and Syrian children are subjected to forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking from Syria or internally within Lebanon. In particular, Syrian girls are trafficked into Lebanon for commercial sexual exploitation under the guise of marriage.(1, 4) Children working on the streets are sometimes forced into commercial sexual exploitation and illicit work by criminal gangs or acquaintances. A 2011 study found that boys working on the street are at high risk of sexual exploitation by peers and by men.(1) Working on the streets is especially common among refugee children from Syria, including Palestinians from Syria.(17) Syrian children are also subjected to forced labor in agriculture.(4, 14, 26) Some Syrian refugee children, with their families, are kept in bonded labor in agriculture in the Bekaa Valley to pay for transit from Syria to Lebanon or to cover the cost of makeshift dwellings provided by landowners.(23, 26)

The UN reported that children were recruited into armed groups, by al-Nusra Front and Hezbollah, and sent to Syria. The UN also documented recruitment of children into Palestinian armed groups, to man checkpoints or play support roles.(27)

The law guarantees free compulsory education for children, but only for Lebanese citizens.(29) Therefore, non-citizen children, including stateless and refugee children, have limited access to education. Palestinian refugees cannot access public schools, but some attend schools operated by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).(30-32) Although Syrian refugees can access public education, the public school system in Lebanon lacks the capacity to accommodate the large number of school-age Syrian refugee children.(30) As of summer 2015, only about half of school-age Syrian refugee children between ages 6 and 14 attended schools in Lebanon.(33) Lack of awareness about educational opportunities, school fees, the cost of transportation and supplies, use of schools by armed groups or as shelters, and fear of passing checkpoints or of violence are among the barriers to education.(27, 31, 34, 35) Likewise, Iraqi refugee children may not be enrolled in school due to school-related costs, reliance on child labor income, and discrimination.(36) In Lebanon, many classes are taught in French or English, but Syrian and Iraqi children do not speak those languages.(34, 36) Children who work in agriculture, regardless of nationality, often do not attend school during harvesting and planting seasons.(32, 37)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Lebanon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 22 of the Labor Code (38)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of Decree No. 8987 (39)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Annex 1 of Decree No. 8987 (39)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 586.1 and 586.5 of the Law on the Punishment of Human Trafficking (40)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 586.1 and 586.5 of the Law on the Punishment of Human Trafficking (40)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 523–527 and 507–510 of the Penal Code; Articles 586.1 and 586.5 of the Law on the Punishment of Human Trafficking (40, 41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 586.1 and 586.5 of the Law on the Punishment of Human Trafficking; ; Article 618 of the Penal Code (40, 41)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 30 of the National Defense Law (42)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 49 of the Education Law (43)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 49 of the Education Law (43)

* No conscription (44)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (14)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient as debt bondage is not criminally prohibited.

Government officials clarified that although Article 610 of the Penal Code criminalizes begging, Article 26 of the Delinquent Juveniles Law, which takes precedence over the Penal Code, stipulates that in cases of begging, the child is considered in danger and entitled to receive protective measures.(41, 45, 46) Yet, children working as beggars have been arrested in a limited number of cases.(47)

Based on Article 49 of the Education Law, education is compulsory in the basic level, which is until grade nine.(43) Children generally start at age six and complete grade nine around age 15.(14)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Lebanon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce child labor laws through desk review and workplace inspections. Maintain a hotline to receive labor-related complaints, including cases of child labor.(14, 46) The Ministry's Child Labor Unit launched its revamped Web site in 2015, which provides information on child labor and contains a mechanism to receive complaints of child labor.(14)
Internal Security Forces	Enforce laws regarding the worst forms of child labor through the Anti-Human Trafficking and Morals Protection Bureau.(14)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute violations of the Penal Code in coordination with the Internal Security Forces. Maintain general data and statistics on criminal violations involving the worst forms of child labor.(48) Refer at-risk children to shelters and protection services.(14) The Ministry has signed agreements with civil society organizations, to provide social workers to the Ministry to oversee court proceedings involving juveniles and deliver services to them, including children engaged in begging.(14)
Ministry of Social Affairs	Refer children identified by the Internal Security Forces and the Ministry of Justice to protective institutions, such as health centers. Refer children to shelters through its Higher Council for Childhood.(14)
Directorate of General Security Hotline	Receive complaints, including on human trafficking.(14)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, law enforcement agencies in Lebanon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor employed a cadre of 90 staff members involved in labor inspections, including labor inspectors, administrators, and technicians. The Ministry does not provide inspectors with the necessary equipment or transportation to enforce child labor laws.(14) In theory, labor inspectors can conduct routine inspections, including unannounced inspections; however, due to a lack of resources, almost all inspections are complaint-based.(14) The Ministry does not track the number of child labor inspections and whether such inspections were unannounced.(51)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Lebanon took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Anti-Human Trafficking and Morals Protection Bureau of the Internal Security Forces employed 25 officers responsible for criminal enforcement of child labor laws. The Internal Security Forces provided specialized training for its staff on human trafficking, investigation of cases involving children, and protection of child victims.(14) Training was provided to 7 Ministry of Labor officers on the referral mechanism and trafficking hotline; and 103 officers of the Internal Security Forces, 227 officers of the Directorate of General Security, the Ministry of Labor's hotline operators and labor inspectors, and social workers from the Ministry of Social Affairs all received training on how to identify human trafficking victims.(23, 54) The Army also trained soldiers on combatting human trafficking.(23)

A court convicted one man of subjecting a child to commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking, sentencing him to 10 years in prison, a fine, and loss of civil rights.(23)

The Ministry of Justice continued to contract an NGO, the Caritas Lebanon Migrant Center, to provide protection and assistance to victims of human trafficking. In 2015, the Directorate of General Security signed an MOU with the same NGO to strengthen cooperation and a reciprocal referral system between the Directorate and Caritas.(54)

The Government signed an MOU with Caritas to provide services to child victims of human trafficking.(46) However, some victims were still subject to arrest, detention, and deportation for crimes committed as a direct result of being trafficked.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Raise awareness; coordinate efforts among Government agencies; establish standard practices; and develop, enforce, recommend changes, and ensure that government agencies comply with the law. Led by the Minister of Labor's Child Labor Unit, includes representatives from the National Social Security Fund; the Ministries of Social Affairs, Public Health, Justice, and Agriculture; and the National Employment Office.(14) Includes two subcommittees on child labor in agriculture and street work, which met regularly in 2015.(14)
National Steering Committee on Trafficking	Coordinate efforts against human trafficking, including child trafficking. Based at the Ministry of Labor and meet on a monthly basis.(46) In 2015, the Committee replaced the Inter-Ministerial Task Force on Human Trafficking.(46)
UN	Coordinate efforts to address the needs of children affected by the Syrian refugee crisis in Lebanon and maintain interagency standards for child protection. The UN representatives identify crucial concerns, including factors that make children vulnerable to child labor, and make recommendations to the Government on the use of resources, including referral services.(30, 55)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Lebanon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Lebanon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2016)	Establishes strategies for addressing the worst forms of child labor. Includes a National Awareness Strategy to be carried out by the Ministry of Labor's Child Labor Unit and the ILO.(48, 56)
National Social Development Strategy	Establishes a plan for a comprehensive social, health, and educational program.(57) Includes the protection of working children and the implementation of the Higher Council for Childhood's strategy to address the needs of street children.(58)
Work Plan to prevent and respond to the association of children with armed violence in Lebanon	Provides the framework for the prevention of children involved in armed conflict. In 2015, the Government intensified its efforts to implement this Work Plan.(27)
National Action Plan for Human Rights	Aims to combat demand for all forms of exploitation, including trafficking in persons, especially children.(46)
Ministry of Education and Higher Education's Education Sector Development Plan (2010–2015)*	Aimed to improve quality learning during pre-school, general, and higher education levels; integral part of the National Social Development Strategy.(59)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, the Ministry of Social Affairs' Higher Council for Childhood, in cooperation with World Vision, finalized a sectoral action plan on child trafficking, pending ministerial approval.(14)

The Ministry of Justice began to provide training to social workers and NGOs on the standard operating procedures for child protection, including protection against human trafficking, which defines the role of each government agency in implementing relevant laws.(14, 19)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Lebanon funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor among Syrian Refugees and their Host Communities in Jordan and Lebanon (2015–2016)*	EU-funded, 1.5-year project, implemented by the ILO to conduct research on the hazards of child labor in certain sectors; promote awareness of child labor, including raising awareness among children of their rights; build the technical capacity of governments, employers, and workers' organizations to improve referrals and respond to cases of child labor; and provide training on preventing child labor, removing children, and providing services.(60)
Higher Council for Childhood's Program to Eliminate Child Labor and Street Children	Funded by the Arab Council for Children and Development, the program includes training for the media on how to cover child labor cases, a study on street children in collaboration with St. Joseph's University, training programs for social workers, and awareness campaigns for the general public.(48) In 2015, the Council added information on children's rights to school curricula.(46)
Program to Support Children Working on the Street (2014–2016)	Joint UNHCR and International Rescue Committee program to identify children engaged in child labor on the street, mitigate risks by providing psycho-social support and emergency services, and track incidents of violence. In 2015, the program trained 100 law enforcement officers on child protection and the vulnerabilities of street-based children, as well as staff of different NGOs on how to identify children engaged in child labor and refer them to governmental agencies.(14) Between 2014 and the end of 2015, the program assisted 488 children.(14)
Child Protection Committee	Joint program by UNICEF and the Ministry of Social Affairs. Addresses the worst forms of child labor through interventions, including psychological counseling; raising awareness among employers to reduce the risks for children engaged in child labor; and working with employers to decrease working hours for children and to improve working conditions.(19) Currently, also implements programs for children in armed conflict.(14)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR)*	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build the local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation by addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards, improving monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor, and improving the implementation of the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(61)

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(62) In 2015, more than 4,000 households were visited and more than 2,700 were interviewed. The interview and data entry process remain ongoing.(62)
Reaching All Children through Education	Part of the No Lost Generation initiative, a joint effort of the Ministry of Education and Higher Education, UNHCR, UNICEF, and the World Bank to improve access to education.(19) $94 million campaign, funded by UNHCR, UNICEF, the World Bank, and other donors, aims to register 200,000 children between the ages of 3 and 14 to access education in the academic year 2015–2016, including families who withdrew their children from school to engage in child labor. The Initiative provides free education for Lebanese and refugee children up to grade nine. In the 2014–2015 academic year, 106,000 children were enrolled.(63) The Ministry of Education and Higher Education also oversees a pilot Accelerated Learning Program, designed for children who have been out of school for more than 2 years.(63)
Education Program for Syrian Refugee Children	The Ministry of Education and Higher Education and UNHCR support the War Child Holland initiative, which provides education to qualified refugee children in 13 public schools in Beirut and Mount Lebanon. Supports second-shift courses and informal educational activities designed to give students the necessary skills to enroll in public schools.(64)
National Poverty Alleviation Program†	Funded by the Government, the Italian Foreign Ministry, the World Bank, and the Canadian Embassy, this Ministry of Social Affairs' program pays school tuition and book costs for 74,000 families living in extreme poverty.(14)
Action to Protect and Assist Vulnerable and Exploited Migrant Workers (2013–2016)	$1.8 million EU- and Italian Ministry of the Interior-funded, 2-year regional project implemented by the IOM in five countries to build the capacity of governments and civil society organizations to apply international standards to migrant workers, provide assistance to migrant workers, raise awareness among the workers of their rights, and reduce bias and discrimination in the general public against migrant workers.(65, 66) In 2015, the project held a workshop for government officials, including those from the Ministries of Labor and Justice, to improve the referral mechanism to identify and provide assistance for victims of human trafficking.(67) Judges and prosecutors took part in a roundtable discussion on victim protection.(65) The Ministry of Justice and the IOM launched a public service announcement to raise awareness about human trafficking and inform the public on how to report suspected cases to Lebanese authorities.(65)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Lebanon.

The Ministry of Justice, in cooperation with the Caritas Lebanon Migrant Center, launched a public awareness campaign on human trafficking that was broadcast on several television stations.(54) In 2015, the Ministry of Labor's Child Labor Unit provided training for employers and workers in Bekaa Valley on child labor in agriculture. It also held an awareness-raising campaign in Akkar on child labor in agriculture. The Child Labor Unit revised an agreement between the Farmers' Union and the Ministry of the Interior to raise the age from 10 to 13 years for Syrian children who accompany their parents in seasonal agricultural work.(14)

The scarcity of shelters for child-trafficking victims results in some children being placed in juvenile detention centers.(32) The lack of shelters and resources to effectively handle child labor and trafficking cases puts children at a heightened risk of further exploitation.(23)

Although Lebanon has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, including child labor for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Lebanon (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Accede to the CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, which the Government signed in 2002.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that debt bondage is criminally prohibited.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Track and make publicly available information on the number of labor inspectors and their training system; the number of labor inspections, including those conducted at worksites and through desk reviews; the number of violations found, and the penalties imposed and collected; whether routine, targeted, and unannounced inspections were conducted; and whether a reciprocal referral system exists between labor authorities and social services.	2009 – 2015
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
	Ensure adequate funding for equipment and transportation for the Ministry of Labor inspectors.	2011 – 2015
	Make publicly available information on the training system for criminal investigators, and the number of violations and prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that child victims of human trafficking and children engaged in begging are treated under the law as victims, rather than as criminals.	2011 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Development Plan.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that noncitizen children, including refugee and stateless children, have access to education.	2010 – 2015
	Increase the number of shelters for juvenile victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Lesotho

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Lesotho made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Government created an implementation strategy for the National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor, published implementing regulations for the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2011, and established an Anti-Trafficking in Persons Task Force to collect data on human trafficking. However, children in Lesotho continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in herding cattle and commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Lesotho law does not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, and a gap between the compulsory education age and the minimum age for employment leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. A lack of government resources for enforcement and social programs also remains a major challenge to combatting child labor in Lesotho.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Lesotho are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in herding cattle and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Lesotho.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	28.1 (124,632)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	80.7

Lesotho's HIV/AIDS rate in adults is 23.4 percent, the second highest rate in the world. Thirty-four percent of children in Lesotho are orphans, due to the high rate of HIV/AIDS among adults.(9, 10, 14-16) Children, mostly HIV/AIDS orphans driven by poverty, migrate from rural to urban areas to engage in commercial sexual exploitation for survival.(10, 13, 17) Some Basotho girls voluntarily migrate to South Africa for work in domestic service and later become victims of forced labor in prostitution.(3)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Lesotho has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	13‡	Article 3 of the Education Act (11, 23)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 3 of the Education Act (11, 23); Section 22(k) of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act (19)

* No conscription (24)

‡ Age calculated based on available information

The Ministry of Employment and Labor reported that it would revise the Labour Code to incorporate the 2014 guidelines that mandated protection of herd boys and prohibited the use of children for hazardous work.(9) Although there are maximum penalties for violations of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, the law does not set minimum penalties for employing underage children in night work, industrial undertakings, or hazardous work for first-time offenders.(19)

Although the Government of Lesotho does not have a law that specifies the minimum age for voluntary military service, the Lesotho Defense Force has a policy prohibiting the recruitment of children under age 18.(25, 26) Lesotho's compulsory education age is through 13, which makes children at age 14 particularly vulnerable to child labor since they are not required to be in school and have not reached the minimum age for work.(9, 18) The ILO Committee of Experts urged the Government to collaborate with the Ministry of Education and Training to equate the compulsory education age and minimum age for work.(9, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE)	Enforce child labor laws, including hazardous child labor, and as a part of general labor inspections assess compliance with child labor laws.(1)
National Police, Child and Gender Protection Unit (CGPU)	Investigate child labor violations and work in conjunction with MOLE to enforce child labor laws, including those related to hazardous and forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and child trafficking.(1)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute child labor law offenders.(1)
Children's Court	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(1)

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Employment reviewed the Labour Code with the aim of making revisions that would authorize labor inspectors to conduct child labor investigations in the informal sector on private farms and in homes.(9)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Lesotho took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2015, funding for inspections was inadequate, and inspectors lacked adequate resources and vehicles to conduct labor investigations to identify and address child labor violations. No inspections were carried out in the informal sector.(9) In 2015, USDOL, in collaboration with the U.S. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, trained 35 labor inspectors and factory representatives on occupational safety and health requirements to ensure compliance with labor laws. (9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Lesotho took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the LMPS was responsible for the enforcement of criminal laws pertaining to child labor and employed 116 police officers to enforce laws nationwide.(3, 9, 29) The National Police, Child and Gender Protection Unit received funding from the general operations budget of the national police because it did not have its own funding pool.(1, 9) During the year, the Government of Lesotho published implementing regulations for the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2011, held cross-border awareness campaigns with South African officials on identifying and documenting potential trafficking victims, and created a new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Task Force.(30)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Task Team	Implement the National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor. Led by the MOLE's Child Labor Unit, the team includes representatives from government ministries, trade unions, NGOs, and international organizations.(1, 17)
Multi-Sectoral Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons	Spearhead anti-trafficking in persons initiatives and approve legislation and policies to prevent human trafficking. Chaired by the Commissioner of Refugees and also include government ministries; local government members; and representatives from NGOs, international organizations, and faith-based organizations.(31)
District Child Protection Teams	Coordinate child protection matters, including child labor, at the district level. Led by the Ministry of Social Development, it includes representatives from the Government, private sector, NGOs, and community support groups.(1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Lesotho has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor (APEC)	Ensures all major interventions regarding child labor are in place while preventing duplication of efforts. Constitutes a strategic program framework based on existing and planned interventions in relevant social and economic sectors, some linked to other program initiatives.(32) During the year, the Government adopted an implementation strategy for APEC.(9)
National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Framework and Action Plan	Supports the national and international obligations and commitments by strengthening approaches to protect children against the worst forms of child labor in support of the vision to "eradicate all forms of trafficking in persons in Lesotho, protect victims of trafficking in persons, arrest and successfully prosecute offenders and put in place preventative measures."(32)
National Policy on Orphans and Vulnerable Children	Safeguards the rights of orphans and vulnerable children to an education, promotes access to apprenticeships and vocational and life skills of orphans and vulnerable children, and implements child labor prevention programs.(33)
Lesotho United Nations Development Assistance Framework (2013–2017)	Includes strategies to reduce poverty in Lesotho.(34) Promotes education for children, supports youth employment, and builds the Government's capacity to provide social welfare services to vulnerable children.(34)

Policy	Description
Lesotho: Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper—National Strategic Development Plan (2012/2013–2016/2017)	Outlines prevention measures and identifies child protection services (CGPU/police, social welfare, health, and the justice system) and their capacity to respond adequately to cases of violence, abuse, and exploitation of children, including child labor.(35)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2005–2015)*	Outlines strategies to improve access, equity, and quality of education, as well as to reduce school fees and provide school meals to vulnerable children.(36)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Lesotho funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 and established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Lesotho.(37)
Awareness-Raising Campaign on Human Trafficking	Ministry of Gender and Youth, Sports and Recreation program operated with support from an NGO. Facilitate public awareness raising on human trafficking and gender-based violence in rural communities.(6, 31) Translated the anti-trafficking law into local languages and distributed it at border posts.(31)
Awareness Raising for Herd Boyst	Ministry of Gender and Youth, Sports and Recreation program that conducted workshops for herd boys. Workshops provided information on trafficking issues, health, HIV/AIDS, and sexual reproductive health.(31)
ILO—Decent Work Country Program (2012–2017)	ILO-funded program supported by MOLE that includes objectives on creating youth employment as a poverty reduction strategy, establishing social protection coverage for citizens, and facilitating social dialogue among employers and workers.(10)
Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC) Scholarships Program†	Government program that pays for the tuition, uniforms, supplies, and boarding fees for OVCs.(1)

† Program is funded by the Government of Lesotho.

Although Lesotho has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Lesotho (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Adopt laws to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.	2009 – 2015
	Establish minimum penalties for those who commit offenses under the Children's Protection and Welfare Act.	2011 – 2015
	Legally establish 15 as the age up to which education is compulsory, to match the minimum age for full-time work.	2010 – 2015
Enforcement	Provide adequate funding for labor inspectors and adequate funding and training for criminal investigators to address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted in all relevant sectors allowed by law to facilitate enforcement of child labor laws.	2014 – 2015
	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties to facilitate the enforcement of child labor laws.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing youth policies such as the Education Sector Strategic Plan.	2012 – 2015
Social Programs	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Liberia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Liberia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued to redirect resources to address the aftermath of the Ebola Virus Disease outbreak. Thousands of children were orphaned, separated, or unaccompanied as a result of the outbreak. In March, the Government reopened schools after a six month closure, and in May, the World Health Organization declared the country Ebola free. Subsequently, in June, the Government passed the Decent Work Bill, which contained a list of hazardous work prohibited for children. However, children in Liberia are engaged in child labor, including in the production of rubber and mining diamonds, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in domestic work. The Liberia National Police's Women and Children Protection Section continue to lack sufficient resources to conduct investigations and enforce child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Liberia are engaged in child labor, including in the production of rubber and mining diamonds.(1, 2) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in domestic work.(3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Liberia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	16.6 (136,340)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	75.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	14.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		58.8

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Labor Force Survey, 2010.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of rubber (2, 7, 8)
	Production of charcoal* (7)
	Farming activities,* including production of cocoa,* coffee,* and cassava* (7, 9-11)
Industry	Mining for diamonds‡ and gold*‡ (1, 2, 4, 9, 10, 12)
	Cutting* and crushing stone (2, 4, 8, 10, 13-15)
	Construction, activities unknown (2, 4)
Services	Domestic work* (4, 13, 14)
	Street work, including vending,* begging,* hawking goods,* and carrying heavy loads* (2, 7, 8, 13, 16-18)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs* (4, 19)
	Forced labor in domestic work, street vending, farming, mining, begging, and work on rubber plantations each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 4, 19)
	Commercial sexual exploitation* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (20)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked within Liberia for commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, forced begging, and forced labor in street vending, alluvial diamond mines, and on rubber plantations. Children are also trafficked from Liberia to Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Nigeria, and Sierra Leone.(2, 3) Children in rural communities, like Margibi, engage in rubber tapping and coal burning activities. In contrast, children in urban cities, particularly Monrovia and the surrounding communities in Montserrado County, crush rocks near construction sites as a form of livelihood.(15)

According to the Children's Law, primary education is free. However, in practice, many schools charge fees, which may prevent some children from attending school.(7) The limited number of schools in some areas also impedes access to education. In addition, sources indicate that girls may face barriers to accessing education due to sexual abuse by male teachers in schools. (11, 21, 22) All of these obstacles increase the risk of children engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(23, 24) Liberian parents are required by law to register their infants within 14 days of birth.(25) However, fewer than 5 percent of births are registered. Unable to prove their citizenship, non-registered children may have difficulty addressing citizenship and nationality questions, which makes them vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(26, 27)

In 2015, the Government continued to focus its resources on addressing an outbreak of the Ebola Virus Disease, which may have impacted its ability to address the worst forms of child labor. The outbreak left thousands of children orphaned, separated, or unaccompanied, which makes them vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 28) In March 2015, the Government reopened schools after a 6-month closure due to the Ebola outbreak. Teachers prepared themselves by carrying thermometers to test students' temperatures and brought chlorinated water for the students to wash their hands.(29, 30) In May 2015, the WHO declared Liberia Ebola free.(31)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Liberia has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

* No conscription (38)

In June 2015, the Government passed the Decent Work Act, which prohibits hazardous work for children under age 18. Section 21.4 of the Decent Work Act prohibits the use of children in work underground and under water, as well as work involving dangerous machines, carrying heavy loads, and exposure to hazardous substances, temperatures, noise levels, and vibrations.(34). Although Section 74 of the Labor Law prohibits employment of children under age 16, it minimally penalizes offenders with a fine of $1.18 USD (100 Liberian dollars).(32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce labor laws and refer suspected child labor cases to the National Commission on Child Labor (NACOMAL) for investigation. (2, 10) Conduct child labor investigations. Determine validity of child labor allegations and refer cases for further investigation to the Liberia National Police's Women and Children Protection Section (WCPS).(10)
WCPS	Enforce laws relating to violations involving the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(40)
Liberia National Police's Anti-Trafficking Unit	Ensure human trafficking training is integrated into police orientation to train officers on the enforcement of anti-human trafficking laws.(27)
Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization	Enforce human trafficking laws in international cases.(10)
Liberian Transnational Crime Unit	Coordinate responses to international organized crime, including monitoring and prosecuting criminal violations involving the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(41)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Liberia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

‡ Data are from the Government of Liberia for the period from January 1, 2015 to December 31, 2016.

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed 54 officials to work on labor issues, consisting of 1 inspector general, 14 labor commissioners, and 39 labor inspectors. Labor inspectors conducted unannounced inspections of construction companies and private businesses.(2) The MOL does not have any labor inspectors dedicated solely to child labor issues and refers suspected child labor cases to the National Commission on Child Labor (NACOMAL). The NACOMAL has the primary responsibility of conducting child labor investigations yet has no child labor investigators of its own. In addition, NACOMAL has a limited budget and limited staff. (2) NACOMAL's child labor investigations are carried out with the assistance of the MOL, the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection, LNP, or WCPS and the three NACOMAL staff members that include the Director, Assistant Director, and the Filing Clerk. (2, 43) During the year, the MOL, in collaboration with Winrock International's Actions to Reduce Child Labor in Areas of Rubber Production Project, conducted a 5-day "Training of Trainers" for the National Steering Committee on Child Labor. The workshop focused on building the capacity of labor commissioners and inspectors to address child labor violations.(2, 44, 45)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Liberia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (42)	Unknown (2)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (42)	Unknown (2)
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (42)	Yes (2)

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (42)	Unknown (2)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (42)	Unknown (2)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (42)	Yes (2)

The Liberia National Police's (LNP) Women and Children Protection Section reported having limited resources to conduct investigations, including a lack of vehicles, fuel, sufficient training, finances, communications equipment, and investigative equipment.(2, 46) The LNP refers child endangerment cases for prosecution to the Ministry of Justice. The data for child endangerment cases prosecuted through the Ministry of Justice are not disaggregated to determine the number involving child labor violations.(2) In 2015, the LNP referred 22 child endangerment cases for prosecution, but details about each case are limited. In addition, the LNP reported that enforcement efforts on child labor violations are still inadequate, despite employing 192 Women and Children Protection Section officers to investigate allegations of abuse against women and children.(2) During the year, the LNP had trainings that supported the drafting of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
NACOMAL	Monitor child labor issues and develop child labor policies. Led by the MOL and comprised of representatives from 16 organizations, including NGOs and international and civil society organizations. (47) Objectives include reforming national child labor laws and creating a national child labor database to assist with conducting surveys to determine the magnitude of the child labor issue in the country.(47)
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Advocate for eliminating child labor, especially its worst forms. Chaired by the MOL and comprised of government officials and workers' organizations.(2) Includes four subcommittees on resource mobilization, advocacy, training and legal development, and monitoring and evaluation. Met quarterly during the reporting period.(42, 43) During the reporting period, the NSC conducted two trainings. The first training was sponsored by the ILO and focused on developing goals for the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor.(43) The first training included the following participants: Ministry of Internal Affairs, UNICEF, Ministry of Education, WCPS, Ministry of Lands Mines and Energy, Ministry of Youth and Sports, the Liberia Chamber of Commerce, Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection, Child Fund Liberia, Winrock, Liberian Children Representative Forum, and the Liberia Labor Congress. The second training focused on the NSC's mandate and discussions involved topics on child labor-related concepts and definitions on child labor. (43)The second training included the 38 members of the NSC.(43)
Child Protection Network	Coordinate child protection efforts through monthly meetings to discuss child protection issues, including child labor and human trafficking. Chaired by the Ministry of Gender and Development, and comprised of the MOL, the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare, the WCPS, civil society organizations, and several NGOs.(4) Also responsible for coordinating referrals of child victims of abuse to social services providers, with support from international and national organizations.(10, 14) Met on a monthly basis in 2015.(2)
Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force	Coordinate anti-human trafficking activities. Chaired by the MOL and includes the Commissioner of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; the Liberia National Police; and representatives from the Ministries of Justice, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and Ministry of Internal Affairs.(40) Trained 160 law enforcement and community leaders on identifying victims of human trafficking and their perpetrators in 2015.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Liberia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Trafficking in Persons	Outlines the Government's anti-human trafficking efforts, including for child victims.(10)
Direct Assistance and Support to Trafficked Victims Standard Operation Procedures	Establishes roles and responsibilities for coordinating government assistance to human trafficking victims.(27)
National Social Welfare Policy	Prioritizes the development of action plans and policies that target children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including child trafficking.(48)
National Employment Policy*	Aims to provide vocational training for youth.(49)
Rubber Industry Master Plan (2010–2040)*	Prioritizes the development of the rubber industry and includes provisions for improving workers' standard of living and access to credit, as well as children's access to education.(50)
Education Sector Plan (2010–2020)*	Aims to improve the education infrastructure, as well as the access to, and quality of, primary education.(51)
2030 Vision Policy (2012–2017)*	Outlines the Government of Liberia's goal to become a middle-income country by 2030 by increasing focus on education and livelihoods.(52)
Revised National Youth Policy (2012–2017)*	Outlines the Government of Liberia's National Youth Policy, which includes employment and education components.(53–55)
National HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan (2015–2020)*	Outlines strategy to prevent new HIV/AIDS infections in youth by promoting the use of condoms and providing HIV/AIDS counseling. The plan also targets vulnerable populations, including out-of-school youth.(56)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

During 2015, the Government did not renew child labor related policies, including the National Strategy for Child Survival, which aimed to improve the literacy rate of youth, and the National Health Policy, which sought to improve the health care delivery system in the country.(57, 58)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Liberia participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Anti-Trafficking Awareness Campaign†	Government of Liberia MOL program that uses radio and billboard messages to raise public awareness on human trafficking.(11, 27)
Liberia Agriculture Investment Program	$175 million, multi-donor program that aims to enhance household livelihoods in the agriculture sector by building linkages with markets and improving rural infrastructure, which may have a positive effect on reducing child labor.(59)
Actions to Reduce Child Labor in Areas of Rubber Production (2012–2016)	$6.2 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Winrock International to combat child labor in the rubber sector. Aims to withdraw or prevent 10,100 children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor by providing education, as well as livelihoods support to 3,700 vulnerable families. Implemented in collaboration with local rubber companies.(60) In 2015, the project enrolled 1,096 students in the Accelerated Learning Program, provided School Success Kits to 5,539 children, and trained child labor monitoring committee members on the dangers and effects of child labor, in 2015. During the Ebola outbreak, enrolled 230 students into the Model Farm School Program.(61)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Liberia.(62) In 2015, worked on developing the National Action Plan on Child Labor by holding several meetings with a group of government officials as well as an ILO national consultant. Government officials involved with a group included the MOL; the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy; the Liberia Labor Congress; the Liberia Chamber of Commerce; UNICEF; Winrock ; and the ILO.(63)
Social Cash Transfer Program	EU-funded program that provides regular payments to poor and “labor constrained” households (households in which the majority of household members are unable to work for reasons such as disability) in Bomi County, along with other counties.(64) Targets 5,000 households, and each beneficiary household receives between $10 and $25 per month.(64)
Fast Track Initiative Grant for Basic Education	$40 million, World Bank-funded project that aims to improve primary education access and quality.(65)$40 million, World Bank-funded project that aims to improve primary education access and quality.(65)
Feed the Future Project (2011–2015)	$75 million, USAID-funded project that aims to improve food security and nutrition among vulnerable populations.(66, 67)
Girls’ Opportunities to Access Learning Program	Funded by the Millennium Challenge Corporation’s Threshold Grant and led by USAID; focuses on increasing girls’ enrollment, attendance, and retention in primary schools in Bong, Grand Bassa, and Lofa counties.(68)
Youth and Workforce Development (Advancing Youth Project)	USAID-funded program that builds the capacity of the Ministry of Education and NGOs to address the needs of out-of-school youth by providing access to alternative basic education and providing sustainable livelihood opportunities.(68)
Refugee Camps and Services (2012–2015)	$42.5 million, UNHCR-funded project that maintains refugee camps and provides essential services to Ivorian refugees, including children.(69, 70)$42.5 million, UN High Commissioner for Refugees-funded project that maintains refugee camps and provides essential services to Ivorian refugees, including children.(69, 70) There are currently 3 refugee camps with an estimated 21,000 refugees receiving assistance.(43)

† Program is funded by the Government of Liberia.

Although Liberia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Liberia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that penalties for violating the employment minimum age requirements are sufficient to deter child labor violations.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the number of labor inspections conducted and whether inspections targeted relevant sectors in which there is evidence of labor violations.	2010 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on whether criminal law enforcement officers received trainings, and publish data on the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2015
	Fully fund child labor enforcement mechanisms and prosecution efforts, such as the MOL, the WCPS, and the Anti-Human Trafficking Task Force, and provide necessary training for such officials to enforce child labor laws.	2010 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing health, education, and youth policies.	2010 – 2015
	Renew or develop policies that improve youth literacy rates, and that improve the health care delivery system, such as the National Strategy for Child Survival and the National Health Policy.	2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in farming and construction to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Improve access to education by building additional schools, ensuring children are registered at birth, addressing sexual abuse in schools, and subsidizing the cost of school fees.	2012 – 2015
	Expand existing social programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Macedonia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Macedonia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government amended its laws to classify the forced begging of children as a human trafficking offense and codify that children cannot provide legally valid consent to engage in prostitution. The Ministry of the Interior collaborated with UNHCR and smaller NGOs to draft standard operating procedures for addressing the needs of unaccompanied and separated migrant, refugee, or asylum-seeking children transiting through the country, which the Government adopted in December. Mobile teams of social workers and plainclothes police officers from the Ministry of the Interior removed 78 children from street work and took them to daycare centers. However, children in Macedonia are engaged in child labor, including in begging.

Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Macedonia lacks recent, comprehensive data on the nature and extent of child labor in the country, including activities involving farming, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships. In addition, the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Macedonia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Macedonia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	18.3 (44,161)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	86.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	19.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		89.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2009, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* including grapes,* watermelon,* peaches,* peppers,* cucumbers,* tomatoes,* and apricots* (9, 10)
Services	Street work, including vending small items,* cleaning vehicle windshields,* scavenging, and begging (4-6, 9, 10) Working in commercial car washes* (9, 10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 11, 12) Forced begging (1-3, 5) Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (3, 11, 13, 14) Forced labor as wait staff and dancers in restaurants,* bars,* and nightclubs* (1, 2, 14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

The majority of children involved in child labor in Macedonia engage in street work, such as begging, cleaning vehicle windshields, and vending cigarettes and other small items in open markets and at bars and restaurants.(2, 5, 6) Some children engage in begging to help support their families, while others are forced to beg. The majority of children involved in street work, including begging and forced begging, are of the Roma ethnicity.(1-3, 5, 6) Macedonia lacks recent, comprehensive data on the nature and extent of child labor in the country, including activities involving farming, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.

The majority of victims of child trafficking in Macedonia are girls, ages 14 to 17, who have been trafficked domestically for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in restaurants, bars, and nightclubs, mostly near the cities of Tetovo and Gostivar.(1-3, 11, 13) Girls in Eastern and Central Macedonia have been identified as being at particularly high risk for human trafficking.(15) Girls, particularly Roma girls, are also trafficked for forced marriages in which they are subject to sexual and labor exploitation.(3, 11, 13)

In 2015, more than 920,000 migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers transited legally and illegally through Macedonia. Although most migrants who transited the country during the first half of 2015 were men, the number of unaccompanied child migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers from various countries, including Syria, Iraq, and Afghanistan, increased from October to December 2015.(3, 16) In November, the Government began enforcing restrictions that only allowed admission into the country to individuals from Syria, Afghanistan, and Iraq. Due to this policy, hundreds of migrants, including an unknown number of children, were prevented from entering Macedonia.(16) As a result, illegal migration increased.(16) Most of the migrants denied entry were from Iran, Pakistan, Sudan, Sri Lanka, Morocco, Liberia, Palestine, Nigeria, and the Ivory Coast.(14, 17) Children transiting through the country, either legally or illegally, are vulnerable to trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Unaccompanied Afghan children between ages 13 and 15 were especially vulnerable to being subjected to labor exploitation through debt bondage.(3, 16) Additionally, research could not determine whether the Government denied access to education for children detained in a Reception Center for Foreigners, known as Gazi Baba.(18)

The Laws on Primary Education and Secondary Education provide for education in Macedonian and Romani, along with the languages of several other ethnic minorities.(1) Some communities with a predominantly Roma population have access to Romani-language kindergarten and primary school classes.(19) However, the Government was unable to fully meet the demand for instruction in Romani due to a shortage of qualified teachers.(1) In addition, some Roma children had difficulty accessing education due to a lack of birth registration.(1, 12, 20) Schools for children with intellectual disabilities and classes for children with disabilities in mainstream schools have disproportionately high enrollment rates of Roma children. Sources attributed this phenomenon to discrimination against Roma children, based, in part, on faulty screening procedures for assessing intellectual disabilities or these children being enrolled into these programs without screening.(1, 21-23) Increased government funding for programs to eliminate barriers to education has raised school attendance rates among Roma children.(1) Barriers remain, however, and increase Roma children's vulnerability to child labor.

During the reporting period, the Government improved the accessibility of some school buildings for children with physical disabilities, incorporated technology to assist students with disabilities, and assigned educators with specialized training to some mainstream schools to support teachers who have children with disabilities in their classes. However, a pervasive social stigma against individuals with disabilities persists.(1, 22, 24)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Macedonia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 44 of the Constitution (25)

* No conscription (34)

In 2015, the Government amended Article 418-d (Trafficking in Children) of the Criminal Code to criminalize trafficking for child begging, substitute the term “child” for “under aged person,” and increase the penalties prescribed for clients of children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation to a minimum of 12 years of imprisonment.(5) However, the Government removed the criminal offense outlined under Article 191-a, which specifically criminalized prostitution of a child.(3, 5, 35)

As part of an effort to protect vulnerable refugees, migrants, and asylum seekers, including children, from being trafficked, the Government amended the Law on Asylum and Temporary Protection during the reporting period to allow foreign nationals who express in writing when they reach the border that they intend to file for asylum 72 hours to either freely pass through the country or submit a formal application for asylum. This legislative change allowed persons transiting through Macedonia to access public services and use public transportation, which, for some people, reduced their vulnerability to trafficking.(3)

In December 2015, the Government formally adopted standard operating procedures (SOPs), which the Ministry of the Interior (MOI), UNHCR, and smaller NGOs collaborated to draft, for addressing the needs of unaccompanied and separated migrant, refugee, or asylum-seeking children transiting through the country. These SOPs describe how government officials should handle their initial contact with these children, create a preliminary referral system to gather information, and require the appointment of both a guardian and an interpreter to attempt to prevent them from becoming victims of trafficking.(3, 16)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships.(5, 26) In addition, laws related to illicit activities are not sufficient, as the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.(29, 36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Labor Inspectorate (SLI)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor laws, and transmit cases of suspected criminal law violations to the Public Prosecutor. Inspectors conduct a minimum of 60 inspection visits per month, including both targeted and complaint-based inspections.(37) Operates as an autonomous agency.(19, 38)
Department of Social Inclusion within the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP)	Work with the police to seek out street children in need of assistance and track cases of forced child labor.(15, 19)
Centers for Social Work (CSWs) within the MLSP	Work with the Ombudsman's Office to register complaints about hazardous child labor. Investigate children's participation in street work, such as vending and begging.(38) Work with the Ministry of Interior (MOI) to form mobile teams consisting of one plainclothes officer and one social worker to identify street children, including child laborers, and remove them from hazardous situations. In 2015, these mobile teams identified and registered 78 street children, more than 95 percent of whom were Roma.(3, 5)
Ombudsman's Office	Work with the MLSP's CSWs to register complaints about hazardous child labor. Includes a special unit for the investigation of violations of child rights.(38)
MOI	Enforce criminal laws, including laws related to hazardous child labor. Investigate cases of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities through its special police unit for organized crime, corruption, and human trafficking.(38)
Office of the National Referral Mechanism	Accept reports of potential victims of human trafficking, including children. Refer potential cases of human trafficking to law enforcement authorities for investigation, and refer potential victims to receive social services(15, 39) During the reporting period, representatives from the NRM and social workers were allowed to participate in the initial investigative process, which included the identification interview.(3) Children found to be victims of child trafficking are removed from the situation, placed in shelters for trafficked children, and given immediate medical and psychological care.(39)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute possible criminal law violations, including those involving the worst forms of child labor.(40) Has an Organized Crime and Corruption Unit with four prosecutors dedicated to cases of child abuse and the worst forms of child labor. The Skopje Basic Prosecutor's Office, a subunit of the Public Prosecutor's Office, has eight prosecutors dedicated to child abuse cases.(14, 39)

Although the State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) does not have a complaint mechanism to receive child labor complaints, the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP) receives child labor complaints through Centers for Social Care and the Office of the Ombudsman and refers complaints to the SLI.(5)

In previous years, data about inspections that the Ministry of Labor and Social Policy (MLSP) conducted were not regularly shared among offices because a central database did not exist. This led to inspectors preparing for inspections without knowing the results of previous visits, and labor and occupational safety and health inspectors, who inspected approximately 10–20 percent of the same entities, writing their own reports without having a mechanism to learn about the findings in each other’s inspections.(37) In 2014, the Government separated the SLI from the MLSP to begin functioning as an independent entity.(38) Research could not determine whether issues with a lack of data sharing on inspections among the different offices at the SLI and between the SLI and MLSP remain.

Although the Government formally adopted the SOPs to provide assistance to unaccompanied and separated children transiting Macedonia in December 2015, a source indicated that there were concerns with how the Government handled situations involving these children. During the year, the Government assigned random adult refugees guardianship of unaccompanied children, granting them legal control over the children and their travel documents.(16) This increased the unaccompanied minors’ risk for being trafficked, as there were anecdotal reports that some of these guardians extorted and abused the children assigned to them. UNHCR staff worked with local authorities to end this practice and improve implementation of the SOPs.(16)

Operators of a hotline that receives inquiries regarding human trafficking and provides emotional and psycho-social support to callers were trained on early indicators of human trafficking. In 2015, these operators received approximately 400 calls from citizens; however, research could not determine how many of these calls were related to child labor.(3) The MLSP drafted an analysis of the data from this hotline during the reporting period, which focused on the connection between high-risk families and children who are subjected to labor exploitation. The MLSP also collaborated with the National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration to develop new early indicators of human trafficking to identify proactively more victims in the future.(3)

In 2015, 255 police officers, including members of the Border Police, and social workers received training on trafficking in persons from various organizations, such as the MOI Unit for Border Relations and Migration, IOM, the European Agency for the Management of Operational Cooperation at the External Borders of the Member States of the European Union, and UNHCR. Also, the National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration, MLSP, and MOI, with the support of the German International Cooperation Agency, provided specialized training to Police Academy cadets on human trafficking issues.⁽³⁾ A total of 13 judges and 6 prosecutors participated in training sessions and conferences on trafficking in persons held by the Academy for Judges and Prosecutors, the Council of Europe, and the Public Prosecutors' Association. Training on the prevention of human trafficking and how to assist potential child trafficking victims was provided to 14 employees of orphanages and the center for juvenile delinquents.⁽³⁾

According to records from the Government's Centers for Social Work, in 2015, mobile teams of social workers and police from the MOI removed 78 children from street work—more than 95 percent of whom were Roma—and took them to daycare centers. In three cases, the MLSP revoked parental rights due to abuse and negligence, and it also filed criminal charges in 11 cases against parents who allegedly abused or neglected their children.⁽⁵⁾ Additionally, the MLSP removed 20 children from their families and subsequently placed them in either foster homes or institutions for homeless children.⁽⁵⁾

During the reporting period, the government officially recognized three victims of child trafficking, all of whom were female. Two of the victims were trafficked for the purpose of forced marriage in Italy and Croatia, and one for sexual and labor exploitation in Macedonia.⁽¹⁴⁾ Government authorities referred all three victims to a shelter, where they received the full range of protection and assistance available to victims. Two of the victims were domestic and remained in Macedonia, while the third was a foreign national and was subsequently repatriated to Albania.⁽¹⁴⁾

In 2015, the special police unit of the MOI had five officers, who participated on the mobile teams with social workers and were dedicated to investigating crimes involving child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor. The MOI also had 80 officers dedicated to enforcing laws against child abuse and exploitation throughout the country's 38 police districts.⁽⁵⁾

The Prosecutor's Office suffers from underfunding, and the process required to investigate and gather evidence for human trafficking cases can be lengthy and complex.⁽³⁹⁾ Consequently, although human trafficking cases are given high priority and tried by the Organized Crime and Corruption Prosecutor's Unit at the main court in Skopje, these cases sometimes remain in the court system for years without conclusion.^(38, 39) Despite the Government's acknowledgement that trafficking of children remains a problem in the country, civil society organizations have voiced concern that the Government's attention has shifted away from taking concrete action to address it, such as by proactively identifying child trafficking victims, in favor of focusing on the refugee and ongoing domestic political crises.⁽³⁾

During the reporting period, prosecutors obtained prison convictions against seven defendants for trafficking in children. Four defendants were each issued four-year sentences for trafficking in children. ⁽¹⁴⁾ One defendant was issued a six-year prison sentence for trafficking in children. Three were convicted of trafficking in children for labor, and two, for sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁴⁾ Two defendants were issued 11-and-a-half year suspended sentences each, for trafficking in children for sexual exploitation.⁽¹⁴⁾ Information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties implemented for criminal acts involving worst forms of child labor other than child trafficking were not available.

In 2015, the Border Police did not use a formal, robust screening process to identify potential human trafficking victims because they processed the entry of hundreds of migrants. However, some Border Police and NGO workers who had been trained on indicators of human trafficking conducted initial screenings using visual indicators, such as multiple children traveling alone.⁽¹⁶⁾ In cases in which migrants, refugees, or asylum-seeking children presented indicators of being trafficked, the Border Police or other MOI personnel were required to follow established procedures to contact the MOI's Anti-Trafficking Unit. However, a source indicated that government officials did not always observe these procedures due to security concerns and prioritizing the processing of these migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers quickly to move them through and out of Macedonia.⁽¹⁶⁾ Additionally, an NGO identified 94 potential victims of human trafficking among the migrant, refugee, and asylum-seeking populations; research could not determine whether any of these individuals were children. Upon being notified of these cases, the Government did not investigate them further, due in part to the limited amount of time the potential victims stayed in Macedonia.⁽³⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Protection of the Rights of Children	Coordinate efforts to protect children's rights, including by preventing and eliminating child labor, through the provision of social services.(38) Develop and oversee implementation of the National Plan of Action on the Rights of the Child.(3, 41)
National Coordination Body for Implementation of the Action Plan for Prevention and Countering Sexual Abuse of Children and Pedophilia	Implement the National Action Plan. Led by the MLSP and made up of representatives from relevant ministries and NGOs.(27, 41) Maintain a hotline for reporting sexual abuse of children and children on the street.(27, 39, 42)
National Coordination Body for Protection of Children from Abuse and Neglect	Oversee implementation of the National Action Plan for Prevention and Countering Abuse and Neglect of Children. Members of this body include representatives from civil society and the WHO and UNICEF country offices.(43)
National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration	Coordinate the work of all institutions involved in combating trafficking in persons. Led by the National Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons, 14 representatives from 9 governmental institutions participate on the Commission.(38) Includes the Sub-Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Children, which serves as an advisory body to the Commission on all forms of child trafficking.(3, 19, 38)

Although the National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration organized regular meetings in 2015 to assess the overall situation in Macedonia regarding trafficking in persons, it played a limited role in coordinating efforts on prevention or protection among NGOs and the three local anti-trafficking in persons committees.(3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Macedonia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan for Children on the Streets (2013–2015)	Aimed to combat the harmful effects of street work by providing street children with services, including education.(44) Intended to provide a systemic and holistic response to the issue of children on the streets, with an emphasis on social services, health care, and inclusion in the educational system.(27, 44)
National Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration (2013–2016)	Focuses on preventing human trafficking by reducing the vulnerability of at-risk populations, reducing the demand for the purchase of sexual services, improving victim identification, and increasing efforts to combat trafficking in persons for forced begging and other forms of labor exploitation.(11) In 2015, the National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration, with input from the international community and NGOs, amended this plan to add a funding directive for each goal and objective that outlines the ministry responsible for allocating resources to achieve that specific activity. This change facilitates the budget allocation process and allows for ministries to be held accountable for their role in combating trafficking in persons.(3)
National Strategy for the Fight Against Poverty and Social Exclusion (2010–2020)	Addresses children's rights, such as social protection, social inclusion, health, education, and employment.(38) Includes goals of increasing birth registration among Roma and other minorities, expanding patrol services to identify and support street children, and improve the provision of social services for children involved in street work and begging. Implemented by the MLSP.(38, 45)
National Action Plan for Prevention and Countering Abuse and Neglect of Children (2013–2015)*	Aimed to provide a safe living environment for children by improving prevention and detection of abuse and neglect of children, as well as by providing treatment and rehabilitation of children who have been victims of abuse and neglect. Outlined a strategy for the implementation of these improvements on a national and local level.(19)
National Plan of Action on the Rights of the Child (2012–2015)	Aimed to promote equity, inclusion, and efficiency in the provision of services for children, such as health care and education.(46) Included providing direct assistance to withdraw children from child labor, rehabilitating victims, and providing children with better access to primary education.(47)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Despite the changes to add a funding directive for each goal and objective in the National Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration during the reporting period, a lack of sufficient government funding for this plan remained a challenge to its implementation.(3)

The implementation of the National Plan of Action on the Rights of the Child has been slow, with no funds specifically earmarked for its proposed activities, monitoring, or evaluation.(11) Research could not determine whether any of the goals or objectives of this plan were met during any of the years it was active, and, if so, what the results of the efforts to implement this plan were.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Macedonia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Conditional Cash Transfer Program†	Government program that provides cash assistance to certain Roma students who stay in school, discouraging their involvement in street work and begging.(39)
Day Center†	MLSP program that operates three government day centers and supports two others operated and partially funded by NGOs. One of these centers provides services, including education, health care, and counseling, to children working on the streets.(1) The Government also supports a small transit center for street children.(1) During 2015, day centers provided services to 78 children, a decline from 100 children in 2014.(3, 38)
Center for Victims of Human Trafficking and Transit Center for Foreign Victims of Trafficking†	In 2015, the Government discontinued its partnership with two NGOs to jointly run the Center for Victims of Human Trafficking, which was the first shelter of its kind in Macedonia that received all of its funding from the Government and local self-government institutions to provide housing, basic services, and reintegration services to victims, after the Government elected to no longer grant funding to the NGOs overseeing its operations.(3, 27, 48) The Government also provides partial support to the Transit Center for Foreign Victims of Trafficking, which is operated by NGOs.(48)
CSWs*	Government program of approximately 30 facilities that provide services to vulnerable groups, including street children and child victims of human trafficking. Services include counseling, education, and assistance with obtaining registration documents.(13, 38) CSW staff members have been trained on human trafficking issues.(48)
Social Worker, NGO Joint Mobile Teams†	Government social workers from CSWs and representatives of NGOs formed joint mobile teams to do outreach work in three major municipalities to detect human trafficking victims and at-risk individuals, including street children. Teams then worked to find solutions to address the needs of these vulnerable persons, including providing support to human trafficking victims and their families, and implementing reintegration programs.(27) The Government ended its partnership with NGOs to staff and run these joint teams in April 2015. These joint mobile teams were separate from the mobile teams of one social worker from a CSW and one plainclothes police officer from the MOI discussed in Table 5 of this report.(3) The Government also funds education seminars for parents on the dangers of allowing children to work and beg on the streets.(39)
Program to Reduce Demand for Commercial Sex Services	Government partnership program with Saints Cyril and Methodius University and the NGO Happy Childhood that organizes seminars and screens films to raise awareness about trafficking in persons. These events featured speakers, including lawyers and doctors, and materials that focused on reducing the demand for commercial sex services, such as discussions about some severe legal and medical consequences of procuring those services.(3)
Training for Foster Families as an Alternative Accommodation Option for Child Trafficking Victims*	MLSP program to train foster families to accommodate child trafficking victims as an alternative form of protection to having them receive services in a shelter. The MLSP also designed and began implementing a program to train social workers to provide assistance to child trafficking victims placed with foster families in Skopje and Veles.(3)
Inclusion of Roma Children in Preschool Education†	MLSP project implemented in cooperation with the Roma Education Fund and 19 government units. Aims to support the integration of Roma children by increasing the number of Roma children in preschool.(49)
Children-at-Risk: Breaking the Cycle of Social Exclusion of Children in Macedonia	MLSP and UNICEF-implemented project focusing on improved social protection for street children. Developed standard operating procedures (SOPs) for addressing the needs of street children, and supports the Government's goal of greater inclusion of the Roma population.(50)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Macedonia.

Macedonia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Government funding for programs dedicated to combating trafficking in persons decreased from approximately $431,000 in 2014 to approximately $47,000 in 2015.(3, 13) As a result of this steep decline in funding, research has determined that the Government made no efforts to raise awareness about the dangers associated with trafficking in persons. In order to compensate for discontinuing funding to the NGOs operating the Center for Victims of Human Trafficking, the MLSP began training foster families as an alternative accommodation option for child trafficking victims who would have otherwise gone to the Center.(3) Research could not determine whether these child trafficking victims received the same level of care that they would have if they had been placed in the Center.(3)

The number of day centers is insufficient to reach all vulnerable children in need of assistance.(15)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Macedonia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that labor law protections apply to all children, including self-employed children and children working outside formal employment relationships.	2015
	Ensure that the law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including the use, procurement, and offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Provide training on new and existing child labor laws to labor inspectors.	2014– 2015
	Make information regarding labor law enforcement publicly available, including SLI's funding amount and the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review.	2015
	Provide labor inspectors with an electronic system to record and share data on inspections, including the number of inspections and the number of violations found, and the number of citations issued by the SLI and the MLSP to a particular entity. Make this data publicly available.	2009 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties imposed for criminal acts involving worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Reduce the vulnerability to child trafficking of unaccompanied children either transiting through Macedonia or seeking asylum in the country by effectively implementing the SOPs and ending the practice of granting random adult refugees guardianship of these children.	2015
	Provide sufficient funding to the Prosecutor's Office.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure law enforcement agencies screen migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers to identify child trafficking victims and investigate these cases.	2015
	Coordinate	Increase the National Commission for Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration's coordination role among NGOs and local anti-trafficking in persons committees.
Government Policies	Provide sufficient funding to implement the National Action Plan against Trafficking in Persons and Illegal Migration.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children engaged in child labor, including those working in farming and street work and being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2015
	Reduce barriers to education by increasing the number of teachers who can provide education in the Romani language, ensuring that children are able to obtain registration documents, and eliminating the placement of children in school for children with intellectual disabilities on the basis of ethnicity.	2014 – 2015
	Increase funding dedicated to combating child trafficking, and ensure that child trafficking victims receive assistance that addresses their specific needs.	2015
	Increase the number of day centers to ensure all vulnerable children in need receive assistance.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Madagascar made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created the National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking to coordinate all human anti-trafficking efforts in Madagascar. The Government adopted the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, which will provide protection and social assistance to victims of human trafficking, including children. It also adopted both the National Social Protection Policy and a Decent Work Country Program, which include the objective of strengthening national policies and programs to protect children from violence and exploitative work. However, children in Madagascar are engaged in child labor, particularly in the production of vanilla, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Madagascar are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and particularly in the production of vanilla.(1-7) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(7-11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Madagascar.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.1 (1,206,992)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	69.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	15.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		68.8

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Working in bars,† including as waitresses,* maids,* and masseuses (6, 7, 9-11, 28, 32, 33) Domestic work† (6, 9-11, 25, 30, 34)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 9-11, 17, 22, 25, 32, 33, 35) Forced labor in mining, quarrying,* begging,* and domestic work (8-11, 25, 30)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Girls are trafficked from Madagascar to the Middle East and China for forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(6, 9, 11, 32) Informal employment agencies recruit children as young as age 10 into domestic work; these children are subsequently subjected to forced labor conditions in Madagascar, which entail long hours of work, fatigue and hunger, and sometimes abuse—including rape and sexual harassment—from their employers.(8, 11, 17, 23) Human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation occurs in coastal cities, such as Antsiranana, Mahajanga, Nosy Be, Toamasina, and Toliara, and in the capital, Antananarivo.(9-11, 25, 32) Most child trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation occurs with the involvement of family members, but friends, transport operators, tour guides, and hotel workers are also involved. Parents may force their children into various forms of commercial sexual exploitation to earn money to support their families; in some cases, the parents directly negotiate prices with clients.(9, 11, 36) Some children are recruited for work in the capital as waitresses, maids, and masseuses before being coerced into commercial sexual exploitation.(9-11) The traditional practice of girl markets (tsenan’ampela), in which girls are sent to markets to attract a husband and arrange marriages, has led some girls into commercial sexual exploitation.(8, 10, 11, 25, 32)

Children in the mining sector suffer from respiratory problems and diseases such as diarrhea and malaria. Children are also at risk of injury from collapsing mines.(8, 22, 25, 29) Children dig pits up to 15 meters deep and carry plastic sacks filled with air to breathe. Boys as young as age 10 go down the pits to collect dirt that is sifted at nearby rivers.(8, 29) Most of the children involved in gold mining are in the regions of Anlamanga, Anosy, Ilakaka, and Vakinankaratra.(22, 26, 29)

Children in Madagascar face significant barriers to education, including a lack of school infrastructure, especially in rural areas.(7, 8, 25, 37) While the right to free education is enshrined in the Constitution, the Government of Madagascar was unable to fully subsidize students’ school fees and supplies; families unable to pay these additional costs either kept their children at home or sent them to work.(3, 7, 8, 37-39). In addition, although birth certificates are not required for children to enroll in primary school, birth certificates are required for children to sit and take national standardized examinations to graduate.(40)There is also evidence that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment by teachers, prevent some children from remaining in school.(25, 37)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Madagascar has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 24 of the Constitution (45)

* No conscription (47)

† No standing military (47)

‡ Age calculated based on available information(46)

Malagasy law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children; however, these prohibitions do not cover deep-sea diving and fishing, areas in which there is evidence that Malagasy children work. A more specific list of hazardous child labor activities that includes prohibitions of underwater work has been developed, but it was not approved during the reporting period.(17, 48) In addition, compulsory education extends for ten years and applies for children starting from the age of six.(46)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Services and Labor Division for the Prevention, Abolition, and Monitoring of Child Labor (PACTE)	Enforce child labor laws and coordinate, communicate, train, engage in research and development, administer, finance, and evaluate all activities in the context of the elimination of child labor.(3, 24, 49)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce all laws pertaining to violence against children, including human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(24)
National Police Force Morals and Minors Brigade (PMPM)	Investigate criminal cases involving minors, including issues pertaining to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(9, 14)
Department-level courts	Prosecute child labor convictions.(14)
Ministry of Population and Social Affairs	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(14) Manage more than 450 child protection networks, covering 22 regions in Madagascar, to protect children from abuse and exploitation.(9, 50)

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor employed 132 full-time labor inspectors and had 10 in training.(17) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Madagascar should employ roughly 315 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(17, 52-54) The Ministry of Civil Services and Labor Division for the Prevention, Abolition, and Monitoring of Child Labor (PACTE) employed four labor inspectors dedicated to child labor and received $32,000 (100 million ariary) to fund its regular expenses and programs.(17) Reports indicate, however, a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to manage existing child labor databases and to conduct effective child labor inspections.(14, 17, 24, 55, 56)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Madagascar took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the National Police Force Morals and Minors Brigade (PMPM) had a headquarters and 15 regional units across Madagascar, employing a total of 145 agents.(11, 14, 56) The Ministry of Justice trained criminal law enforcement officials on child protection and on the new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law enacted in 2014.(11) In 2015, the overall budget allocation for the National Police decreased to 1.8% of the national budget from the previous year; however, research did not determine what proportion of the budget was available to conduct child-labor-related investigations.(17) During the reporting period, the National Police Force PMPM investigated an estimated 740 cases pertaining to children victims of crime, such as rape and violence, and 60 cases related to child labor in domestic work.(11) It is unclear, however, how many child labor violations were found in areas beyond domestic work, how many prosecutions were initiated and whether these cases led to convictions.(11) Reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, and transportation to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(11, 57)

In 2015, the NGO Union of Social Workers assisted 176 children who were exploited in domestic labor, and the Manjary Soa Center, managed by the Ministry of Civil Services and Labor, removed 35 children from exploitive child labor in Antananarivo.(17) However, research did not determine the total number of victims removed and assisted during the reporting period.(17) In addition, the National Police Force PMPM received 673 complaints through the national child protection hotline; however, the number of calls pertaining to child labor is unknown.(11, 31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on the Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE)	Coordinate programs, advise on child labor legislation and regulations, and monitor and pursue the implementation of the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(17, 58, 59) Led by the Ministry of Civil Services and Labor, with representatives from the Ministries of Agriculture, Livestock and Fisheries; Communication; Decentralization; Education; Energy; Foreign Affairs; Health; Interior; Justice; Mining; Population and Social Affairs; Public Security; Technical Education and Vocational Training; Tourism; and Youth and Sports.(60) In 2015, worked with child protection organizations in the Vakinankaratra region to reinforce the understanding of child labor laws and build capacity to assist victims and collect data.(17)
Regional Child Labor Committees (CRLTE)	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate all regional activities relating to the elimination of child labor.(17, 55, 58) Comprises 10 regional committees that identify activities to promote the elimination of child labor and to compile, analyze, and report child labor data to PACTE.(24, 49, 55) In 2015, the Committee in the Sava region organized workshops to raise awareness of child labor issues among vanilla producers, in collaboration with the National Vanilla Platform (PNV), which resulted in the adoption of a code of conduct to address child labor in the vanilla sector.(5, 17, 61, 62)
National Child Protection Committee (CNPE)	Guide national child protection policy and programs. Chaired by the Minister of Population and Social Affairs and comprises a steering committee and a technical commission of specialists.(32, 63)
National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking*	Coordinate human anti-trafficking efforts in Madagascar and responsible for implementing the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons.(9, 11, 17, 42, 64) Chaired by the Office of the Prime Minister and comprises representatives from the Ministries of Civil Services and Labor; Education; Foreign Affairs; Health; Interior; Justice; and Population and Social Affairs. Also includes nongovernmental stakeholders such as civil society, international organizations, and NGOs.(11, 17, 64) In 2015, the Government officially appointed members to the National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking.(11)
Commission on Child Policy Reform (CRDE)	Coordinate and review national legislation and programs on children's rights.(24, 25, 65) Chaired by the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Population and Social Affairs, and includes representatives from the Ministries of Education and Public Health. Also includes nongovernmental stakeholders such as international organizations, NGOs, and social partners.(60, 65)
National Independent Commission on Human Rights	Promote and protect human rights and investigate human rights abuses, including those related to child labor.(59) Chaired by the Office of the Prime Minister and includes representatives from the National Assembly, the Senate, and a technical group of human rights specialists.(66)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The CNLTE continues to face severe limitations on its ability to follow the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor; for example, several awareness-raising campaigns scheduled for 2015 were postponed due to a lack of resources.(14, 31) The National Child Protection Committee (CNPE) and the National Independent Commission on Human Rights were inactive during 2015. Madagascar

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Madagascar has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2004–2019)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by strengthening child labor laws, conducting awareness-raising campaigns, mobilizing funds for social programs, and updating databases on child labor.(8, 67, 68) Led by the CNLTE. (58)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2015–2019)†	Seeks to enhance the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implement the law, provide protection and care for victims, and strengthen social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children. Overseen by the National Bureau to Combat Human Trafficking.(10, 17, 64, 69)
National Social Protection Policy†	Aims to protect children from abuse, violence, and exploitation and promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children. Led by the Ministry of Population and Social Affairs and supported by international donors.(70-72)
Decent Work Country Program (2015–2019)†	Identifies two objectives of decent work: (1) to create jobs and guarantee rights at work for vulnerable populations, and (2) to extend social protection and promote social dialogue. Includes the improvement of the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms.(73) Overseen by the Prime Minister's Office and supported by the ILO.(74)
Education for All Program (2013–2015)	Set out a comprehensive map to improve the quality of, and access to, basic education and included child labor concerns. Led by the Ministry of Education and supported by international donors.(8, 75, 76)
Provisional Education Plan (2013–2015)	Integrated child labor issues into education policies. Developed by the Ministry of Education.(75)
UNDAF (2015–2019)†	Seeks to protect children from child labor, including its worst forms, through strategies such as promoting school attendance and training judges and police officials on child labor laws. Led by the Ministry of Economy and Planning.(37, 73, 77)
National Development Plan (2015–2019)†	Aims to promote sustainable development and social equality. Overseen by the Ministry of Economy and Planning and includes a budget of $83,000 to specifically combat child labor.(10, 73, 78, 79)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Government drafted a National Plan of Action against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children; however it had not been approved by the end of the reporting period.(10)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Madagascar funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 10)

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Protect children's rights, children from violence and the worst forms of child labor, and children who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation program (2014–2015)	$150,000 UNICEF-funded program that aims to combat violence against children and the worst forms of child labor in the regions of Atsimo-Andrefana and Diana.(80) In 2015, provided vocational training to 100 victims of commercial sexual exploitation, developed a manual on the application of legal procedures to address child labor, and trained local government officials on child labor issues.(81)
Acceleration to reduce the worst forms of child labor, especially in the commercial sexual exploitation of children program (2015–2016)*	$140,000 UNICEF-funded program that increases funding and extends activities to fight the worst forms of child labor, especially in commercial sexual exploitation, in the regions of Atsimo-Andrefana and Diana.(81)
Actions to combat child domestic work in Africa and in countries of the Mediterranean Union (2011–2015) project	$1.3 million Government of France-funded, 3-year project that aims to combat child domestic labor in specific regions. Although the project removed or prevented an estimated 125 children from engaging in domestic work in Amoron'i Mania region, and provided them with professional training and assistance in finding decent work in 2014, research could not determine the major activities undertaken in 2015.(24, 80)
Manjary Soa Center†	Government program that provides support and services to child laborers in Antananarivo, including reintegrating children under age 16 into the public education system and providing tradescraft training to older children. In 2015, removed 35 children from exploitative child labor.(9, 11, 27, 82, 83)

Program	Description
Vonjy Center*	UNICEF-funded center in Antananarivo that provides services to child victims of sexual violence and human trafficking. In 2015, provided assistance to 185 children.(9, 11, 84)
World Bank Emergency Support for Critical Education, Health, and Nutrition Services Project	$65 million World Bank-funded, 4-year program to preserve critical education, health, and nutrition services in vulnerable areas.(17, 85) Preserves education services by paying the salaries of community teachers and the cost of school supplies.(17, 85, 86)
World Bank Emergency Support to Education For all Project	$85.4 million World Bank-funded, 4-year program to support the Government's interim plan on education.(17, 87) Supports school feeding program, distribution of school kits and payments to teachers, institutional training, and building new classrooms.(17, 86, 87)
UNICEF Country Programme Education (2015–2019)*	$56 million UNICEF-funded program to support the Government's interim plan on education.(88) Aims to increase school enrollment for the most vulnerable children, boost learning outcomes, and improve data collection.(88)
National Database	UNICEF-funded national database managed by the Ministry of Population and Social Affairs that gathers data from nine regional child protection networks.(14, 89)
Awareness Raising in Sakarahat	Government program that raises awareness about the hazards children face while working in mines by using radio announcements and through talks with the local chief.(8)
Public Investment Program for Social Action†	Government program that supports school attendance and training for street children and aims to remove 40 children a year from the worst forms of child labor.(27, 90)
Inclusive Education Support†	Government programs to provide back-to-school grants, awareness-raising activities, in-kind support to schools, and access to income-generating activities that target children traditionally excluded from schools.(37)
Vocational Training and Agricultural Productivity Improvement Program†	$35 million International Fund for Agricultural Development-funded loan and grant program that provides professional and vocational training to vulnerable groups, including uneducated young people and young women who are heads of households to income through improved productivity and the increased quality of agricultural products. Estimated government contribution of $7.9 million.(91, 92)
United Nations World Food Programme (2015–2019)*	$68 million UN-implemented program that provides school feeding support. In 2015, provided school feeding programs to nearly 250,000 children located in low income urban areas of Antananarivo, Toamasina, Tuléar, and in southern Madagascar.(93, 94)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Madagascar.

The Government does not have programs that promote awareness of the traditional practice of tse nan'ampela, which in some cases has led girls into commercial sexual exploitation.(32) Research found that basic health and social services available to victims of the worst forms of child labor are not adequate to meet current needs.(14) Although Madagascar has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and mining.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Madagascar (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Madagascar that fall into an R.190 category, such as work underwater, are prohibited to children under 18.	2014–2015
Enforcement	Ensure that the number of labor inspectors conforms to the ILO standard of one for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, which is approximately 315 labor inspectors for Madagascar.	2015
	Ensure that labor and criminal law enforcement officials receive adequate funding and training to enforce child labor laws effectively.	2009–2015
	Collect and make publicly available enforcement information related to the worst forms of child labor, including on the number of labor and criminal inspections conducted, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and convictions.	2013–2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Disaggregate complaints made to child protection hotlines by number of children exploited in child labor.	2013–2015
	Ensure that existing child labor databases function, including by providing adequate funding.	2009–2015
Coordination	Ensure that the CNLTE has the appropriate funds to effectively coordinate efforts to address child labor and implement the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.	2014–2015
	Ensure that CNPE and the National Independent Commission on Human Rights are active to fulfill their mission.	2014–2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by— <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Eliminating school-related fees ■ Increasing school infrastructure, especially in rural areas ■ Ensuring that school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to sit and take national standardized examinations to graduate ■ Ensuring children's safety in schools 	2011–2015
	Increase awareness of the possible use of traditional cultural practices that might lead to commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2013–2015
	Ensure that social protection systems have adequate funding and staff to provide appropriate services to victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2014–2015
	Expand programs to address child labor in agriculture and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and mining.	2014–2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 52. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies;" "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.
53. CIA. The World Factbook, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
54. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

In 2015, Malawi made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Trafficking in Persons Act, which will address key gaps in its legal framework. The Government also increased funding for its Social Cash Transfer Program and supported other social programs to address child labor, particularly in the tobacco sector. However, children in Malawi continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of tobacco and fishing. The Government has not finalized or fully implemented key legislation or policies protecting children from the worst forms of child labor, including the Child Labor Policy and the Child Protection Policy. Gaps continue to exist in labor law enforcement related to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Malawi are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of tobacco and fishing.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Malawi.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	20.6 (885,333)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	81.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	22.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		79.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Integrated Household Survey 3, 2010–2011.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting tea, cotton,* and sugar* (5, 6)
	Planting and harvesting tobacco,† clearing land, building tobacco-drying sheds, cutting and bundling, weeding and plucking raw tobacco (7-13)
	Catching, processing,† and selling fish (1, 14, 15)
	Herding livestock* (5, 16, 17)
Industry	Quarrying*† and mining*† (2)
	Construction,*† activities unknown (2)
Services	Domestic work in third-party homes* (2, 12)
	Ganyu* (a form of casual labor) (17, 18)
	Begging*† (17, 19)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Vending and wholesaling* (2, 12, 17, 20)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 12, 19, 21)
	Herding goats* and cattle;* farming (predominantly tobacco); fishing*; domestic work; and work in small businesses such as rest houses* and bars,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6, 14, 22-26)
	Forced begging* (6, 22)
	Use in illicit activities, including crimes (6, 18, 22)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Malawi

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children are engaged in hazardous work in the production of tobacco.(2, 13, 22) Children who handle tobacco risk illness from nicotine absorption, including green tobacco sickness.(8, 13) They are also exposed to pesticides and chemicals.(7, 8) Some children work alongside family members who are tenants on tobacco farms.(17) In the tenancy system, tenants' pay is based on the quantity and quality of tobacco sold to farm owners after the harvest season. Tenants must pay off loans incurred during the growing season, and those who are unable to repay these debts may face debt bondage.(27-29)

Most human trafficking of children for labor in Malawi is internal.(6, 22) Children, typically boys, are trafficked from southern Malawi to work on tobacco farms in Malawi's northern and central regions; they are also forced to work as cattle herders and in the brickmaking industry.(6, 22, 30) Additionally, children are trafficked from Malawi to South Africa, Tanzania, and Zambia for use as child labor in the fishing industry.(14, 30, 31) Children who are trafficked may be charged for their clothing, food, housing, and transport. They may also be forced to work in debt bondage and be unable to return home or support themselves.(22)

Girls from rural areas are sometimes promised clothing and lodging from brothel owners. They are later coerced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation to pay off their debts.(6, 22, 30) They may also be promised well-paid jobs as domestic workers, but end up working in rest houses or bars, ultimately being coerced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation for room and board.(12)

Although primary education is free, considerable barriers to education exist, including families' inability to pay required school-related fees and expenses such as books and uniforms.(12, 26, 32)

Children with family members with HIV/AIDS may assume responsibility as head of their households and have to work to support their families. These children, especially those who are orphaned, are at increased risk of entering into the worst forms of child labor.(33, 34)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Malawi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 21 of the Employment Act No. 6 of 2000 (35)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	16/18	Section 22 of the Employment Act No. 6 of 2000; Section 23 of the Constitution; Section 2 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act, 2010 (35-37)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Sections 1–9, and Paragraph 6, Sections 1–6 of the Employment (Prohibition of Hazardous Work for Children) Order, 2012 (38)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 4 of the Employment Act No. 6 of 2000; Section 27 of the Constitution; Sections 140–147 and 257–269 of the Penal Code; Sections 79 and 82 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act, 2010; Section 15 of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2015 (35-37, 39, 40)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 140–147 and 257–269 of the Penal Code; Section 79 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act, 2010; Section 15 of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2015 (37, 39, 40)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 137–138, 140, 142, 147, and 155 of the Penal Code; Sections 23 and 84 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act, 2010; Sections 15 and 20 of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2015 (37, 39, 40)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 23 of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act, 2010 (37)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Section 19 of the Defense Force Act (41)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Article 13 of the Education Act, 2013 (32)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of the Education Act, 2013 (32)

* No conscription (41)

In 2015, the Government passed the Trafficking in Persons Act, which will address previous gaps in the legal framework related to protecting all children under age 18 from trafficking in persons, including protection from commercial sexual exploitation regardless of gender.(40)

While Section 23 of the Constitution states that children under age 16 are entitled to protection from hazardous work, Section 22 of the Employment Act sets the minimum age for hazardous labor at age 18.(35, 36, 42, 43) Consequently, there is some confusion regarding the legal minimum age for engaging in hazardous work.(37, 42)

Section 21 of the Employment Act sets the minimum age for employment at age 14 in agricultural, industrial, or nonindustrial work.(35) The minimum age is not extended to workers in third-party homes, such as in domestic work, or non-commercial agriculture in which children are known to work.(35, 42, 44) In addition, Malawi lacks a legal framework for the tenancy system used in tobacco production. This is of particular concern, considering that children involved in the tenancy system can face debt bondage.(17, 27-29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)—Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Monitor and implement child labor law compliance through child labor monitoring visits.(45)
MOL	Perform inspections and investigate all labor complaints, including those related to child labor.(2)
Ministry of Home Affairs	Enforce human trafficking laws and prosecute trafficking in persons.(31, 46)
District Labor Offices	Enforce child labor laws at the district level.(2)
Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability and Social Welfare—Department of Child Development	Provide child protection and development services.(47)
Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs	Prosecute criminal offenders.(48)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Malawi took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from the Government of Malawi for the period from January 2014 to May 2014.

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Child Labor Unit (CLU) had one full-time employee based in Lilongwe, down from three last year.(50) Each of Malawi's administrative districts employed a District Labor Officer (DLO), who was responsible for enforcing all labor laws including those on child labor.(2, 19, 44) The MOL was allocated roughly $2.65 million for recurrent expenses and capital expenditure funding for a new community college initiative. Of this amount, $11,262 was allocated for the CLU, which was a considerable reduction from the previous year, and the MOL reported it was an insufficient amount to carry out the Ministry's child labor monitoring and prevention mandate.(19, 50) According to MOL officials, DLOs were limited in their ability to carry out monitoring and reporting due to budget and resource constraints, including a lack of transportation.(2, 19, 44, 51) The MOL advocated for the CLU to be upgraded from a unit into a child labor department, which would enable it to have staff members focused on enforcing laws related to child labor in each of the country's districts.(44)

The Government supports a child protection helpline operated by an NGO that identifies cases of child sexual and labor exploitation. Another child helpline covering the Kasungu District was run by NGOs but uses Lilongwe-based government employee operators.(22) Research did not find information on the number of calls related specifically to child labor.

Of the 148 child labor violations found, the MOL required employers to pay back wages but did not assess additional fines or penalties. A total of 210 children were removed from child labor a result of inspections and referred to social services.(50)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Malawi took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Number of Convictions	Unknown (49)	Unknown (49)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (49)	Yes (49)

The Government has a referral process in place to transfer human trafficking victims detained by law enforcement authorities to service providers, although services remain limited.(52) The Government operates a social rehabilitation center providing assistance to several child trafficking victims in Lilongwe, but the quality of the facility has been reported to be very poor, leading law enforcement officers to regularly refer victims to civil society organization-run shelters.(30, 52)

While criminal law enforcement data related to the worst forms of child labor are unknown, the Malawi Police Service provided trafficking in persons data from five police stations. In 2015, 142 victims were rescued and 58 suspects were convicted.(46) In addition, during 2015, Phalombe District Police reported 55 trafficking victims and five cases resulting in conviction, with prison sentences ranging from 18 to 24 months with hard labor.(46)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Provide policy guidance to support the elimination of child labor and implementation of the National Action Plan on Child Labour (NAP). Chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture, members include representatives from government ministries, trade unions, employers, development partners, and civil society organizations.(19, 34, 53) The National Steering Committee on Child Labor met one time.(50)
National Technical Working Group on Child Labor and Protection	Oversee child protection issues. Includes representatives from the Government, international organizations, development partners, and NGOs and is chaired by the Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability, and Social Welfare.(2, 19, 22) The National Technical Working Group on Child Labor met for the first time during the reporting period.(50)
District Child Protection Committees	Coordinate all child protection activities at the district level and improve local coordination on child protection issues. May be combined with a district orphan and vulnerable child committee and a district committee on child rights.(19, 22)

In 2015, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor met one time, and the National Technical Working Group on Child Labor met for the first time during the reporting period.(50)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Malawi has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Child Labour for Malawi (2010–2016)	Assigns roles and responsibilities for each ministry in charge of implementing child labor policies, provides a comprehensive framework to reduce the worst forms of child labor, and proposes concrete activities to support policies to combat child labor.(54)
Child Protection Strategic Plan	Outlines the responsibilities of the MOL, Malawi Police Service, and the Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability, and Social Welfare to coordinate efforts combating child labor.(19)
National Action Plan for Vulnerable Children† (2015–2019)	Coordinated by the Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability, and Social Welfare, was launched in 2015 and provides a framework for the development of district implementation plans for assisting vulnerable children.(50, 55)
National Youth Policy*	Includes strategies targeting youth ages 14 to 25, including creating more educational and training opportunities.(56)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2012–2016)	Recognizes child labor as a common constraint to the creation of decent and productive employment. Proposes strategies to address child labor, including enforcement of existing labor laws and enactment of the pending legislation and policies.(57, 58)

Policy	Description
Malawi Growth and Development Strategy II (2011–2016)	Includes strategies to eliminate child labor, such as integrating child labor issues into development initiatives and interventions; highlights that poverty is the root cause of child labor.(2, 57) To ensure consistency across policies, the MOL is incorporating child labor into all the sectors of the Malawi Growth and Development Strategy II.(2, 59)
National Education Sector Plan (2008–2017)*	Provides a framework for quality and relevant education to Malawians, including providing technical and vocational training and education for youth.(60)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

In 2015, the National Child Labor Policy, which will focus on the issue of child labor and provide the Government, civil society, and other partners with a framework to implement child labor programs and activities, awaited Cabinet approval and was not yet in effect.(2, 19, 50) Additionally, the Government has not finalized or fully implemented the Child Protection Policy, which outlines the Government’s child protection strategy.(19, 50)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Malawi funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP) (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded, research project implemented by ILO in 10 countries, including Malawi, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(61) During the reporting period, the ILO and the National Statistical Office collected data for the second National Child Labor Survey.(62)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research in Malawi.(63)
Child Labor Elimination Actions for Real Change (2011–2015)	$8 million Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco Growing (ECLT)-funded, 4-year project that contributes to the elimination of hazardous child labor in tobacco-growing areas in Malawi within the context of the Child Labor NAP for Malawi. Targets 10,000 children for prevention from child labor.(2, 19, 64)
Achieving Reduction of Child Labor in Support of Education II* (2015–2018)	$2 million Japan Tobacco International (JTI)-funded, 3-year project that provides strategies to promote economic empowerment, raises awareness on child labor, and provides education support.(65, 66)
Program to Reduce the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Tobacco-Growing Communities in Malawi (2011–2015)	Combined $4.5 million JTI-funded, 4-year project to reduce child labor in tobacco communities in Brazil, Malawi, and Zambia.(67) In Malawi, the project budget is $1.3 million.(66)
Project on Combating Child Labor in the Tobacco Industry	$3 million JTI-funded project in partnership with UNDP and the African Development Bank that addresses child labor in the tobacco industry through public-private partnerships.(2)
Child Labor Monitoring System†	MOL system in pilot districts to identify working children and collect data on school attendance and other data points.(19)
National Social Cash Transfer Program†	Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability, and Social Welfare program that supports low-income families in high-risk districts to enable their children to stay in school.(2, 47, 68) In FY 2015, the Government maintained the program at 304,534 beneficiary households at an annual cost of $68 million, which represents a $3 million increase from FY 2014.(69) Research has shown a decrease in child labor rates as a result of participation in this program.(70, 71)
Complimentary Basic Education Program†	$1.1 million Government-funded project that enrolls children withdrawn from child labor into school. To date, an estimated 11,000 children have graduated from this program.(50)

Program	Description
Malawi Decent Work Country Program (2011–2016)	ILO program that seeks the elimination of the worst forms of child labor and targets youth, women, and people with disabilities through creating additional income-generating opportunities.(57, 72)
Malawi Social Action Fund IV (2014–2018)	$32.8 million, World Bank-funded, 4-year project that provides loans for community development and social support programs, including work opportunities, skill-building, and cash transfers.(19, 50)
Anti-Human Trafficking Project	Salvation Army-implemented project that provides shelter, rehabilitation, and training for victims of human trafficking.(22)
Shelter Program†	Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability, and Social Welfare program that provides shelter for children in Lilongwe and takes in trafficked and street children.(2)
Orphans and Vulnerable Children Intervention	$4.9 million President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief-funded program in partnership with the Ministry of Gender, Children, Disability, and Social Welfare that provides vulnerable children from birth to age 17 with education, child protection services, birth registration, and shelter and care through the establishment of Community Based Care Centers.(73)
Girls’ Empowerment through Education and Health Activity	USAID and Save the Children-funded project that focuses on reducing structural and cultural barriers to girls’ access to education in Balaka and Machinga districts.(73)
School Feeding Program	World Food Program and U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded program that provides meals to help keep children in school.(2, 74)
Birth Registration Program†	EU- and UNICEF-funded program that ensures nearly all health facilities in Lilongwe register children at birth and supports government electronic storage of birth data collected at the district level. The Government’s National Registration Bureau initiated hospital birth registration in Zomba and Mulanje districts.(22) The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) supported birth registration in Blantyre, Chitipa, and Ntcheu districts.(19) UNICEF supported birth registration in Lilongwe.(50)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Malawi.

Although Malawi has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem in all relevant sectors, including agriculture and fishing.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Malawi (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Address the inconsistency in the law for the minimum age for hazardous work in compliance with international standards.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that all forms of children’s work, including children working in private homes (domestic service) and on noncommercial farms, receive legal protection, including a minimum age for work that complies with international standards.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure legal protection for children working in the tenancy system.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Make the labor inspectorate’s funding publicly available.	2015
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors, including by training new labor inspectors at the beginning of their employment on new laws related to child labor, and provide refresher courses.	2015
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by initiating routine inspections rather than performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2015
	Increase resources to the CLU and district labor inspectors to conduct regular child labor inspections.	2009 – 2015
	Disaggregate data on child labor from child protection hotline calls and make data available to the public.	2014 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the training system for criminal law investigators and the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Sector Plan and National Youth Policy.	2011 – 2015
	Finalize and implement the National Child Labor and Child Protection policies.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that additional costs to education and the impact of HIV/AIDS do not serve as barriers to education.	2012 – 2015
	Increase the scope of existing social programs to reach more children at risk of the worst forms of child labor, and develop programs to target children in the fishing and agriculture sectors, specifically.	2011 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. Maldives

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Maldives made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government acceded to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons, incorporated a human trafficking module into the training curriculum for all new Maldives Immigration hires, and adopted the National Anti-Human Trafficking Action Plan (2015–2019). Although research is limited, evidence indicates that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking in Maldives. The Government has not determined specific hazardous occupations or activities that are prohibited for children and the compulsory education age of 13 leaves children ages 13 to 15 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Government does not have a coordinating mechanism, policy, or social program that specifically addresses child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, evidence indicates that children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking in Maldives. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Maldives.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.9 (2,364)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	79.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		114.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2009, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2009.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing,* activities unknown (5)
Services	Domestic work* (1, 2)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 2)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

No current data are available on child labor in Maldives, and a national survey on child labor has not been conducted. Some girls from Bangladesh and Maldives are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation to Malé, the capital of Maldives, but evidence of the problem is limited.(2) The Maldives Human Rights Commission is assessing the scope of the human trafficking problem in the country, but its findings have not been published.(6, 7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Maldives has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

In 2015, the Government of Maldives acceded to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation

‡ Age calculated based on available information

While the legal framework prohibits the employment of children in work that may be detrimental to their health and safety, the Government has not determined specific hazardous occupations and activities that are prohibited for children.(16)

Children in Maldives are only required to attend school up to age 13. This standard makes children ages 13 through 15 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Relations Authority, Ministry of Economic Development (MED)	Enforce the child labor provisions of the Employment Act. Assess minor fines and make recommendations to the Minister of Human Resources on additional fines or other actions to penalize violators.(17)
Family and Child Protection Unit, Maldives Police Service (MPS)	Investigate complaints of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Refer cases to the Prosecutor General's Office for prosecution.(17)
Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecute crimes, including those involving the worst forms of child labor.(17)
Family Child Protection Services (FCPS), Ministry of Law and Gender	Receive referrals of children who have been exploited, including in child commercial sexual exploitation, and provide care for such victims.(17)
Maldives Immigration	Maintain a blacklist of employers who violate any provision of the Employment Act and prohibit blacklisted employers from hiring new workers until violations are corrected. Identify victims of human trafficking in coordination with the MPS.(17, 18)
Anti-Human Trafficking Units, the MPS, and DIE	Investigate human trafficking-related offences and enforce laws prohibiting trafficking in persons.(19)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Maldives took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, a human trafficking module was included in the training curriculum for all new Maldives Immigration hires.(18) The IOM also conducted trafficking in persons training for government officials, including the Maldives Police Service (MPS), Maldives Immigration, and the Ministry of Law and Gender.(18)

In 2014, the most recent year for which information is available, anti-human-trafficking units in the MPS comprised seven officers, including three female officers.(20) The Family and Child Protection Unit employed 25 officers to process child abuse cases in Malé, and an unknown number of officers in police stations throughout the country's islands. The Prosecutor General's Office employed 45 prosecutors for all areas of its work across the country.(17)

Investigators have insufficient funding and resources, such as office facilities and transportation.(17) Police and other officials lack adequate training on procedures for identifying human trafficking victims and providing referrals to protective services, including for children.(21) Maldives Immigration and the MPS lacked the capacity to pursue child trafficking investigations.(18)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Human Trafficking Steering Committee	Coordinate anti-human-trafficking activities and implement the country's National Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan under MED leadership.(17, 22) Members include the MPS, the Supreme Court, the People's Parliament (Majlis), the Attorney General's Office, the Prosecutor General's Office, the Human Rights Commission, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Home Affairs, DIE, the Customs Service, the Ministry of Islamic Affairs, and the NGO Advocating the Rights of Children.(9, 10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Maldives has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Anti-Human Trafficking Action Plan (2015–2019)†	Sets out the Government's goals to combat human trafficking.(18)
UNDP Country Program for Maldives (2011–2015)*	Aimed to support the ILO in developing a Decent Work framework to address youth unemployment. Aimed to promote equitable access to justice and rule of law by increasing the capacity of the Prosecutor General's Office, including training on human rights issues.(23)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of Maldives has adopted the National Anti-Human Trafficking Action Plan, research found no evidence of a policy to address child labor, including its worst forms.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Maldives funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
FCPS Shelters and Rehabilitation Centers	Ministry of Law and Gender-operated centers on many of the country's islands, which provide services such as temporary shelter, vocational training, and rehabilitation and counseling for children in need, which could include children rescued from abusive work situations.(6, 24)
Blue Ribbon Campaign Against Human Trafficking†	Government campaign, implemented by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, that aims to raise awareness of human trafficking in Maldives among students and the business community.(25)
Child Help Linet	Government-maintained hotline used to report cases of child abuse and general issues that children face.(26)
Trafficking in Persons Hotlinet	Government-operated hotline dedicated to receiving reports of human trafficking cases.(18)
UNICEF Country Program (2011–2015)	UNICEF program, worked with the Government to monitor schools to ensure that authorities and communities maintained safe and sanitary learning environments for children.(27) Worked to build the capacity of the FCPS staff to protect children from violence and abuse. Advocated increased protection for children who are victims of crimes and witnesses to crimes.(27)
Enhancing Education Development Project†	$11 million World Bank and Government of Maldives-funded, 5-year project, that aims to strengthen access to primary and secondary school education in Maldives and improve its quality. Funded with approximately $10 million from the World Bank and $1 million from the Government of Maldives.(28)

† Program is funded by the Government of Maldives.

In 2015, the Government allocated funds for the construction of a new shelter for victims of human trafficking. The shelter is expected to be completed in 2016.(18)

Existing social programs do not specifically address the worst forms of child labor in the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Maldives (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.	2009 – 2015
	Raise the compulsory education age to 16 to be consistent with the minimum age for work.	2011 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect and publicize information on labor law enforcement, including labor inspection data and child labor law violations, and information on criminal law enforcement of the worst forms of child labor, including the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate receives training on child labor issues.	2009 – 2015
	Provide sufficient funding and training to the police and prosecutors, to ensure that investigators have the resources necessary to enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Establish a coordination mechanism to combat child labor.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the UNDP Country Program for Maldives.	2014 – 2015
	Adopt a policy to address child labor, including its worst forms.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct and publish research on commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children.	2009 – 2015
	Conduct a national child labor survey and publish the results.	2014 – 2015
	Implement programs to address the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Mali

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Mali made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted and modestly implemented the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices (2015-2017), which provides protection and social assistance to victims of human trafficking, including children. The Government also established a referral mechanism between the National Directorate of Labor and the Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family to ensure that victims of child labor receive appropriate social services. In northern Mali, the Government made progress in providing access to education by reopening 89 percent of the schools for the 2014/15 academic year. However, children in Mali are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in gold mining and the production of rice. Children were also abducted and forcibly recruited by armed rebel and extremist Islamic militia groups, and some of these children were detained and charged with crimes for their association with these groups. Laws relating to the worst forms of child labor do not provide adequate coverage, and gaps in enforcement have left children unprotected.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mali are engaged in child labor, including in the production of rice.(1-4) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in gold mining.(5-9) Children were also abducted and forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict in northern Mali by rebels and extremist Islamic militia groups.(3, 8, 10-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mali.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	25.1 (1,216,300)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	46.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	13.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		53.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2012-2013.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Seeding,† weeding,† plowing,† harvesting,† transporting,† and applying chemical fertilizers,† particularly in the production of rice and cotton (1, 2, 8, 15)
	Raising livestock,* including oxen* and small ruminants* (2, 4, 6, 16)
	Fishing* (6, 17, 18)
Industry	Gold mining,† including digging shafts,† extracting ore from underground tunnels,† crushing ore,† and amalgamating ore with mercury† (5, 8, 9, 19-22)
	Assembling fishing canoes*†(17)
Services	Domestic work, transportation* (8, 15, 18, 23)

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3, 26-29)
	Use in armed conflict as a result of forced recruitment by armed rebel and extremist Islamic militia groups (3, 8, 10, 11)
	Hereditary servitude (3, 8, 25, 30)
	Forced labor in the production of salt* (3, 8)
	Forced into begging by Koranic teachers, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 7, 8)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children, especially of the Bellah community, also known as black Tuaregs, who were former slaves, are subject to hereditary slavery in northern Mali.(3, 8, 25, 30) In addition, children, particularly those of the Songhai ethnicity, work in debt bondage in the northern salt mines of Taoudenni.(3, 8) Boys placed in the care of Koranic teachers for education are forced by their teachers to beg on the street or to work in fields; they must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers. Other Koranic teachers force boys to perform agricultural labor on their personally owned land.(2, 3, 7, 8, 16)

The Government signed a peace agreement with armed groups of northern Mali in June 2015. Despite this progress, intermittent fighting and violence continued throughout 2015, resulting in the killing and displacement of children.(12, 31) Although the incidence of child soldiers decreased during the reporting period, children continued to be abducted, forcibly recruited, and trained by armed rebel and extremist Islamic militia groups, including the National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad (MNLA), the High Council for the Unity of Azawad (HCUA), the Arab Movement of Azawad (MAA), the Allies Tuareg Self-Defense Group (GATIA), al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), Ansar al-Dine, and the Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa (MUJAO) in northern Mali. (3, 8, 10-12) Reports also indicate that in 2015, children were held in state-owned adult prisons and charged with committing terrorism against the Government due to their past involvement with extremist groups during the 2012–2013 armed conflict.(3, 10, 32)

In northern Mali, the Government made progress in providing access to education by reopening 89 percent of the schools for the 2014/15 academic year.(33) However, educational infrastructure is still damaged as a result of the conflict; many teachers and students remain displaced and some teachers in insecure areas felt it was unsafe to return to school.(8, 12, 33, 34)

The Constitution guarantees free and compulsory education.(8, 35) However, parents are expected to pay school fees for registration, uniforms, books, and materials. These expenses may deter families from sending their children to school.(8) Many children in Mali are not registered at birth. Unable to prove citizenship, unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services, including education.(8, 36) In addition, evidence suggests that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment and the rape of students by teachers, prevent some children from remaining in school.(8, 37) Due to societal discrimination at the local level, some Arab, Peul, and Bellah children are denied access to school based on their ethnicity.(8, 38)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mali has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 228 of the Penal Code; Article 1 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Article 57 of the Child Protection Code (35, 41, 42)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 17 of the Child Protection Code; Articles 31.23 and 31.31 of the Penal Code (35, 42)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 17 of the Child Protection Code; Articles 31.23 and 31.31 of the Penal Code (35, 42, 43)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Articles 26 and 34 of the Law of Education (44)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 18 of the Constitution (45)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.

The Labor Code allows children between the ages of 12 and 14 to perform domestic or light seasonal work, as long as it does not impede school attendance and it does not exceed four and a half hours of work per day.(39) However, the law does not specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.(18) Children working in unpaid, temporary, or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as children working in contractual employment.(18, 46)

Although Mali's Hazardous Occupations List prohibits certain activities for children under age 18, Decree 96-178 from June 1996, which remains in force, permits children ages 16 to 17 to perform certain hazardous activities. The decree conflicts with the protections provided in the Hazardous Occupations List, leaving the possibility for children to work in hazardous activities.(18, 40)

The Child Protection Code provides protection for children under age 18, while the Penal Code establishes criminal penalties for several of the worst forms of child labor.(35, 42) For example, Articles 50 and 58 of the Child Protection Code identify begging as a form of economic exploitation of children, while Article 183 of the Penal Code specifies punishments for engaging a child in begging. However, the Penal Code does not provide penalties for some of the prohibitions enumerated in the Child Protection Code.(35, 42) For example, although Article 17 of the Child Protection Code prohibits children under age 18 from participating in armed conflicts or joining the armed forces, Articles 31.23 and 31.31 of the Penal Code provide penalties only for those recruiting and enlisting children under age 15.(35, 42, 43) Moreover, although Article 18 of the Child Protection Code prohibits the use of children in organized crime, the law does not prohibit using, procuring, or offering a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(29, 35)

The Inter-Ministerial Circular (Circular) references Article 28 of the Penal Code, which states that crimes committed out of self-defense or under a force that could not be resisted should not be penalized as prescribed by the Penal Code. The Circular states that Article 28 of the Penal Code is applicable to children involved in armed conflict.(42, 47) However, the Circular does not define the age range of children it covers. Considering the discrepancy between the Penal Code and the Child Code regarding the definition of children involved in armed conflict, the lack of a defined age range in this Circular may leave children ages 16 to 17 unprotected.(47)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, National Directorate of Labor	Enforce child labor laws, investigate complaints, and perform unannounced labor inspections.(8, 16, 48)
Ministry of Justice	Initiate and coordinate the implementation of child labor laws, with the support of the Ministries of Internal Security, Defense, Territorial Administration, Labor, and the Promotion of Children.(15, 16, 49)
Brigade for the Protection of Morals and Children of the National Police	Enforce laws relating to human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and conduct inspections. Housed under the Ministry of Internal Security.(15, 16, 50)
Judicial Police	Enforce laws relating to the use of children in illicit activities. Housed under the Ministry of Internal Security.(50)
Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(16, 48)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Mali took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

The Labor Inspectorate 2015 budget was insufficient in infrastructure, transportation, and fuel.(15) Given the prevalence of child labor throughout the country, the number of inspectors employed is insufficient. The National Directorate of Labor employed

Mali

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

60 labor inspectors in 2015. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 10,000 workers in industrial market economies, Mali should employ roughly 564 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(15, 52-54) Some labor inspectors received training during the reporting period on the worst forms of child labor. The National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor indicated that the number of inspectors trained and the number of trainings conducted were insufficient.(15) In addition to inspection duties, inspectors provide dispute settlement and conciliation.(39, 55) One labor inspector in each region is designated as the point of contact for the National Unit for the Fight Against Child Labor.(15) Research shows that, despite decentralization efforts, funds are rarely allocated to inspectorate regional offices.(15) Labor inspections are typically limited to the formal employment sector, including in industry, construction, and hotel services; however, the majority of children work outside the formal sector, including in agriculture.(15) Reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct effective child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(15)

Punishment for the worst forms of child labor can range from 5 to 20 years of imprisonment, depending on the severity of the offense. Koranic teachers who have perpetrated forced begging, however, are often released through the intervention of parents or religious authorities because much of the time the parents willingly send their children into the Koranic teacher's care.(15) The Brigade for the Protection of Morals and Children (Morals Brigade) has suggested an alternative dispute resolution mechanism as opposed to prison for Koranic teachers; this policy proposal has yet to be implemented.(15, 56)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mali took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	No (16)	Unknown (15)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	No (16)	Unknown (15)
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (15)	Yes (15)
Number of Investigations	114 (16)	Unknown (15)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (15)	Unknown (15)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (15)	Unknown (15)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (15)	Unknown (15)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (57)	Yes (15)

In 2015, the Morals Brigade employed 26 staff, including 2 captains and 8 investigators.(15) Given the prevalence of child labor in the country, the number of criminal law enforcement agents is inadequate.(15) Although the Morals Brigade was created to handle criminal affairs involving children, the main police force has no explicit obligation to turn children's cases over to the Morals Brigade. As a result, many children's issues are handled by members of the general police force who may not have received special training on children's affairs.(58) The Morals Brigade receives 120 liters of fuel every 3 months, but information on its budget is unavailable and its current provisions, such as vehicles, materials, and supplies, are insufficient.(15, 16)

In 2015, the Government of Mali established a referral mechanism between the National Directorate of Labor and the Ministry for the Promotion of Children and Women. The established referral mechanism is designed to ensure that victims of child labor receive appropriate social services.(15) The Malian military transferred 10 children associated with armed groups to the National Directorate for the Promotion of Children and Women through the Judicial Investigation Office. All 10 children were received, provided medical and psychosocial support, and ultimately reunified with their families.(15)

The Morals Brigade generally conducts inspections based on complaints received; however, investigators also conducted unannounced inspections in bars and brothels. In 2015, the Morals Brigade rescued four children who were victims of forced labor perpetrated by Koranic teachers.(15, 16) Reports also indicate that, because of the political instability hindering law and judicial enforcement in northern Mali, the prevalence of hereditary slavery has worsened since the conflict began.(59) The Trafficking in Persons Law, adopted in 2012, was distributed to judges around the country in November 2015 to ensure their knowledge of the law.(60)

Mali maintains an informal system through which police officers transfer rescued children to NGOs and keep records of such transfers. However, Mali does not have a formal method for transferring vulnerable children who are detained by the police and the Morals Brigade to NGOs.(3, 61) The Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family participates in a network of NGOs and UN bodies that provide care specifically to human trafficking victims. Organizations in the network provide transportation, food, housing, counseling, training, repatriation, and reintegration services.(57) In conjunction with security operations against armed groups, Malian and international security forces detained individuals suspected of involvement with armed groups, including children.(12) In 2015, the Government of Mali released four children from prison who had been recruited as child soldiers, however, some remained in detention and were not transferred to social services as required by the Inter-Ministerial Circular and the UN-signed Protocol. (12, 15, 62) In addition, evidence does not reveal efforts made by the Government of Mali to prosecute individuals alleged to have recruited and used child soldiers.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE)	Coordinate Mali's efforts to eliminate child labor, especially its worst forms.(29, 63) The Committee is chaired by the Ministry of Labor and includes representatives from the Ministries of Education; Public Works; Economy and Finances; Employment and Professional Training; and the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family.(63, 64)
National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices	Coordinate government efforts to combat human trafficking. Members comprise various government agencies, civil society groups, and NGOs.(3, 50)
Inter-Ministerial Committee to Prevent Grave Violations Against Children	Conduct awareness-raising campaigns to prevent the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. Conduct joint missions with international partners to determine the presence of children in armed conflict.(65)
Artisanal Gold Mining Summit Committee	Monitor the recommendations of a 2014 summit on artisanal mining, including the ban on child labor in artisanal gold mines. Artisanal gold mining associations and local government officials represented in committee.(56)

In 2015, the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor (CNLTE), in collaboration with international partners, organized awareness-raising campaigns and trainings on child labor for the World Day Against Child Labor.(48) CNLTE member agencies under the National Plan to Combat Child Labor (NAP) held regular meetings to develop and adopt a Roadmap to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture.(66-68) However, budget constraints hampered the effectiveness of the CNLTE as a whole.(16) Although the CNLTE is the official coordinating body for child labor issues, the number of government structures and lack of coordination among them is complicated, and as a result, so are its efforts to address child labor. The Ministry of Justice; the Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family; the Ministry of Internal Security; and the Ministry of Labor share the responsibility of addressing child labor in Mali.(15, 50, 69) The National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices met throughout 2014 to draft the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices, which was formally adopted in February 2015.(3, 70) No evidence was discovered that the Inter-Ministerial Committee to Prevent Grave Violations Against Children conducted meetings, took action to implement awareness-raising campaigns, or conducted joint missions to determine the presence of child labor in self-defense militias during the reporting period.(49, 56)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Mali has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan to Combat Child Labor (PANETEM) (2011–2020)	Aims to eradicate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and all exploitative child labor by 2020.(17, 29, 71) Calls for improving the judicial framework, increasing awareness of child labor, withdrawing children from the worst forms of child labor, providing children with appropriate remediation services, and improving the livelihoods of families.(17) Falls under the direction of the National Unit to Fight Against Child Labor and is implemented in partnership with 15 other ministries, including the Ministries of Education; Agriculture; Mining; Justice; and the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family.(17)

Policy	Description
Roadmap to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture (2015–2020)†	Seeks to enhance the legal framework and build the capacity of the Government to prevent child labor in agriculture. Includes activities to strengthen social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children and families.(67, 68) Chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture, includes representatives from the Ministries of Youth; Education; Labor; Employment and Professional Training; and the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family. Also includes non-governmental stakeholders, such as NGOs, labor unions, international organizations, and social partners.(66, 67)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices (2015–2017)†	Includes goals of enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implementing the laws, providing effective protection and care for victims, and strengthening social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children. Led by the National Coordinating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Associated Practices.(3, 70)
National Policy for Child Promotion and Protection (2015–2019)	Aims to enhance the legal framework to protect children from violence, human trafficking, and exploitative work.(72, 73) Overseen by the Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Children, and the Family.(72, 74)
Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (2012–2017)*	Provides a framework for Mali's growth and poverty reduction agenda.(75) Aims to improve access to education and its quality, increase food security, increase employment opportunities for youth, and increase protection for and programs to assist women, children, and vulnerable groups. Contains specific plans to develop an emergency plan for children involved in armed conflict.(75)
Inter-Ministerial Circular	Provides a framework for the Government of Mali on the prevention, protection, and reintegration of children involved in armed conflict.(47, 65, 76)
Protocol on the Release and Transfer of Children Associated with Armed Groups and Armed Forces	A UN-signed protocol agreement that highlights the responsibility of the Government of Mali to transfer children associated with armed groups to either social services or UNICEF.(12, 50, 77)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the National Plan to Combat Child Labor was launched in 2011, the Plan has not yet been implemented due to budgetary constraints.(16, 68) The Circular calls on families, local authorities, and child protection agencies to work together to ensure that children withdrawn from armed forces are disarmed, demobilized, and reintegrated or placed in another location of their choosing.(47) However, these efforts are insufficient to fully address the scope of the problem.(3, 10)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Mali funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Mali.(78) During 2015, the program contributed to the development of the Roadmap to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture and held a workshop to train agricultural extension services on child labor.(66)
Combating Child Labor through Skills Training for Older Children (2014–2015)	$2.6 million, Government of Netherlands-funded 1-year project, combats child labor by improving access to education. Includes a component on design of skills and livelihoods training programs for out-of-school youth.(68, 79) Ended in September 2015, and 225 attendees received certification from the National Direction of Professional Training.(15)
Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in West Africa (2009–2014)	$5.4 million, Government of Spain-funded 5-year project to combat child labor by strengthening national public and private sector institutions, as well as civil society organizations.(79)

Program	Description
Back to School Campaign	$3 million, UNICEF-implemented project, returns children and teachers to school following the violence that occurred in 2012 and 2013. Supports 500,000 students and 9,000 teachers with school kits and teacher training as they return to school.(80-82)
Out-of-School Youth Program-PAJE-Nièta (2010–2015)	$30 million, USAID-funded, 5-year project implemented by the Education Development Center.(83) Provides education and technical and work readiness training to approximately 10,000 out-of-school youth between the ages of 14 and 25. Aims to improve youth employment prospects in Kayes, Sikasso, and Timbuktu regions. Implemented in partnership with the private sector and the Ministries of Youth, Education, and Employment.(80, 84) The Out-of-School Youth Program ended in November 2015.(15)
Every Child Counts Campaign (2015–2017)*	UNICEF-implemented project, provides alternative and accelerated learning programs for out-of-school children in Gao, Kidal, Mopti, Segou, and Timbuktu regions. Supports 100,000 students and 2,000 teachers with school kits and teacher training as they return to school.(34)
Reopening Schools†	Government initiative in northern Mali, made progress in providing access to education by reopening 89 percent of schools for the 2014/15 academic year.(33)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Mali.

Although Mali participates in some programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor, these programs are insufficient to fully address the scope of the problem, especially in artisanal gold mining. In addition, Mali does not fund or participate in programs to address child labor in domestic work, fishing, forced begging, commercial sexual exploitation, slavery, or debt bondage.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mali (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the Labor Code light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2015
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions and protections apply to children in unpaid, temporary, or non-contract work.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that the Decree 96-178 aligns with the Hazardous Occupations List.	2009 – 2015
	Enact laws to provide penalties for violations of the worst forms of child labor, including for use of children under age 18 in armed conflict.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that laws prohibit children from being used, procured, or offered for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009 – 2015
	Define the age of children protected by the Inter-Ministerial Circular on the Prevention, Protection, and Reintegration of Children in Armed Conflict and ensure that the defined age range complies with international standards.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Ensure that law enforcement agencies, including regional offices, have adequate training and resources to conduct inspections and investigations into child labor, including its worst forms.	2012 – 2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors and Morals Brigade officers responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2012 – 2015
	Take measures to enforce laws relating to child labor effectively, particularly in northern Mali.	2013 – 2015
	Collect and publicize information on the number, type, and quality of labor inspections; law violations and penalties assessed; and criminal prosecutions and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure the punishments of convicted perpetrators of the worst forms of child labor are carried out in accordance with the law.	2015
	Ensure that a formal mechanism is established to transfer vulnerable children who are detained by the police and the Morals Brigade to appropriate services.	2011 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Implement the provisions of the Inter-Ministerial Circular and the UN-signed Protocol, which requires that children in detention for their association with armed groups be handed over to social services or to UN child protection actors for appropriate reintegration and social protection services.	2013 – 2015
	Enforce laws relating to child soldiers, including the prosecution of offenders, and enforce laws relating to slavery, including hereditary slavery.	2012 – 2015
Coordination	Streamline coordination across government agencies, including by ensuring coordination among the CNLTE and other overlapping agencies.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that CNLTE has appropriate funding to implement the National Plan to Combat Child Labor.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure that the Inter-Ministerial Committee to Prevent Grave Violations Against Children meets regularly and takes action to fulfill its mission.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PRSP.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that appropriate funding exists to effectively implement the National Plan to Combat Child Labor.	2012 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by taking the following actions: Eliminating school-related fees in public schools. Increase school infrastructure, teacher availability, and school supplies. Ensure that school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to attend school. Take measures to ensure the safety of children and teachers in schools. Make sure all children, no matter their ethnicity, have access to education.	2010 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to fully address child labor, especially in artisanal gold mining.	2014 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in domestic work, the informal sector, fishing, forced begging, commercial sexual exploitation, slavery, and debt bondage.	2009 – 2015
	Expand and improve programs targeting children in armed conflict, including programs targeting the disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration of child soldiers.	2012 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to

- workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
54. UN. The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, Mauritania made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government amended the Anti-Slavery Law to increase the penalties for slavery offenses and criminalize other slavery-like practices, including debt bondage. The Government also adopted the National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor, which aims to strengthen child labor laws and mobilize funds for social programs to withdraw children from child labor. In addition, the Government funded and participated in multiple programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. However, children in Mauritania are engaged in child labor, including in herding cattle and goats, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in indentured and hereditary slavery. Mauritania's legal framework does not prohibit hazardous occupations and activities in all relevant child labor sectors, including agriculture; it also does not prohibit children from being used, procured, or offered for the production and trafficking of drugs. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Additionally, the Government continued to imprison anti-slavery protestors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mauritania are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and particularly in herding cattle and goats.(1-6) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in indentured and hereditary slavery.(5-11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mauritania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	18.2 (172,936)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	48.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		67.5

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2007.(13)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of beans,* rice,* millet,* sorghum,* and vegetables* (2, 14-16)
	Herding and caring for cattle, goats, sheep,and camels (1-3, 5, 6, 11)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging as a result of criminal gang recruitment and by Koranic teachers (3, 5, 6, 8, 15)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (6, 8, 9, 14, 17)
	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs (2, 14, 15, 23)
	Indentured and hereditary slavery (2, 5-7, 9-11)
	Forced labor in domestic work and camel jockeying, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 6, 8, 14, 18, 24)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Mauritania continue to be exploited as slaves and endure slave-like practices in remote areas of the country. Some children are born into slavery, while others are forced to work the land and turn over what they produce to their masters in order to remain on the land.(2, 5, 7-11, 25) Some child slaves herd animals, such as cattle and goats, and perform domestic labor.(1-3, 6, 9) Some former slaves, commonly descendants of slaves from the Haratin ethnic minority, continue to endure slave-like practices, including working for their former masters in exchange for food, money, and lodging.(2, 6, 7, 9, 11, 26)

In Mauritania, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education. However, some Koranic teachers (marabouts) force their students (talibés) to beg on the streets for long hours and to surrender the money they have earned, or to perform manual labor.(2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 11, 18, 25)

Although the Constitution makes primary education compulsory, in practice, this provision is not enforced effectively, as many children do not attend school. The lack of school infrastructure and limited availability of teachers, especially in rural areas, impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 10, 27-29) Many children in Mauritania are not registered at birth. Unable to prove their citizenship, unregistered children have difficulties accessing services such as education.(8, 25, 26, 30, 31) Although birth certificates are not required for children to enroll in primary school, birth certificates are required for children to sit and take national standardized examinations to graduate. (32)

In 2015, Mauritania hosted approximately 50,100 Malian refugees.(33) Refugee children may have difficulty accessing education, which could put them at increased risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(10, 33, 34) In addition, children from families of slave descent face barriers to accessing education due to societal discrimination.(2, 11, 26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mauritania has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In August 2015, the Government amended the Anti-Slavery Law to criminalize additional slavery-like practices, including debt bondage, and to increase the penalties against those convicted of slavery up to 20 years' imprisonment and a fine up to $16,000.(9, 40, 43, 44) The amendment also called for the creation of special tribunals to prosecute crimes related to slavery and entitled victims, including children, to legal aid and free legal proceedings. In addition, the amendment allowed civil society organizations that have been legally registered for five years to file complaints on behalf of victims of slavery and slavery-like practices.(9, 40, 44)

The Labor Code allows children between ages 12 and 14 to perform light work, as long as it does not impede their school attendance or exceed two hours of work per day, and if it is authorized by the Ministry of Labor.(35) However, the Labor Code does not determine the activities in which light work may be permitted.(2, 45) Children working in unpaid, temporary, or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under the child labor laws and regulations as do children working in contractual employment.(35, 46, 47) In addition, the penalties established for violating child labor laws are insufficient and do not generally deter violations.(2, 6, 48)

While Mauritanian law prohibits the use of children in some illicit activities, such as organized begging, it does not criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production or trafficking of drugs. (23, 29) The law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children, but it does not cover agriculture, a sector of work in which there is evidence that children use dangerous equipment and are exposed to hazardous substances.(4, 6) In 2011, the Government, in partnership with local NGOs, UNICEF, and Terre des Hommes, drafted a law against the worst forms of child labor, which includes a more specific list of hazardous occupations for children, including prohibitions on work in agriculture; however, the Government has not enacted this legislation.(6, 49, 50)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

National Police	Investigate crimes against children.(53)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Childhood, and the Family (MASEF) Office of Childhood	Develop and implement programs to protect vulnerable children and monitor alleged violations of child labor laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. Manages the Centers for the Protection and Social Integration of Children in Difficult Situations.(2, 8, 51)
Ministry of Justice Direction of the Judiciary for Protection of Children	Coordinate child protection issues and oversee the Special Brigade for Minors and tribunals that sentence child offenders.(2, 53)
National Commission for Human Rights and Humanitarian Action	Advocate for the eradication of slavery and receive complaints and conduct investigations on human rights violations, including the worst forms of child labor.(10, 31, 54)
National Agency for the Fight against the Vestiges of Slavery, Integration, and the Fight against Poverty (Tadamoun)	Develop and implement programs to tackle poverty, promote the integration of refugees, and rehabilitate former slaves.(7, 31, 55) File complaints on behalf of citizens who accuse their employers of practicing slavery and bring cases of alleged slavery to the authorities for investigation.(8, 31, 54)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Mauritania took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

During the reporting period, the Government budgeted $582,000 to the Office of Childhood at the Ministry of Social Affairs, Childhood, and the Family to support activities to end child labor. However, the Government considers this amount inadequate and no specific amount was allotted to conduct inspections.(6) In 2015, the Ministry of Labor employed 47 full-time labor inspectors and 20 full-time labor controllers. However, labor inspectors and labor controllers conduct inspections only when complaints are lodged to the Ministry of Labor.(6, 58)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mauritania took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In 2015, the Special Brigade for Minors employed 10 officers and investigated 600 cases.(6, 18) However, research could not determine how many of the cases involved child labor.(6) In addition, the Special Brigade for Minors referred 373 children who were victims of exploitation, violence, or neglect to social welfare services. The Special Brigade for Minors also referred 1,100 children for monitoring.(43) However, police generally lacked resources, which stymied investigation of cases, including those involving the worst forms of child labor.(43, 59, 60)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group	Coordinate child labor and child trafficking efforts. Comprised of MASEF Office of Childhood; Ministry of Interior; Ministry of Justice Direction of Child Judiciary Protection; and the National Commission for Human Rights and Humanitarian Action. Also includes international organizations and NGOs.(51, 61)
National Council for Children	Coordinate and monitor government efforts on child protection and development.(49) Chaired by the Office of the Prime Minister and comprised of officials from MASEF and the Ministries of Education, Health, Justice, and Social Security. Also includes nongovernmental stakeholders such as international organizations, NGOs, and social partners.(62)

The Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group and the National Council for Children were inactive during the reporting period and did not receive any funding.(48, 49, 63)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Mauritania has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor (2015–2020)†	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by strengthening child labor laws, training relevant government officials on combating the worst forms of child labor, implementing awareness-raising campaigns, and mobilizing funds for social programs to withdraw children from child labor.(5, 6)
National Plan to Combat the Vestiges of Slavery (2014–2017)	Aims to prevent slavery through improvements in education, health, and by providing victims with income-generating activities. Falls under the direction of the National Agency for the Fight against the Vestiges of Slavery, Integration, and the Fight against Poverty (Tadamoun).(32, 64, 65)
Roadmap for the Eradication of the Vestiges of Slavery (2014–2016)	Calls for an awareness-raising campaign on slavery, the revision of slavery laws and policies, the implementation of programs that provide former slaves with access to education and livelihood opportunities, and provide assistance to former slaves who wish to return to their home countries. (66–68) Based on 29 of 42 recommendations made by the UN's Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery after an official mission to Mauritania.(64–67)
Strategic Framework to Fight Poverty (2011–2015)	Sought to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, provide quality education to vulnerable children, and protect the rights of children.(69)
Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper II (2011–2015)	Sought to eliminate child labor and included plans to increase access to high-quality education for all children.(18, 70, 71)

National Program for the Development of the Education Sector II (PNDSE II) (2011–2020)*	Aims to improve the quality of, and access to, basic and secondary education and increase employment opportunities through technology and skills training for school dropouts and youth without formal education. Overseen by the Ministry of Economic Affairs and Development and supported by international donors.(73, 74)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Government drafted a National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons; however, it had not been approved by the end of the reporting period.(48, 75, 76). In addition, the Government's continued imprisonment of anti-slavery protestors limits its ability to address this issue comprehensively.(18, 43, 77-79)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Mauritania funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Program to Eradicate the Effects of Slavery†	Government program that supports the reintegration and rehabilitation of former slaves.(80) In 2015, constructed and equipped 20 new schools in low-income rural areas.(81)
Centers for the Protection and Social Integration of Children in Difficult Situations†	Government program that provides food, shelter, education, and vocational training to vulnerable children, many of whom are talibés. Comprises seven government-operated locations in Aleg, Kaedi, Kiffa, Nouadhibou, Rosso, and in the El Mina and Dar-Naim regions of Nouakchott.(18, 43, 51) In 2015, served 373 children and monitored approximately 1,100 children.(43, 48)
Protection of Mauritanian Children Against Violence, Exploitation, Discrimination, Abuse, and Neglect (2014–2016)	$1.9 million EU- and UNICEF-funded program, in partnership with MASEF, to combat child exploitation, including the worst forms of child labor. Operates in the regional provinces of Adrar, Assaba, Brakna, Gorgol, Guidimagha, Hodh Charghui, Hodh Gharbi, Nouadhibou, and Nouakchott.(5, 65, 82) In 2015, provided social and reintegration services to more than 12,374 children and protected 17,836 girls from female genital mutilation.(43, 48)
From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (2015–2019)*	USDOL-funded global project implemented by the ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at combating forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to C.29 on Forced Labor.(83) List of project activities to be finalized in 2016.(83)
Child Protection Training Center†	Government program that provides training on child protection, including child labor, to local organizations in Selibaby.(61)
UNODC Impact Program	EU-funded program that aims to assist West and North African states implement the Migrant Smuggling Protocol by strengthening criminal justice systems through improved legislative frameworks, stronger government capacity, improved data collection and analysis techniques, and awareness raising.(84, 85)
Poverty Reduction Project	$38.4 million UN International Fund for Agricultural Development-funded project in Aftout South and Karakoro. (86) Targets 21,000 households and aims to assist rural communities through the provision of loans and grants to improve livelihoods, economic opportunities, and food security.(87)
Refugee Assistance Programs†	MASEF Office of Childhood programs that raise awareness among NGOs operating in the M'Bera refugee camp on ways to address child exploitation.(48, 88)
Education Priority Zones*†	Government program that combats social inequalities by providing equal opportunities to all primary school children throughout the country. Managed by the Ministry of National Education.(5, 89)
Access to Justice and Human Rights Program*	USDOS- and USAID-funded program implemented by the American Bar Association's Rule of Law Initiative and Search for Common Ground organization to promote the social and political rights of marginalized groups, including for former and current victims of slavery, and to expand the public and political participation of those groups. (90)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Mauritania.

Although Mauritania has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, especially in agriculture, herding, and domestic work, as well as for children in hereditary and indentured slavery.(6, 61) Moreover, as recently as August 2015, some government officials did not acknowledge that slavery continues, despite its prohibition.(43, 79, 91) In addition, the lack of recent data on slavery limits the Government's ability to develop effective policies to address this issue comprehensively. More needs to be done to address the problem of slavery in Mauritania, particularly by increasing social programs for former slaves and carrying out a campaign to raise awareness of the national laws on slavery.(11, 54)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mauritania (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit children from being used, procured, or offered for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009–2015
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from being involved in child labor.	2015
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions and protections apply to children in unpaid, temporary, or non-contractual work.	2012–2015
	Ensure that penalties are high enough to deter violators of child labor laws.	2015
	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Mauritania that fall into an R.190 category are prohibited to children under age 18.	2009–2015
Enforcement	Increase resources for law enforcement officials and the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor, in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2010–2015
	Authorize the inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
	Strengthen the inspection system by initiating routine and targeted inspections, rather than performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2014–2015
	Ensure that criminal law enforcement officials receive training on new laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Collect and make public information on the number of labor inspections; the number of child labor law violations, citations, and penalties assessed; and the number of criminal prosecutions and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011–2015
	Effectively enforce legal provisions for compulsory education.	2010–2015
Coordination	Ensure that the Child Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor Group and the National Council for Children are active and receive adequate funding to fulfill their missions.	2014–2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Strategy for the Protection of Children and the National Program for the Development of the Education II.	2009–2015
	Approve the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons.	2015
	Take steps to ensure anti-slavery protestors' rights of freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.	2011–2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education by— <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Increasing school infrastructure and teacher availability, especially in rural areas; ■ Ensuring that school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to attend school and sit and take national standardized examinations to graduate; and ■ Making sure that all children, including those from families of slave descent and refugees, have access to education. 	2011–2015
	Expand the scope of programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, herding, domestic work, and other sectors in which children work, as well as the issue of children in hereditary and indentured slavery.	2009–2015
	Implement a continuous, awareness-raising program for government officials on the laws related to slavery and the worst forms of child labor.	2012–2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Collect data on slavery to develop effective policies and programs that identify and protect children at risk.	2010–2015
	Increase funding for social programs that provide services to former slaves.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2015, Mauritius made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government announced a new plan for poverty alleviation, hired additional labor inspectors, and increased funding for several programs to combat child labor and assist vulnerable households. However, children in Mauritius are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of criminal child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. In addition, poor coordination continues to hinder the Government's efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Agalega Islands, Cargados Carajos Shoals, and Rodrigues are not shown.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mauritius are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mauritius. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Producing* and harvesting* vegetables* (3, 4, 7-9)
	Feeding livestock* (9)
	Fishing,* including diving,* and casting nets* and traps* (3, 7, 10)
Industry	Working in factories* and masonry* (3, 7)
Services	Domestic work (3, 4, 7)
	Working in apparel shops* (7)
	Street work, including vending,* begging,* and carrying* goods in public markets (4, 7, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1-4, 8, 11)
	Use in illicit activities, including selling drugs* (3, 7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Mauritius

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children in Mauritius are lured into commercial sexual exploitation by their peers, family members, or through false offers of other employment; however, the Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations, Employment, and Training (MOLIRE) states that there is no child labor in the formal sector.(2, 3) Mauritius has never conducted a national child labor survey, and therefore information is limited about the prevalence of child labor in the country.(12)

Evidence suggests that incidents of physical and psychological abuse, including corporal punishment of students by teachers, prevent some children from attending school, which increases their risk of becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 11, 13-15) Because of discrimination, children with disabilities face serious barriers to access education.(4, 15, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mauritius has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

* No conscription (25)

† No standing military (25)

The Government of Mauritius continues to work on a comprehensive bill designed to harmonize the existing legal framework related to children's rights and ensure that it is consistent with the CEACR.(4, 26-28) Research, however, was unable to determine the timeline of its introduction to the National Assembly for consideration.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspection and Enforcement Division of the Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations, Employment, and Training (MOLIRE)	Enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor.(29, 30)
Office of the Ombudsperson for Children	Investigate any suspected or reported case of child labor or violation of a child's rights. Promote compliance with the CRC.(11, 31)
Police Brigade for the Protection of Minors (Minors' Brigade)	Investigate reports of child or forced labor, sometimes in conjunction with routine police patrols.(1, 11, 28) Patrol arcades, bus terminals, and other areas in which youth are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 29) Maintain a database of all trafficking incidents of children and refer all cases of commercial sexual exploitation to the Child Development Unit (CDU).(26)
Ministry of Gender Equality, Child Development and Family Welfare (MOGE) Child Development Unit (CDU)	Enforce legislation related to children and implement policies and programs related to child development.(11, 28, 32) Receive tips on all forms of child abuse, including commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking.(2, 29) Provide follow-up assistance to victims.(1, 11) Assign child welfare officers to accompany victims while they receive immediate medical care, and work in conjunction with the police if an official statement is needed.(2) Develop a central database and standard operating procedures for sharing information and taking action to address child labor.(26, 33)

In 2015, the Child Development Unit of the Ministry of Gender Equality, Child Development and Family Welfare (MOGE) carried out three awareness campaigns on children's rights and how to safeguard them and formed a committee to investigate complaints of poor conditions in residential care centers.(3) The Office of the Ombudsperson for Children appointed a new ombudsperson experienced in working with vulnerable children and advocating for children's rights.(3, 34)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Mauritius took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although the MOLIRE works with the CDU and the Minors' Brigade to refer victims to social service providers, research indicates that the MOLIRE does not coordinate with the Ministry of Education to ensure that victims have access to education.(3, 9, 35) During the reporting period, the police initiated investigations into two cases of child labor related to violations of the labor code, which are still ongoing.(35)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research found no information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Mauritius took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown (9)	Unknown
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (9)	Unknown
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown (9)	Unknown
Number of Investigations	Unknown (9)	Unknown
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (9)	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (9)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	Unknown (9)	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (11, 28)	Yes (3)

The Minors' Brigade, in cooperation with the CDU, manages the "119" and "113" hotlines to receive complaints about situations requiring child protection; however, it is not known how many cases of child labor were identified as a result of calls made to these hotlines.(11, 28)

Research revealed that criminal law enforcement agencies lacked staff, transportation, and other necessities to properly enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(2, 26, 36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Protection Committee (NCPC)	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate activities on children's rights and welfare, including efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by MOGE and comprising representatives from more than 10 government Ministries.(11) Also known as the Working Together Committee and includes a subcommittee that coordinates efforts to combat commercial sexual exploitation.(33, 37).
National Children's Council (NCC)	Serve as the executive of child protection programs and focuses on child protection issues in the country as an independent, paragonovernmental entity under the auspices of MOGE.(1, 11)

In 2015, a lack of coordination hindered the Government's efforts to address child labor and significant overlap continues to exist among the committees involved in child protection issues.(3, 11) The roles of the National Child Protection Committee (NCPC) and the National Children's Council (NCC) are unclear in coordinating efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.(11) In November 2015, the NCC participated in a month-long awareness-raising campaign on children's rights in honor of Universal Children's Day.(3) The NCPC met once during the reporting period.(12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Mauritius has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Child Safety Online Action Plan	Prevents sexual exploitation of children on the Internet by strengthening the legal framework and raising awareness among parents and children.(38) Falls under the direction of the Ministry of Information and Communication Technology, and implemented in conjunction with other government agencies, including MOGE; the Minors' Brigade; the Office of the Ombudsperson for Children; and the Ministry of Education, Culture and Human Resources.(11, 29) In 2015, as part of the Plan, the National Computer Board carried out several awareness-raising campaigns related to Internet safety for children, students, parents, and educators.(3)
National Policy Paper on the Family (2006–2015)*	Supports child welfare through holistic support for families, including job training for parents; led by MOGE.(11, 39)
Education and Human Resources Strategy Plan (2008–2020)*	Aims to improve equity of access to primary, secondary, and technical and vocational education, and to provide social services for youth. Overseen by the Ministry of Education, Culture and Human Resources.(40, 41)
UNDP Country Program for Mauritius (2013–2016)*	Improves access to education for vulnerable children by reducing inequality.(42)
Government Development Program—Achieving Meaningful Change (2015–2019)*†	Describes the overall development agenda. Aims to increase access to social protection services for vulnerable populations, including children.(27, 43, 44)
Marshall Plan Against Poverty for Mauritius*†	Ministry of Social Integration and Economic Empowerment policy addresses access to education, community development, and employment for vulnerable groups.(33) Receives technical assistance from UNDP.(3)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Mauritius funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Awareness-raising Programs in Schools, Community Centers, and in the Media on Commercial Sexual Exploitation†	Government program to educate the public on preventing sexual abuse and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 2, 37) During 2015, educated 1,952 students on commercial sexual exploitation of children.(28)
Workshops on Commercial Sexual Exploitation†	Government workshops that aim to raise awareness of commercial sexual exploitation of vulnerable groups.(1)
Drop-in Centers†	Government program that provides counseling and referrals to victims of sexual abuse, including commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Monitored by the CDU.(26, 28, 30)
Shelters and Institutional Care†	Government program that provides shelter and institutional care to victims who are referred to Government or NGO shelters. Through residential care centers, serve victims of child abuse, including victims of sexual abuse and prostitution.(3, 11, 28) In 2015, operated 21 shelters and served 567 children.(1, 28, 30)
Community Child Protection Program†	Government program that provides child protection services to at-risk youth in nine districts.(28)
Income Support Program†	Ministry of Social Security, National Solidarity and Reform Institutions program that provides money directly to 8,000 vulnerable families living below the Poverty Intervention Line.(32, 33)
Special Collaborative Program for Support to Women and Children in Distress†	MOGE program that provides funding to NGOs to implement programs to improve the lives of vulnerable women and children and reintegrate them into mainstream society.(34) Received $1.2 million from the Government from January 2015 to June 2016, a significant increase from the $484,000 received from January to December 2014.(34, 35)
Social Aid Program†	Government program that provides assistance to 20,000 families.(11, 32)
Eradication of Absolute Poverty Program†	Government program that aims to increase poor children's access to education by expanding free public school education and providing school feeding support to more than 7,500 households in 229 geographic pockets of poverty.(41)

Mauritius

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Program	Description
Education Priority Zones (ZEP)†	Government program that combats social inequalities by providing equal opportunities to all primary school children throughout the country. Has been shown to reduce school dropout rates through enhanced community participation in education.(11, 41) In 2015, received Government funding for low-performing schools.(3)
Child Mentoring Schemet	Government program that provides one-on-one counseling to at-risk children through a government-selected mentor.(37, 45)
Summer and Winter School Program†	Government program that provides summer and winter schooling to enhance the successful transition of students from primary to secondary school.(29, 37)
Second Chance Program†	Government program to educate and provide vocational training and life skills to those who dropped out after age 16.(37)

† Program is funded by the Government of Mauritius.

The Government's institutional care facilities, which house orphans, victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and victims of other types of abuses, are overcrowded and lack appropriate standards of care, leading to inadequate service provision.(1, 3, 35) Service providers are overtaxed and lack appropriate training.(3) Child victims of commercial sexual exploitation are sometimes placed by court order into probation centers, where they may not receive appropriate treatment.(1)

In addition, the Government of Mauritius does not fund or participate in programs to address child labor in domestic work or street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mauritius (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties and conduct targeted routine inspections.	2015
	Establish a mechanism to log all calls to the child protection hotline and track cases of child labor for referral to law enforcement or social service providers.	2014 – 2015
	Increase the amount of training, human resources, and funding for agencies responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor.	2011 – 2015
Coordination	Streamline coordination across agencies and encourage effective coordination between the NCPD and the NCC.	2012 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2010 – 2015
	Adopt a policy that addresses the worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the prevalence of child labor in Mauritius to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that all children, including those with disabilities, can attend school without fear of physical or psychological abuse.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that victims of commercial sexual exploitation have access to comprehensive, quality services and refrain from placing victims in facilities designed for youth on probation.	2010 – 2015
	Expand the scope of programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and street work.	2014 – 2015

- the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Moldova

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Moldova made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted Law No.166, which expands the Ombudsman for Children's Rights to include the right to appeal to the Constitutional Court, attend parliamentary hearings, and contest any legislative proposals that would infringe upon the rights of children. The Government also adopted the Action Plan for 2015–2016, which includes actions to address child labor issues. However, children in Moldova are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Funding for the State Labor Inspectorate was not sufficient, and the inspectorate's efforts to enforce child labor laws were hindered by barriers to conducting unannounced inspections. While the Government provides some financial support to programs addressing child labor, including human trafficking, most major child labor programs have been donor funded. These programs do not appear to be sustainable without outside financial assistance.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Moldova are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-4) Each year, the Government's National Bureau of Statistics provides data on children and youth in Moldova. In previous years, the report featured information on child labor; however, the 2014 report, released in 2015, did not.(2, 5) According to the 2013 report, which includes the latest data on child labor available, 6,100 children between ages 15 and 17 (4.6 percent of the total number of children) worked.(2, 6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Moldova.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Poor official statistics, along with the lack of research on child labor and related issues, lead to limited available information on the types of work children perform and the sectors in which they work.(2, 4, 12)

Child trafficking, particularly of children suffering from familial neglect, continues to be a concern in Moldova.(4, 13, 14) Both boys and girls are recruited for commercial sexual exploitation almost exclusively by men within the country through brothels, saunas, and massage parlors. Girls are also trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation transnationally.(3, 4, 15) A source indicates that changes in the recruit minors have led to younger children being recruited for use in commercial sexual exploitation. In previous years, traffickers usually did not recruit children for prostitution, and, if recruited, these minors ranged between ages 15 and 16.(4) However, in 2014 and 2015, the ages of these children, especially girls, who endure commercial sexual exploitation through prostitution, sex video chats, and massage parlors, ranged from age 13 to age 15.(4) Moldova is also a destination for sex tourism of children for tourists from various countries, including Australia, Denmark, Germany, Israel, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Thailand, and the United States.(3, 4, 12) Vulnerable children from the secessionist region of Transnistria were at an increased risk of being trafficked through Ukraine's Odessa Region.(4)

The latest national study on children in need and children whose parents work abroad, conducted in 2012, reveals that 105,270 (approximately 15 percent) of children have one or both parents working abroad.(16) Children left behind by migrant parents may be particularly vulnerable to child labor and human trafficking, especially those who are institutionalized in orphanages or boarding schools. Children with disabilities account for more than 50 percent of children living in these residential institutions.(3, 4, 10, 11, 17, 18) Government authorities and NGOs report that sex tourists continue to target orphanages by posing as school benefactors and bribing orphanage administration officials to obtain unsupervised access to children, sometimes even taking the children to rented apartments overnight.(3)

Although the Education Code provides for free and compulsory education until age 18, parents are sometimes asked to pay informal fees for supplies and textbooks. Education-related costs, lack of transportation to school and birth registration documentation, and the negative attitudes and physical violence of school officials and fellow students toward some Roma children make it challenging for some children to access education.(4, 10, 11, 18-21)

Government policies entitle children with disabilities to government provided home schooling, but those living in rural areas have limited access to this service. Due to their concerns about facing discrimination, many parents of children with disabilities declined home schooling for their children.(3, 10, 18) According to a recent UNICEF study, 5,800 children with disabilities did not attend school in 2013. Schools often lack adequate resources to address the needs of these children.(3) Children with disabilities living in Transnistria rarely attend school and are often unable to access specialized resources.(3, 22) Due to their limited access to educational opportunities, children with disabilities may be vulnerable to child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Moldova has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 46 of the Labor Code of the Republic of Moldova (23)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 255 of the Labor Code of the Republic of Moldova (23)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Government Decision No. 541 List of Jobs with Difficult, Harmful and/or Dangerous Working Conditions Prohibited for Children Under Age 18; the Collective Convention on Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labor; Articles 103, 105, and 255–256 of the Labor Code; Article 58 of the Contravention Code of the Republic of Moldova (23–26)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 44 of the Constitution of the Republic of Moldova; Article 6 of the Law on Children’s Rights; Article 168 of the Criminal Code; Article 7 of the Labor Code; the Collective Convention on Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labor (23, 24, 27–29)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 206 of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Moldova; Articles 2, and 25–29 of the Law on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Human Beings; the Collective Convention on Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labor (24, 28, 30)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 206 and 208 of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Moldova; Article 6 of the Law on Children’s Rights; the Collective Convention on Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labor (24, 28, 29)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 208 of the Criminal Code of the Republic of Moldova; the Collective Convention on Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labor (24, 28, 31)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 28 of Law No. 1245-XV on the Preparation of Citizens for Homeland Defense (32, 33)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 12 of Law No. 162-XVI on the Status of Military Personnel (32, 34)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Article 13 of the Education Code (35)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9 of the Education Code (35)

In 2015, the Parliament of Moldova adopted Law No. 166, which amended the law on the People’s Advocate (Ombudsman). The power of the Ombudsman for Children’s Rights has been expanded to include the right to appeal to the Constitutional Court, attend parliamentary hearings, and contest any legislative proposals that would infringe upon the rights of children.(2, 4)

Also during the reporting period, the Government adopted minimum standards for assistance provided to human trafficking victims through Government Decree 898.(4)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor, Social Protection, and Family (MLSPF) drafted a law to improve the implementation and enforcement of Law No. 140 on the Special Protection of Children at Risk and Children Separated from their Parents. Law No. 140 outlines procedures for interagency cooperation on the identification, evaluation, assistance, monitoring, and registering of vulnerable children, including victims of exploitation and human trafficking.(2) The draft proposes an updated version of Article 65 of the Contravention Code, with two new components. One component sets penalties for breaching the provisions of the law.(2) The second component sets penalties for the employees of the central and local authorities, or their subsidiary structures, institutions, and services providers that are operating in social services, education, health care, and law enforcement, for failure to ensure compliance with the deadlines, and the procedures laid out in the interagency cooperation mechanism. The draft is pending approval by authorities.(2)

In accordance with Article 46 of the Labor Code, the minimum age for employment in Moldova is 16. One exception to this requirement allows 15-year-olds to sign a work contract if the work will not endanger the minor's health or interfere with the child's growth, education, and professional development.(2) A parent or legal guardian must also provide written consent.(2) In addition, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside formal employment relationships.(23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) Within the Ministry of Labor, Social Protection, and Family (MLSPF)	Enforce all labor laws, including child labor laws. Investigate cases of possible labor law violations, including those pertaining to children.(16, 36) Manage the National Referral System (NRS), which has been implemented in all of Moldova's regions; each regional coordinator coordinates directly with law enforcement, NGOs, and schools, and lead victim rehabilitation efforts.(4)
Multidisciplinary Teams	Act on a local level to identify children involved in the worst forms of child labor, provide better alternatives to child laborers, continue to monitor the living conditions of identified children, and use the collected information for policy development(16, 36, 37)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOIA)	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and sexual exploitation. Assign officers dedicated to child protection and child labor.(16)
The Center for Combating Trafficking in Persons (CCTIP), subdivision of MOIA	Lead criminal investigations and arrest the perpetrators involved in trafficking of persons, including trafficking of children for both labor and sexual exploitation. In 2015, CCTIP and the SLI jointly organized a training on increasing awareness on human trafficking for the purposes of labor exploitation and forced labor for 27 inspectors.(2, 4, 38) In 2015, the Prosecutor General's Office (PGO) assigned seven litigating prosecutors and one administrative prosecutor to CCTIP, marking an increase of this unit's size by two, so that they can focus only on investigating and prosecuting cases of trafficking in persons. Changes to CCTIP's leadership during the reporting period led to a 6-month delay between when the former director, Ana Revenco, left and the new director, Sergiu Nani, came on board. (4) Upon assuming the role, Nani began implementing a new case intake policy that focused more on the number of investigations of less serious crimes that had previously been outsourced to local precincts, instead of continuing to use the effective policy that Revenco institutionalized during her tenure that dedicated resources to investigate child trafficking allegations and complex cases involving illegal migration and pimping rings instead. This delay and change in approach negatively affected the center's ability to cooperate with some members of civil society and its international partners, in part because this shift to the new case-intake policy was seen by some external stakeholders as an effort to increase CCTIP's enforcement statistics, at the expense of more in-depth and complex cases.(4)
Service for Information and Security	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and sexual exploitation through cooperation and exchanging information with CCTIP.(16)
The Prosecutor General's Office	Conduct and oversee criminal investigations of cases, including the worst forms of child labor exploitation; prosecute cases of worst forms of child labor in court and at the Supreme Court of Justice; and represent the rights of child victims in cases when their civil rights are violated.(39) Employ seven prosecutors to deal with trafficking in persons cases, as well as trafficking of children cases.(36) Composed of 36 prosecutorial offices throughout the country, which have prosecutors specialized in the handling of child trafficking cases.(16, 39)
The National Council for the Protection of Child Rights	Government institution typically chaired by a Deputy Prime Minister. The Council met only once in 2015.(2)

Organization/Agency	Role
People's Advocate (Ombudsman)	Promote the UN CRC and defend the constitutional rights of children. Request cooperation from public authorities, and public institutions, on child protection issues.(16)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and sexual exploitation.(16) Draft, consult, and propose all processes related to legislation for the Government's approval before they enter in force.(39)
Center for Combating Cyber Crime	This center has a specialized unit that focuses on combating child pornography. USDOS has donated specialized equipment, valued at $100,000, to this center and conducts training on a continual basis for 12 police officers on criminal investigations of cybercrimes involving children, including online recruitment and child pornography.(4)
Ministry of Information Technology	Assist with the identification of victims of trafficking in persons and provide foreign victims with residence permits and identity cards.(4)

† Data are from January 2015 to November 2015.

‡ Data are from January 2014 to November 2014.

Twenty-two State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) inspectors work in the central office, while the remaining 87 are posted in 10 regional branches. In 2015, SLI allocated $110,000 of its total budget for necessities to carry out inspections, out of which $36,000 was approved for fuel.(2) The MLSPF noted that the number of inspectors and amount of SLI funding were not sufficient.(2, 37)

Since 2007, the SLI has trained all national and regional labor inspectors on the curriculum for combating child labor, developed with the support of the ILO-IPEC.(2, 37) During the reporting period, the SLI inspectors attended numerous trainings and seminars. For example, in March, SLI collaborated with the Center for Combating Trafficking in Persons to train 27 inspectors on human trafficking for purposes of labor exploitation, and, in October, inspectors attended continuing education seminars on best practices to comply with labor laws and assessing risk in construction, transport, and agriculture.(2)

SLI inspects enterprises, institutions, and organizations that hire employees, no matter their type or legal form. From January to October 2015, SLI conducted 14 inspections specific to child labor, which involved 32 working minors.(2) These children worked in the following industries: 18 in agriculture, 7 in food processing, 4 in construction, 2 in trade, and 1 in car washing.(2)

The MLSPF acknowledges its inspections are less effective because, except in a limited number of circumstances, the SLI must give five days of notice prior to the inspection, which enables managers to conceal violations beforehand.(2) In addition, the Government's existing mechanism for filing and responding to child labor complaints is generally regarded as ineffective.(2)

Inspectors do not have the authority to assess penalties for labor law violations. They refer cases of labor violations to courts to make decisions regarding penalties in accordance with the law, on a case by case basis.(2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Moldova took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Violations Found	26 (41)	44 (2)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	7 (41)	24 (2, 40)
Number of Convictions	9 (41)	19 (2, 40)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (16, 36, 41)	Yes (2)

In 2015, the Center for Combating Trafficking in Persons employed 11 criminal investigators and 21 operative investigators, and the Center for Combating Cyber Crime, which specializes in the exploitation of children online, employed 4 investigators to investigate cases involving child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Prosecutor General's Office assigned seven prosecutors to handle trafficking in persons cases.(2)

In 2015, a total of 2,650 specialists participated in 118 trainings on trafficking in persons. This included a training in which the MLSPF partnered with the Permanent Secretariat of the National Committee for Combating Trafficking in Persons (NCCTIP) to conduct a series of training sessions and roundtable discussions on a multidisciplinary team approach to trafficking in persons and providing assistance to these victims for 776 social workers and local public authorities' personnel.(4) In addition, the National Institute of Justice collaborated with the IOM and the OSCE, with financial support from USDOS, to provide a mandatory 40-hour course on combating trafficking in persons, as well as identifying and interviewing victims, for 907 judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys. Despite this training, a source indicates that the Government's law enforcement personnel, particularly police officers who conduct foot patrols, lack training in proper investigative techniques for child trafficking cases, based on their limited ability to identify children subjected to forced begging or commercial sexual exploitation.(4)

The percentage of underage victims the Government identified during 2015 increased to 20 percent of all victims identified as minors, which represents a 6 percent increase since 2014. During the reporting period, the MLSPF provided assistance to 23 child victims of trafficking.(4)

A source indicated that during 2015 there was a trend of law enforcement officials not investigating allegations of children being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation when there was no physical evidence that the child had been coerced, such as visible bruises or other indicators of violence.(4) This source also highlighted another trend of police officers applying administrative penalties to victims of child trafficking for practicing prostitution.(4) Although a reciprocal mechanism between criminal authorities and social services exists, law enforcement personnel lack the ability to provide urgent care, either medical or legal, to child trafficking victims, which the NCCTIP attributed to insufficient cooperation between National Referral System stakeholders. The NCCTIP also emphasized the limited capacity of social workers in regions outside the capital city, which resulted in victims of trafficking receiving inefficient, poor-quality services.(4)

Although the Government has established child interview rooms in each of Moldova's regions, there is no specialized placement center for child victims of trafficking; instead children are placed in the same shelters as adult female trafficking in persons victims or left without necessary protection due to the lack of institutional space.(4)

Moldova

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although the Government has made efforts to improve the prosecution of perpetrators of human trafficking, local NGO experts agree that corruption within the judicial system continues to hinder the Government's ability to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(4, 41, 42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor (NSC)	Coordinate work on child labor issues at the national level between representatives from workers' organizations, NGOs, academia, and the following government agencies: the MLSPF; the Ministry of Education (MOE); the Ministry of Agriculture and the Food Processing Industry; the Ministry of Finance; the Ministry of Health (MOH); the Ministry of Internal Affairs; the Ministry of Youth and Sports; the State Chancellery; SLI; the PGO; and the National Bureau of Statistics.(16)
Child Labor Monitoring Unit	Supervise national-level activities related to combating child labor and serve as a coordinating mechanism between NSC at the national level, and multidisciplinary teams at the local level.(16, 37)
The National Committee for Combating Trafficking in Persons (NCCTIP)	Coordinate the Government's overall efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister of Foreign Affairs and European Integration; includes representatives from MOIA, the MLSPF, the MOH, the MOE, the Ministry of Finance, the Ministry of Youth and Sports, the Border Guard Service, the Security and Information Service, the PGO, the Secretary of the Supreme Security Council, the Governor of the Gagauz Autonomous Region, the General Police Inspectorate, SLI, and the Bureau for Relations with Diaspora within the State Chancellery.(4)
The Permanent Secretariat under NCCTIP	Monitor implementation of legal provisions on combating TIP set out by the NCCTIP. Establish working groups for drafting new provisions on TIP, participate in anti-TIP campaigns, develop the national action plans, and seek support for projects.(4)
National Coordination Unit within the MLSPF	Coordinate activities related to the protection of victims and potential victims of human trafficking. Build the capacity of multidisciplinary teams at the local level to improve victim identification and referral for crisis intervention and rehabilitation.(43) Comprises community social assistants, police officers, and NGO workers.(43)

Despite the important coordinating role of the National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor, it did not meet in 2015 to discuss child labor issues. This may impact the overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms, on a national level.(40)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Moldova has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Prevention and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NAP) (2011–2015)	Outlines 44 objectives to be implemented by 30 stakeholders to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by specific deadlines. Includes plans to institutionalize a child labor monitoring system in Moldova, increase access to education, provide rehabilitation and reintegration support for children withdrawn from child labor, and raise awareness on child labor issues in nine districts.(16, 37, 44)
EU-Moldova Association Agreement	Chapter 27 on the Cooperation in the Protection and Promotion of the Rights of the Child is dedicated to children's rights.(2)
The Action Plan for 2015–2016†	Adopted by Government Decision No. 680, this plan includes actions to address child labor issues.(2)
National Plan for Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (2014–2016)	Aims to improve national anti-human trafficking efforts and reduce the vulnerability of children to labor, and sexual exploitation, as a result of human trafficking. Includes specific objectives to build the capacity of government officials through training on TIP issues; improve systematic data collection; raise public awareness; and improve repatriation, and referral mechanisms for child trafficking victims.(45)

Policy	Description
Strategy of the National Referral System to Protect and Assist Victims and Potential Victims of Trafficking in Human Beings (NRS) (2009–2016)	Outlines a comprehensive framework for cooperation between government institutions and civil society organizations, for the protection of victims and potential victims of human trafficking. Focuses on awareness-raising activities, improving victim identification and referral mechanisms, and building the capacity of counter-human trafficking actors through ongoing training and technical assistance. Regulates the work of the Multidisciplinary Teams operating throughout the country as well as the National Coordination Unit. Launched by the MLSPF.(43)
Action Plan for the Support of the Roma People from the Republic of Moldova (2011–2015)*	Aimed to improve social inclusion of the Roma people, including equal access to quality education for Romani boys and girls. Established a system of 48 Romani community mediators supported by the state budget to advocate for Roma issues at the national level.(11, 46)
Child Protection Strategy (2014–2020)*	Sets three general objectives for improving the situation of children: creation of conditions necessary for raising children in families; preventing and combating violence, neglect, and exploitation of children; and providing assistance to working parents regarding children's upbringing and development.(36, 47)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Moldova funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Prevention of Sexual Abuse and Commercial Exploitation of Children in Central and Eastern Europe—Comprehensive Approach† (2014–2019)	Regional project, funded by Council of Europe; OAK Foundation; and Nobody's Children Foundation that aims to contribute to the prevention of sexual abuse, and commercial exploitation of children in Moldova. The National Center for the Prevention of Child Abuse (CNPAC), in partnership with several ministries, is responsible for its implementation, with the joint efforts from NGOs contributing to prevent abuse against children in six countries: Bulgaria, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldova, Poland, and Ukraine.(2)
Combating Child Trafficking Project	OSCE-funded project implemented by the MOE, the MLSPF, and local NGOs to prevent child trafficking by providing professional and life skills training to at-risk children without parental care in 12 residential schools across 10 regions and Transnistria.(48)
MOE's Educational Programs	Educational programs and activities implemented in 2015 to educate students in schools and universities about the phenomenon of trafficking in persons, domestic violence, abuse, and preventing neglect. All secondary school students are exposed to trafficking in persons issues in their civics course.(4) A total of 9,920 students studying at 12 universities participated in trainings to raise their awareness of trafficking in persons issues.(4)
National Anti-Traffic Week Campaign	Implemented on October 15–21, 2015, focused on online recruitment methods to educate the public about protecting themselves from being trafficked. Used press conferences, art exhibits, public debates, and flash mobs to discuss the services available to victims of human trafficking, which include rehabilitation and social integration support.(4) Additionally, provided 30,000 informational brochures, financed by the IOM and an NGO called La Strada, to regional councils. Also conducted seminars on anti-trafficking in persons in 24 communities. (4) Media coverage of this campaign's activities and events was high.(4)
World Day Against Trafficking in Persons	Commemorated by NCCTIP members on July 30, 2015, by participating in a radio talk show to discuss anti-trafficking in persons activities, assistance available to victims, etc., and encouraging stakeholders to promote this information as well(4)
UNICEF-Government of Moldova Country Program (2013–2017)†	Government and the UN program to improve social inclusion of vulnerable children and their families and to promote social change for child rights. Focuses on children affected by migration, Roma children, and child victims of sexual exploitation and abuse.(21, 36)
Structured Interviewing Child Victims and Witnesses in Moldova† (2014–2016)	UNICEF, OAK Foundation, and USAID, through the Rule of Law Institutional Strengthening Program, provide the funding for this project, which aims to help develop child-friendly justice systems, promote good practices, and ensure child victims and witnesses of sex crimes, domestic violence, and trafficking, encounter a sensitive justice system. Implemented by CNPAC, in partnership with the PGO, the MOJ, and several other ministries.(2)
Ministry of Economy's Programming on Social and Educational Inclusion	The Ministry of Economy partnered with local public authorities and NGOs to design educational programs to help child trafficking victims with their social and educational inclusion upon reintegrating into society.(4)

Program	Description
Ajutor Social Program†	Government and the World Bank cash benefit program that targets the poor.(49, 50)
Strengthening the Effectiveness of the Social Safety Net Project (2011–2017)†	$37 million, World Bank-funded project implemented by the MLSPF to improve the country's social safety net through expanding and strengthening the Ajutor Social Program, among other things. Provides social assistance based on household income to reach the poorest population.(39, 50)
Education Assistance Programs†	Government program that seeks to improve access to education by providing a monthly payment of $27 for a period of up to 6 months to cover the cost of school supplies for children from vulnerable families.(37)
Financial Assistance Program†	Government and donor-funded program that provides financial assistance to poor families with children in installments of approximately $32 per month for a maximum of 6 months, or as a lump sum of approximately $192.(16, 36, 38)
Children in Moldova Are Cared for in Safe and Secure Families Program (2014–2017)†	$4.4 million, USAID-funded project implemented by Partnerships for Every Child that aims to build the capacity of the MLSPF and the MOE to strengthen national child protection systems. Includes the objective of supporting children living in institutions, family-based care, and group homes to attend school.(36, 51)
Child Helpline† (2014–2016)	Donor-funded telephone support service for children, implemented by the international NGO La Strada and managed by MLSPF. Provides psychological counseling and information to parents; caregivers; and children who may be experiencing violence, neglect, or exploitation.(37, 52) From January to November 2015, operators of the Child Helpline provided counseling to 4,879 children, by answering 5,247 phone calls, which included 527 requests for information; 820 instances of psychological counseling; 86 calls on domestic, sexual, and gender violence (including in schools); 24 cases of child neglect; 14 cases involving children in begging, and 3 cases of child labor exploitation.(2)
Shelters for Victims of Human Trafficking†	Government-funded shelters for TIP victims in seven locations throughout the country, some of which provide specialized services for children. Offer accommodation as well as rehabilitation and reintegration services.(41)

† Program is funded by the Government of Moldova.

In 2015, the Ministry of Finance repeatedly refused to release funds earmarked to pay La Strada specialists the MLSPF had subcontracted to administer the Child Helpline. This led La Strada to pay these staffers' salaries for up to four months at a time while awaiting reimbursement from the Ministry of Finance.(4)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Moldova (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that labor law protections extend to children who are self-employed or working outside of contractual relationships.	2015
Enforcement	Institutionalize and publish information about training for investigators, ensuring that investigators, including police officers who conduct foot patrols, receive training on new laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Make enforcement data, including the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review, the number of cases where the penalties imposed were collected, and whether inspections are targeted, publicly available.	2015
	Increase funding for the State Labor Inspectorate to ensure that it can employ the number of inspectors needed and provide inspectors with the financial resources necessary to carry out adequate child labor inspections.	2012 – 2015
	Authorize the State Labor Inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
	Ensure that the government mechanism for filing and responding to child labor complaints functions properly.	2015
	Strengthen measures to reduce corruption in the judicial system to ensure that perpetrators of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor are convicted and sentenced according to law.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that the National Steering Committee on the Elimination of Child Labor meets to discuss and coordinate effectively issues related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in the agriculture, industry, and service sectors to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2015
	Institute targeted support programs for institutionalized children in orphanages or boarding schools, particularly children with disabilities, to reduce their exposure to commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.	2015
	Increase funding for education and monitor schools to ensure that extra educational fees are not imposed on children for the mandated term of free education through age 18.	2010 – 2015
	Institute targeted support programs that eliminate discrimination and violence against Romani children and promote equal access to education.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure sufficient support for child trafficking victims.	2015
	Ensure current child labor programs are sustainable by providing increased financial support.	2009 – 2014

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Mongolia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government hired 41 new labor inspectors and developed a risk assessment checklist to help investigators accurately identify victims of human trafficking, including child victims. Members of the national Coordinating Council to combat child labor resumed efforts to coordinate the Government's implementation of the National Action Plan on the Worst Forms of Child Labor after a year of inactivity. In addition, the Government collected data on exploitative child labor in Mongolia's capital city, Ulaanbaatar. However, children in Mongolia are engaged in child labor, including in herding, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Labor inspectors lack adequate training on laws related to child labor, and there is no referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services providers to effectively assist children identified as child laborers. The Government also lacks social programs to address child labor in certain relevant sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mongolia are engaged in child labor, including in herding. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-6) The Mongolia National Child Labor Survey 2011–2012, published in 2013, indicates that 43,545 Mongolian children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in child labor, while 10,398 children are involved in hazardous work. Nine out of ten children exploited in situations of hazardous work are boys. (2) According to the survey, children's employment is more prevalent in rural areas than in urban areas. (2, 7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mongolia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	13.8 (60,246)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	87.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	15.1

	Forced labor in construction, mining, agriculture, horse jockeying, animal husbandry,* industrial sectors,* and contortionist work,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 22, 23)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Mongolian children are generally trafficked internally for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation in saunas, bars, hotels, karaoke clubs, and massage parlors.(3-6, 22) Some Mongolian children also work as jockeys in horse races. A 2015 rapid assessment found that child jockeys participating in spring races, the average age of whom is between 6 and 16 years old, face a number of health and safety hazards, including exposure to extremely cold temperatures and risk of brain and bone injuries.(20) Participation in pre-training and spring racing may also negatively impact a child’s school attendance.(20)

During the reporting period, government agencies collected data on exploitative child labor in Mongolia’s capital city. An unpublished survey conducted by the Ministry of Labor in 6 of Ulaanbaatar’s 9 districts identified 13 to 41 children engaged in child labor in major markets and dumpsites.(10) The Metropolitan Office of Child and Family Development and the Ulaanbaatar Labor and Social Welfare Departments surveyed 210 child laborers in Ulaanbaatar and found that children work in a variety of occupations, including as petty traders, car washers, bag handlers at markets, scavengers in dumpsites, assistants in construction material shops, and jockeys.(10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mongolia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 115, 123, and 124 of the Criminal Code; Combating Pornography and Prostitution Act (28, 30)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 114 and 192 of the Criminal Code (28)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Law on Civil Military Duties and the Legal Status of Military Personnel (31, 32)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Law on Civil Military Duties and the Legal Status of Military Personnel (31, 32)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 46 of the Law on Education (33, 34)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Constitution of Mongolia; Article 5 of the Law on Education (35, 36)

In July 2015, the Ministry of Labor submitted a draft revised Law on Labor to parliament for discussion and review by the Standing Committee on Social Policy, Education, Culture, and Science. The draft includes additional provisions on light work and on the prohibition of the worst forms of child labor.(10, 37, 38) In February 2016, just after the close of the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor issued an order listing types of hazardous work prohibited to children, including working as a horse jockey in winter and spring races.(39, 40)

In December 2015, the Mongolian parliament approved a revised Criminal Code that criminalizes the worst forms of child labor, including the use of children for begging and to commit crimes, the sale of children, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(38) However, this law did not go into effect during the reporting period.(10) Therefore, during the reporting period, laws related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children were not sufficient as they do not clearly criminalize the use or offering of children in the production of pornography, or the procuring of children ages 16 and 17 for the production of pornography or pornographic performances.(28, 41)

Mongolia's Law on Labor only provides minimum age protections to children working under a labor contract, leaving children working outside of a labor contract unprotected.(24, 42) In addition, laws related to human trafficking are not sufficient as there are no provisions that specifically, criminally prohibit the trafficking of children for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
General Agency for Specialized Inspection (GASI)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor. Conduct inspections at registered businesses.(3)
National Police Agency (NPA)	Maintain primary responsibility for investigating human trafficking cases. Coordinate with the Organized Crime Department—successor to the Criminal Police Department and the State Investigation Agency.(22) Report to the Ministry of Justice (MOJ).(21)
Organized Crime Department	Receive referrals and open a formal criminal investigation of human trafficking and sexual exploitation cases. Work with the Prosecutor's Office to decide whether to take a case to court and initiate any subsequent prosecution.(3, 43) Replaced the State Investigation Agency and the Criminal Police Department, which were merged into one office in January 2014.(21)
Metropolitan Police Department	Operate under the NPA and oversee the district police divisions of Ulaanbaatar's nine districts.(44) Enforce labor laws and identify children in hazardous labor.(3)

Organization/Agency	Role
Division for the Prevention of Domestic Violence and Crimes Against Children	Operate under the Metropolitan Police Department and protect unattended children on the streets. Identify and refer children to their parents or to Child Care and Protection Centers.(21)
General Authority for Citizenship and Migration	Register Mongolian citizens who enter and exit the country. Track children who leave Mongolia and do not return, as well as pregnant Mongolian women who leave Mongolia to give birth and return without their child.(22) Follow up with law enforcement as necessary.(22) Agency created as a result of a merger between certain units of the General Authority for Border Protection and the former Immigration Agency.(22)
Marshal (Takhar) Service	Provide protection to victims and witnesses throughout the judicial process. Work toward establishing shelters throughout the country.(21, 45)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Mongolia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

In 2015, the General Agency for Specialized Inspection (GASI) hired an additional 41 labor inspectors.(10) New inspectors participated in an initial training course that includes a component on child labor.(39) Despite this increase in labor inspectorate personnel, NGOs and government officials still reported that the number of inspectors and the state funding provided for GASI are inadequate, given the scope of the child labor problem, the growing number of businesses in the country, and GASI's broad responsibilities in the areas of labor monitoring and health and safety regulation.(3, 10, 21)

Research found that at national-level horse races, there continued to be good compliance with safety regulations for child jockeys; however, poor regulation over community-level races in rural areas continued to be an issue.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mongolia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (45)	Yes (47)

In 2015, the Organized Crime Department employed two agents and four investigators responsible for investigating a range of crimes, including trafficking in persons cases.⁽⁴⁷⁾ Research indicated that this number was inadequate to address the scope of the problem.^(3, 39, 48) During the year, several entities provided training to law enforcement officials on combating human trafficking. The Gender Equality Center (GEC), a local NGO, trained 370 judges, prosecutors, and investigators on human trafficking concepts and national legislation, while the Public Safety Division of the National Police Agency ensured that deputy chiefs and officers responsible for community patrolling in every province received anti-human trafficking training.^(10, 47) In addition, the Ministry of Justice provided $4,836 to the National Law Enforcement University and the GEC to train 252 police officers and social workers in five provinces. However, despite these capacity-building efforts, police officers reported that there is a general lack of knowledge and training on how to apply criminal trafficking laws to cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children. As a result, many cases that could have been prosecuted under the trafficking article of the Criminal Code were instead prosecuted under related articles of the Criminal Code that carry lighter penalties.^(3, 41, 47) In one instance, research found that a case originally prosecuted in 2014 and involving four child victims was reclassified in 2015 as a human trafficking crime under Article 113. As a result, three perpetrators were convicted and sentenced to up to 10 years in prison.⁽⁴⁷⁾

During the reporting period, the Organized Crime Department collaborated with a local NGO to develop a new 11-question risk assessment checklist designed to help investigators accurately identify human trafficking victims. Investigators refer victims who meet more than five of the criteria to short- or long-term care facilities.⁽⁴⁷⁾ In 2015, the GEC provided assistance to 10 suspected child victims of human trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation, most of whom were referred to the GEC by law enforcement officials.⁽³⁹⁾

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordinating Council to Implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (Coordinating Council)	Guide government efforts on child labor and implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor (MOL), with the National Authority for Children (NAC) as the lead implementing agency. ⁽²¹⁾ Comprised of 21 organizations, including the ministries of Population Development and Social Protection, Justice, Education, and Agriculture; General Agency for Specialized Inspection; the Confederation of Mongolian Trade Unions; the ILO; and NGOs. ^(3, 49) In May 2015, the Coordinating Council and other key stakeholders attended a tripartite consultation workshop organized by the MOL and the NAC to discuss implementation of the National Action Plan on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. ⁽⁵⁰⁾
Anti-Trafficking Sub-Council (Sub-Council)	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons and monitor implementation of anti-human trafficking legislation. Function as a part of the Council on Crime Prevention under the Ministry of Justice (MOJ). ^(3, 22) Currently has 15 members representing 12 different organizations, including two NGOs. Government members include the Border Protection Agency; the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; the Ministry of Health; the MOJ; the MOL; the Ministry of Population, Development, and Social Welfare; the General Authority for Citizenship and Migration; the NAC; and the National Police Agency. ⁽²²⁾ In 2015, the Ministry of Justice allocated approximately $23,078 for human trafficking prevention and awareness-raising activities. ⁽³⁹⁾

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Mongolia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Program for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2011–2016) and National Action Plan (2014–2016)	Identifies specific actions to combat child labor through 2016 through a National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Aims to improve legal protection for children and increase children's access to health care and education.(15) In 2015, the Government allocated $85,000 for implementation. Funding was distributed to labor agencies and local labor departments for public awareness-raising campaigns and child labor monitoring activities.(10)
State Policy on Herders	Describes the conditions and criteria for engaging children in herding, to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in that sector.(51) Activities include projects to improve housing and access to information for herders and to ensure that herder children receive an education. Each year, the Government sets aside 1 percent of its budget for implementation of the policy.(39)
National Development Strategy*	Calls for improvements in education, health, social welfare, and labor policies through 2020. Priorities include the education, safety, and health of vulnerable children.(52)
Child Protection Strategy (2011–2016)	Aims to provide child welfare programs at the local level in collaboration with NGOs and local government offices. Includes a component related to child labor prevention and elimination.(3, 53)
Strategy for Strengthening Child Protection (2010–2015)	Aimed to prevent and eliminate child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking. Sought to strengthen relevant legislation to protect children's rights, including the Law on Labor, and to build the capacity of child protection workers.(54)
Master Plan to Develop Education in Mongolia (2006–2015)*	Established a long-term strategic framework for promoting development in education. Focused on making education more accessible and inclusive, especially for rural students and socially vulnerable groups.(55)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

During the reporting period, relevant stakeholders reviewed the draft National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons and submitted it to the cabinet, where it currently awaits approval.(39)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Mongolia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(56) In 2015, finalized two reports related to child labor: a rapid assessment on child labor in the construction sector and a study on the rights of child horse jockeys in spring horse racing.(11, 20, 50) In addition, provided technical guidance to government agencies involved in the ongoing criminal law reform process to promote inclusion of provisions on forced labor and the worst forms of child labor.(57)
Shelters for Human Trafficking Victims	Government-funded, Gender Equality Center-run shelters located in Ulaanbaatar and Zamyn Uud that provide shelter and services to trafficking in persons victims, including child victims. Services include psychological counseling, medical care, legal assistance, vocational training, and reintegration assistance.(47) In 2015, assisted 10 suspected child victims of commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking.(10)
Children's Money Program†	General Agency for Social Welfare and Service, General Agency for State Registration, and Human Development Fund program that distributes approximately $12 per month to children under age 18 from families in need.(10) Partial continuation of a former program that distributed national profits from mineral resources to funding for health insurance, pensions, and education tuition.(3, 58-60)
School Lunch Program†	Government program that subsidizes meals to encourage low-income children to attend school, particularly at the secondary level.(3)
Government Sub-Program on the Development of Small-Scale Mining (2008–2015)†	Minister for Agriculture and Industry, Minister for Energy, and local governor-implemented program that aimed to eliminate child labor in the mining sector, with provisions for providing children with informal or distance education.(16, 61)

† Program is funded by the Government of Mongolia.

As part of the 2015 World Day Against Child Labor activities, relevant government agencies collaborated with UNICEF to produce a video titled “NO to child labor, YES to quality education.” The video was used to train teachers, school social workers, members of the Board of Child Engagement, and students in 650 schools.(62)

During the previous reporting period, two programs that formerly provided shelter and social services to children working on the street were discontinued. The Address Identification Center was converted to a shelter for victims of domestic violence, and the Child Development and Protection Center became an orphanage.(21) This reduction in care centers leaves street children vulnerable to involvement in child labor.(21) Although the Government is implementing a program to address child labor in mining, research found no evidence that the Government carried out programs specifically designed to assist children working in agriculture and those working on the street.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mongolia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws related to labor cover all children, including those working without employment contracts.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that laws clearly and comprehensively prohibit the use, procurement, and offering of all children under age 18 for the production of pornography and pornographic performances.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit child trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.	2015
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors and investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor, including its worst forms, in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2015
	Institutionalize child labor training for labor inspectors, including by providing refresher courses for current inspectors.	2015
	Enforce safety standards for child jockeys, particularly at the community level.	2013 – 2015
	Strengthen the inspection system by permitting the General Agency for Specialized Inspections to conduct unannounced inspections.	2013 – 2015
	Establish a mechanism to receive child labor complaints.	2015
	Establish a referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services providers to ensure that children identified in situations of child labor receive appropriate support.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that violations of child labor laws are investigated and charged according to appropriate law articles and that offenders are promptly prosecuted.	2011 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of labor inspections conducted, the number of child labor violations found, and the number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed and collected.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor prevention and elimination strategies into the National Development Strategy and the Master Plan to Develop Education in Mongolia.	2011 – 2015
Social Programs	Restore programs that provide support services and shelter to children found working on the streets.	2014 – 2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in relevant sectors, including in herding.	2012 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Montenegro

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Montenegro made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare adopted the Code of Rules, which prescribes minimum workplace protections for employers and employees, specifically emphasizing protections for underage workers. The Police Directorate formed a three-member trafficking in persons team that focuses on all forms of trafficking in persons, including child labor. The National Trafficking in Persons Office provided technical assistance to the Ministries of Health and Education to create guidance on trafficking in persons and adopted an action plan to combat human trafficking in 2016. Additionally, the Government of Montenegro signed a memorandum of understanding with the ILO to conduct a study of the child labor situation. However, children in Montenegro are engaged in child labor, including in begging, and in the worst forms of child labor, including being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Government has no social programs to address child labor in street work, forced begging, or commercial sexual exploitation of children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Montenegro are engaged in child labor, including in begging.(1-5) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Montenegro.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	12.9 (12,867)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	87.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	14.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		92.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2005.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work, including collecting scrap metal,* vending small goods and food items,* washing car windows,* and begging (1-3, 5, 11-13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking* (2, 4, 14)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-5, 13)
	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking* (4)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child begging remains the predominant child labor issue in Montenegro.(1-3, 5, 11) Organized forced begging involving children remains a problem, especially among children from the Roma community.(1-4, 13)

Montenegro is a source, destination, and transit country for children trafficked for forced labor, including forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation. Children are trafficked internally and transnationally from and to other Balkan countries and Western Europe.(4, 13, 15) Some Romani girls from Montenegro are sold into servile marriages in both Montenegro and Kosovo, where they are also forced into domestic servitude.(4) Children from the Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian populations are at a higher risk of human trafficking due to lower rates of birth registration and school attendance, and higher rates of participation in street work.(6, 11-16) Both boys and girls from these communities are vulnerable to forced begging, while trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation is more common among girls.(4, 15)

Although the Government adopted the Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and Other Minorities in 2012, which includes the goal of increasing birth registration among minorities, many Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian children continue to lack birth registration. In addition to problems accessing basic education, the lack of birth registration also makes accessing social services and health care challenging for minority groups.(2, 11, 12, 17-19) The higher rate of unregistered children in these communities appears to be related to insufficient awareness of the importance of civil registration, a lack of identity documents among the adults, and the costs associated with the registration process.(2)

Although the number of children with disabilities studying in mainstream schools has dramatically increased over the past five years, children with disabilities continue to experience difficulty accessing education, especially in rural areas. A source reported that these children also experience difficulty accessing social services made available by the Government, including services provided to victims of human trafficking.(20, 21)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Montenegro has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

During the reporting period, the Government began implementing amendments to the Foreigners Act, such as to ensure that children who are victims of human trafficking or domestic violence or are unaccompanied receive a temporary residence permit, depending on the status of one or both of a child's parents. The Foreigners Act can also be used by human trafficking victims to acquire a temporary residence permit in the country, which is valid for between 3 months to 1 year, but can be extended further, as necessary.(20)

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare adopted the Code of Rules for Occupational Safety, which introduced prohibitions of specific hazardous activities for children, and prescribes minimum workplace protections for all employers and employees.(3) The Code of Rules prohibits the employment of children in workplaces that would expose them to physical biological or chemical hazards, as well as an additional list of activities such as handling explosives, working with poisonous animals, and jobs that would expose them to high voltage electricity.(29)

Despite these efforts, gaps in the legal framework still exist. Although the Labor Law prohibits children under age 18 from performing overtime and night work, Article 106 of the Labor Law allows employees between ages 15 and 18 to work at night in circumstances in which it is necessary to continue work interrupted by natural disasters or to mitigate damage to raw or other materials.(22, 30) In addition, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover street work, an area in which there is evidence of children engaged in carrying heavy loads by collecting scrap metal and by vending goods and food items.(3, 22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Inspectorate	Monitor the enforcement of labor law, which also contains child labor regulations, and monitor working conditions in workplaces throughout the country.(3) Lead efforts, as an independent agency, in enforcing labor laws, including those that protect working children.(26, 31, 32)
Supreme State Prosecutor	Investigate and enforce criminal laws on forced labor and human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.(7, 31) Collect data on court rulings and crime convictions and submit them to the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (TIP Office).(7)
Police Directorate within the Ministry of Interior	Enforce laws against sex trafficking and forced labor. Coordinate law enforcement actions on a national level.(7) Be responsible for proactive identification of the victims of human trafficking. Collect data on the number of police investigations and submit them to the TIP Office.(7)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce the Criminal Code by prosecuting crimes against children, including human trafficking, child begging, and child abuse.(32)
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MLSW)	Protect children and families by providing social, child, and family protection in its Social Welfare Centers. Identify potential victims of human trafficking.(7)
Ombudsman's Deputy for the Rights of the Child	Monitor the situation of children in the country, using strategies such as visiting schools and institutions, holding focus groups, and creating e-mails and social blogs for children of various ages.(31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Montenegro took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Labor Inspectorate officials have stated that the number of inspectors is inadequate to conduct inspections across the entire country. However, the funding and resources allocated for inspections were reportedly sufficient during the reporting period.(3, 31) Although the Labor Law does not cover issues related to trafficking in persons, labor inspectors received training during the reporting period on how to identify human trafficking for labor exploitation, which included discussions about child labor. In July and September 2015, the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (TIP Office) and the State Agency for Social and Child Protection organized training seminars for participants from government institutions, including the Centers for Social Welfare and the Prosecutor’s Office, on strategies to address child trafficking, child begging, and forced child marriages. Some of the attendees then trained their colleagues on the strategies they had learned.(3, 20) Separately, the State Human Resources Agency and the TIP Office collaborated to host a seminar on strategies related to the early identification of victims of trafficking in persons, which five labor inspectors and two officials from the Center for Support of Children and Families attended.(3, 20)

The Labor Inspectorate proactively plans labor inspections on annual and monthly bases, and also conducts complaint-based inspections.(3, 34) The inspectorate increases its inspections of specific sectors, such as trade and catering industries, during the summer tourist season. As part of their regular labor inspections in 2015, inspectors found 25 cases of informal labor in the trade sector by children on the Montenegrin coast.(3) In all 25 cases, the inspectorate found that the employer had not provided children with employment contracts.(3)

The Government does not collect or publish information on the number of child labor law violations; however, the Government does maintain a database on children involved in begging.(31, 33)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Montenegro took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, criminal law enforcement personnel, members of the judiciary, and health and social workers received training on issues related to trafficking in persons, including best practices on early identification of victims and the legal aspects of combating human trafficking. For example, the TIP Office, partnering with the Ministry of the Interior and the OSCE Mission to Montenegro, provided 18 training sessions to 239 border police officers across the country as part of a 2-year border police training plan that began in 2014.(3, 20) Additionally, the Police Directorate established a three-member trafficking in persons team to focus on all forms of trafficking in persons, including child labor. The TIP Office also collaborated with the UNODC, with funding from USDOS, to host a four-day seminar on best practices on how to protect victims of trafficking in persons during criminal trials. Eight representatives of the Supreme State Prosecutor's office, eight representatives from the judiciary, one official from the Police Directorate, and one NGO representative attended the seminar.(3, 20) Despite these efforts, victim identification remained an area requiring improvement in order for the Government to combat human trafficking effectively.

Criminal law enforcement personnel conducted 96 investigations related to begging, which led to 407 people being apprehended; of these, 122 were children. During these investigations, the authorities removed beggars from the streets and issued citations to them.(3) The police also initiated four new trafficking in persons cases, in which 16 individuals, some of them minors, were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Prosecutors filed criminal charges against six individuals in relation to those four cases for brokering in prostitution, including one person charged with brokering in prostitution involving minors.(20)

Some of the children police remove from begging on the street and whose parents cannot be located immediately are placed in the public institution for social and child care named Ljubovic. This institution provides these children with housing, protection, educational services, and therapeutic treatment.(3) Children can stay in this institution for up to 30 days. However, children typically stay in a public institution for social and child care for a day or less, while the police search for their parents in order to return them to their families.(3) In 2015, police sent two children to Ljubovic; they were later released to their families.(3) When parents are not available, children are referred to local Social Welfare Centers upon completing a temporary stay in Ljubovic.(35) Under Article 37 of the Law on Protection from Family Violence, a public institution for social and child care can also charge the parents with neglect of their parental obligations; however, no such charges were made during the reporting period.(3, 36)

The Ombudsman for Human Rights has criticized the Police and Social Welfare Centers for insufficiently and inconsistently tracking information on children caught begging. The Ombudsman also noted that many child beggars were treated as delinquents rather than victims, that Social Welfare Centers only provided services to a small minority of child beggars who are registered citizens of Montenegro, and that there is a systemic lack of specialized services for the reintegration of children into society.(31, 37)

During the reporting period, the Government provided both verified and potential human trafficking victims with a number of free services, including protection, medical and psychological assistance, and legal advice, regardless of whether victims were Montenegrin citizens. Individuals who received these services met minimum identification requirements.(20) The Government used the priority principle, based on a variety of factors, such as the victim's vulnerability, age, gender, and exposure to physical and sexual abuse, to prioritize the provision of these services. However, sources reported that although free legal services were provided to potential victims, the lawyers assigned to their cases often had inadequate training in representing victims of human trafficking.(20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator (TIP Office)	Coordinate efforts against trafficking in persons among relevant government institutions and international organizations and ensure their cooperation.(7, 20) Present results of the efforts against human trafficking through participation in domestic and international events. Harmonize domestic legislation with international standards.(7) Oversee projects and initiatives for implementation of the main objectives from the National Strategy and Action Plans. Collect and maintain data on police investigations, court rulings, and verdicts that relate to human trafficking and victims of trafficking.(7) Fund hotline and shelters for victims of human trafficking.(20) In 2015, the TIP Office conducted training on identifying victims of trafficking in persons and the legal aspects of combating this issue for law enforcement and members of the judiciary, as well as health and social workers. Additionally, this office provided technical assistance to the Ministries of Health and Education to create guidance on trafficking in persons.(20) The Government appropriated approximately $160,000 from the state budget to fund the TIP Office, which marks a decrease of less than 1 percent as compared to its budget in 2014. After accounting for operational expenses, the office used 50 percent of its total budget for activities to combat trafficking in persons, such as developing and implementing training and educational modules, operating the shelter for human trafficking victims, and setting up a hotline.(20)
Trafficking in Persons Task Force	Operate under the TIP Office. Monitor and promote activities related to combating human trafficking, and assess and approve semiannual reports on the progress of objectives established in the trafficking in persons action plans.(7, 20) Includes the representatives from the Ministries of Interior, Justice, Foreign Affairs and European Integration, Minority and Human Rights, Health, Labor and Social Welfare, and Culture; Police Directorate; Supreme Court; Supreme State Prosecutors; and Inspectorate Authority, as well as NGOs and international organizations.(20) Schedules meetings twice a year on a regular interval and when a potential victim of human trafficking is identified. In 2015, this task force met six times.(20)
Council for the Rights of the Child	Implement and monitor the National Plan for Children and the Government's commitments pursuant to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, initiate the adoption of legislation to promote and protect the rights of children, and improve cooperation with NGOs to achieve these goals. Chaired by the Minister of Labor and Social Welfare.(8, 38) The council met several times in 2015, and discussed the issue of child begging during at least one session.(33)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Montenegro has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action for Children (2013–2017)	Defines and protects children's rights in the areas of social services, child protection, health services, and education.(31) Outlines a strategy to fulfill obligations arising from ratification of the CRC. Includes goals such as improving prevention of hazardous and exploitative child labor and child trafficking, protecting children from commercial sexual exploitation, increasing birth registration, ensuring education access for all children, and improving social services for street children.(38)
Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and Other Minorities (2012–2016)	Addresses such issues as the legal framework, education, employment, child protection, housing, and participation in public life for Roma and other minorities. Implemented by the Ministry for Minority and Human Rights.(31, 32) Includes the goals of increasing birth registration among minority communities through an information and awareness campaign and eliminating begging among Roma and Egyptian children.(19) Achievements attributable to the Strategy include a 50 percent increase in Roma children in primary and secondary schools, introduction of Romani language classes and the provision of assistance to Roma IDPs in need of identity documents.(33)
UNICEF Country Program (2012–2016)	Addresses disparities in access to quality social services for children and families, harmonizes the country's legal framework with EU and UN standards, implements and monitors policies relevant to child-focused governance and social inclusion, and applies the principles and standards of the CRC and facilitates independent monitoring.(18, 39)

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Combating Human Trafficking (2012–2018)	Outlines Montenegro's objectives and goals for combating human trafficking and defines measurements for improvement. Goals include raising public awareness of human trafficking, strengthening the Government's capacity for victim identification and service provision, improving interagency coordination, and raising the efficiency of prosecutions.(20, 40) This strategy and its yearly Action Plan for implementation are both evaluated in semiannual reports, which are prepared through the collaboration of government agencies and civil society, and then adopted by the Government. In September 2015, the Government adopted the first semiannual report for the period of January 1–June 31, 2015.(20) Additionally, the TIP Office drafted an Action Plan for 2016 during the reporting period.(20)
Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection (2013–2017)*	Builds an integrated social and child protection system, including monthly social assistance, health care, and a child allowance that is conditional on school attendance.(30, 41)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The strategy coordinator for the Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and Other Minorities noted that the policy lacked sufficient funding in 2015.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Montenegro funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Social Welfare and Child Care System Reform: Enhancing Social Inclusion (2013–2017)†	$4.5 million, 4-year project sponsored by the Ministry of Education (MOE) and MLSW. Implemented by the Government, in cooperation with the UNDP and UNICEF, to strengthen protection for children under the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection. Composed of three phases: Inclusive Education, which has been completed, Reform of Social Protection, and Child Care System Reform.(30, 33)
Social Card – Social Welfare Information System Program†	Project to build a shared social welfare information system to facilitate information exchange among social services providers. Project provides a unique Social Card to each beneficiary family to make eligibility information for each family easily available to all relevant institutions.(8, 26, 33) Through these reforms to the social and child protection system, aims to develop adequate social services at the local level. Implementation began in January 2015, when social centers started collecting information into consolidated databases.(3)
Institute for Social and Child Protection	Administer the issuance of licenses for social workers and other competent personnel; conduct research, including through surveys, about approaches to social and child protection; provide counseling and technical assistance; and oversee the provision of child protection services.(8, 26)
One of Five†	The Council of Europe campaign to reduce and stop sexual violence against children, including commercial sexual exploitation.(42, 43) Led to the development of the Action Plan against the Sexual Abuse of Children.(32)
Shelter for Human Trafficking Victims†	During the reporting period, the TIP Office allocated $27,500 to cover operational costs of the shelter, including the salaries of shelter employees, and some basic food, clothing, and medical assistance for victims, which marks a 14 percent decrease in funding as compared to 2014.(20, 32) The NGO Montenegrin Women's Lobby and the Government jointly run this shelter, which can provide accommodations for children who are separated from adults. In 2015, this shelter housed four female children who were victims of human trafficking.(20)
Social Welfare Centers†	Government-supported centers that provide social, child, and family protection, including to victims of child trafficking.(20, 32, 44)
Group Children Center	UNICEF- and EU-supported program focused on creating a framework for the foster care system as an alternative to placement in government institutions. The MLSW collaborated with UNICEF to pilot this Group Children Center in the northern region of the country.(31)
Training for Public Workers and Public Awareness Campaigns on Trafficking in Persons Issues†	In 2015, the Government cosponsored training to educate public workers and implemented campaigns to raise the public's awareness about trafficking in persons issues.(20) Public awareness campaigns that took place in 2015 include the national STOP TIP campaign, which featured a video that public and commercial television stations broadcasted and efforts to promote the Government's hotline for potential victims of human trafficking, as well as a campaign that ran in July and August. The Government also used posters at all border crossings to advertise the number of the hotline to potential trafficking in persons victims.(20) The Ombudsman for Human Rights not only conducted a public awareness campaign regarding the prevention of child begging, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and Internet-based child abuse, it also hosted workshops with children to educate them about these issues.(20)

Program	Description
MOE Guidelines on Trafficking in Persons	In 2015, the MOE partnered with the TIP Office to publish guidelines for education providers about how to teach children about the issue of trafficking in persons.(20)
Hotline for Victims of Human Trafficking†	Funded by the TIP Office, this hotline provides advice, connects actual and potential victims with service providers, and educates the public on information about human trafficking. Also assists victims with their reintegration into society by providing vocational training.(7, 20) In 2015, the hotline received 540 calls, of which the TIP Office identified 45 as calls from potential victims of human trafficking.(33)

† Program is funded by the Government of Montenegro.

Although the Government of Montenegro has implemented programs for the general protection of children and for child trafficking victims, research found no evidence of programs to specifically and systematically address child labor in street work and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

During the reporting period, the Government of Montenegro signed a memorandum of understanding with the ILO to conduct a study of the child labor situation.(3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Montenegro (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the types of work prohibited for children are comprehensive, and include night work and carrying heavy loads.	2012 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information about the Labor Inspectorate's funding and the training system for labor and criminal law enforcement personnel publicly available.	2015
	Ensure that all children removed from street work are treated as victims and are provided with specialized social services to prevent reentry into begging or street work, regardless of citizenship or birth registration.	2012 – 2015
	Build enforcement capacity to effectively identify child trafficking victims.	2015
	Provide comprehensive training on effectively representing potential trafficking in persons victims to lawyers assigned to these cases through the free legal services program.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into national policies, including the Strategy for the Development of Social and Child Protection.	2013 – 2015
	Fully fund and implement the National Strategy for the Improvement of the Position of Roma and Other Minorities in Montenegro.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Build the capacity of schools and other government service providers to accommodate and provide services to children with disabilities.	2015
	Strengthen efforts to inform all citizens and those seeking to become citizens, particularly Roma, about how to register and receive access to education, health care, and other social services.	2012 – 2015
	Institute programs to specifically and systematically address child labor in street work and the worst forms of child labor in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2013 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Morocco made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Moroccans Living Abroad and Migration Affairs drafted an anti-trafficking in persons law that is intended to be consistent with the Palermo Protocol, and the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs drafted a domestic worker law forbidding employment of domestic workers under the age of 16 and strictly limiting the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 for domestic work. The Government formally adopted the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children, which incorporates the National Plan of Action for Children from 2006 to 2015. However, children in Morocco are engaged in child labor, including in agricultural activities, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The number of labor inspectors is insufficient to effectively enforce child labor laws. Although the Government of Morocco has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Morocco are engaged in child labor, including in agricultural activities.(1-6) Children in Morocco are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(7-13) National statistics from the Government's High Planning Commission show a continued drop in the number of children ages 7 to 15 who are working, from 517,000 in 1999 to 59,157 in 2015.(14) Child labor occurs in urban areas, although it is primarily a rural phenomenon and is concentrated in areas where education levels remain low, especially in the following four regions: Chaouia-Ouardigha, Doukkala-Abda, El Gharb-Chrarda-Beni Hssen, and Marrakech-Tensift-El Haouz.(5, 14, 15) A 2014 study found that child labor is prevalent on small farms throughout Morocco.(1, 6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Morocco.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	4.5 (150,178)
Attending School (%)	6-14 yrs.	82.9
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	0.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5-9, 12, 23, 29, 30)
	Begging as a result of human trafficking (6, 8, 9)
	Illegal sand extraction* (31)
	Forced labor in the production of artisanal crafts* and construction* (7, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Morocco, children are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation.(10, 11, 13) This problem is most prevalent in popular tourist sites such as Tangier, which attracts visitors from European and Persian Gulf countries.(8, 11, 13) Some rural Moroccan girls as young as age 6, as well as girls from Côte d’Ivoire and Senegal, are recruited for domestic work in private urban homes. These girls then become victims of forced labor and are subjected to physical and verbal abuse, excessive working hours of 100 or more per week, without rest or days off; and no access to educational opportunities.(7, 9, 12, 13, 23) Comprehensive data on the number of children in domestic work is unavailable. However, members of civil society expressed concern that there may be a substantial number of children working in this sector.(13)

Despite strong enrollment rates among children during their early years in primary school, school dropout rates remain a problem. A source indicates that every year, up to 300,000 children drop out before finishing their 9 years of compulsory education.(5, 32, 33) Inadequate transportation and prohibitive costs associated with attending school create barriers for children to access education.(1, 5, 9) Lack of security and inclusiveness in schools increase vulnerability to child labor.(5, 9, 33, 34) Only one-third of children with disabilities attend schools.(7, 9, 35) Those who do attend school face rejection and stigmatization, leading some to drop out. These factors, and a lack of adequate support services, make children with disabilities more vulnerable to child labor.(9)

Some migrant children, particularly unaccompanied children from sub-Saharan Africa, as well as Amazigh and Sahrawi children face barriers to accessing education, such as language of instruction, and the lack of necessary documentation, including birth registration and residency.(7, 20, 36-38) The Government implemented a regularization campaign to improve access to education.(38)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Morocco has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 143 of the Labor Code (39)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 147 of the Labor Code (39)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Hazardous Child Labor List, Decree No. 2-10-183 (40)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 467 of the Labor Code (39)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 503 of the Penal Code (41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Royal Decree of 9 June 1996 (42)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 1 of Law No. 04-00 (43)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Law No. 04-00 (43)

* No conscription (42)

In 2015, the Ministry of Justice and Liberties conducted a legal review of the Penal Code to draft a coherent framework in line with all of the Government's international agreements. Additionally, the Ministry of Moroccans Living Abroad and Migration Affairs drafted an anti-trafficking in persons law that is intended to be consistent with the Palermo Protocol and other international agreements.(8, 15, 38)

Based on Article 4 of the Labor Code, the minimum age protections do not apply to children who are self-employed, those who work in the traditional artisan or handicraft sectors for businesses with fewer than five employees, or those who work in private farms and residences, leaving children vulnerable to exploitation.(7, 8, 13, 39, 44)

In 2015, the Government, led by the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs drafted a bill that would provide protections for child domestic workers. If passed into law, it would set the minimum age at 16 for domestic work and at 18 for hazardous domestic work; permit labor inspectors to mediate disputes between employers and domestic workers; and authorize the Government to prosecute intermediaries, known as samsaras, who traffic children for labor exploitation.(6, 8, 15)

Government officials, local stakeholders and the CEACR report that the penalties against companies that employ children in hazardous work, set forth in the Labor Code, are inadequate to act as an effective deterrent.(15, 44)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Morocco

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs (MOESA) Child Labor Task Force	Enforce child labor laws and oversee programs on child labor. Employ labor inspectors in 53 sectors across Morocco; one inspector in each sector dedicated to child labor.(5, 8, 45) Establish satellite offices in nine regional centers throughout the country to provide occupational health and safety services, administer social security, and organize labor inspections and employment services.(5)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce prohibitions on prostitution and other exploitative crimes involving minors as established in the Penal Code.(8, 46)
Ministry of Justice and Liberties	Prosecute criminal offenses against children, such as commercial sexual exploitation and child trafficking, and violations of labor laws.(8, 47) The Ministry's Child Labor Units process cases involving women and children within the court system.(2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Morocco took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

* The Government does not make this information publicly available.

† Data are from January 1 to March 31, 2014.

‡ Data are from January 1 2015 to June 30, 2015.

In 2015, labor inspectors found 292 child labor violations, 52 of which involved children under age 15. They removed 26 children under age 15 from work, and 158 children between ages 15 and 17 from hazardous work.(6, 8, 15) The sectors most frequently inspected included trade, agriculture, and metal and wood work.(15) Enforcement of child labor laws remains weak in Morocco due to an insufficient number of labor inspectors and a lack of financial resources.(8, 15, 48) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Morocco should employ roughly 818 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(15, 49-51) The official procedures involved with processing child labor violations require the participation of several agencies per case, which places considerable administrative burdens on labor inspectors.(2)

Morocco has a toll-free hotline for child victims of violence, but research did not find the number of calls related to child labor.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Morocco took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

In 2015, the Government, with assistance from UNHCR, UNODC, IOM, UN Women, and the Council of Europe, offered training sessions on a regular basis to judges, police officers, gendarmes, and civil society stakeholders on human smuggling and trafficking in persons. Additionally, the Government cooperated with UNODC, IOM, and the Council of Europe to establish indicators to standardize procedures for identifying victims of human trafficking. The Government intends to use these procedures in a nationally integrated system of assistance provision for victims of human trafficking.(8) The Government, NGOs, and some international organizations have established effective informal procedures to refer human trafficking victims to social services.(8, 12, 53)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MOESA, Office for the Fight Against Child Labor	Coordinate policies and efforts to combat child labor.(5, 54) Provide guidance and limited funding to NGOs working against child labor.(2)
Ministry of Solidarity, Women, Family and Social Development (MSWFSD)	Establish continuity of child protection and child labor elimination efforts. Increase children's access to education.(46, 55) Contributed to the drafting of the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children. Responsible for coordinating the implementation of this policy.(6, 8)
Inter-Ministerial Delegation for Human Rights	Establish policies that promote child protection and coordinate efforts against trafficking in persons.(5, 8) Chaired by the Head of Government, the Delegation met in 2015 to adopt the Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children.(6, 8, 15)
Ministry of Moroccans Living Abroad and Migration Affairs	Coordinate efforts to reduce migrant vulnerability to child labor. Promote migrant children's access to public education facilities, thus decreasing their vulnerability to child labor and human trafficking.(5)
National Observatory for Children's Rights	Register complaints related to child welfare and refer them to labor inspectorate units and law enforcement officials. Operate a toll-free hotline available to child victims of violence, including commercial sexual exploitation.(2) Operate 96 Child Reception Centers that provide services to child victims of violence, sexual abuse, or neglect.(15)
Ministry of National Education and Vocational Training (MONEVT)	Provide education and job training to former child workers, including former child domestic workers.(8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Morocco has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
MSWFSD's Integrated Public Policy on the Protection of Children	Promotes an interdisciplinary approach to respond to child exploitation, among other issues.(5, 6, 8) Includes the 2006–2015 National Plan of Action for Children.(15) The implementation of this policy in 2015 included coordination with Internet providers to protect children from sexual exploitation; a Ministry of Tourism communication strategy on child protection; and a mechanism to sensitize and educate tourism companies on the rights of children against all forms of exploitation, in line with the Moroccan Charter on Sex Tourism and based on the World Tourism Organization's Global Code of Ethics.(8, 15)
National Migration Strategy*	Establishes policies that promote a human rights-based approach to migration. Facilitates the integration of legal immigrants. Provides services, including expanding access to public education facilities for migrant children, thus decreasing their vulnerability to child labor and human trafficking.(2, 5, 52)
UNDAF (2012–2016)*	Promotes education, health, and socioeconomic development in an effort to alleviate poverty. Focuses on providing equal access to education for vulnerable children.(56, 57)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Morocco funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Partnerships between the Government and NGOs Working Against Child Labor†	MOESA provided financial to eight NGOs working against child labor. From January to November 2015, resulted in prevention efforts that reached 1,037 children, the removal of 1,069 children under age 15 from work and the provision of educational assistance to their families, the improvement of the work and living conditions of 1,067 children between ages 15 and 18, and the mobilization and capacity building of stakeholders in child labor prevention benefitting 9,672 persons.(6, 8, 15)
Promise Pathways: Reducing Child Labor Through Viable Paths in Education and Decent Work (2014–2017)	$5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year program that aims to reduce child labor in Morocco by increasing access to education for 5,500 children (ages 6 to 17) and by providing livelihood and other social services to 1,000 siblings, parents, and caregivers age 18 and older in the Marrakech-Tensift-El-Haouz region. Conducts policy analysis and raises awareness on the hazards of child labor.(58) Builds the capacity of relevant government and nongovernment stakeholders to better address the issue. Targets children engaged in the production of handicrafts, domestic work, and agriculture.(5, 58)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Morocco.(59)
Rural Social Service Support	Royal family-funded, Mohammed V Foundation for Solidarity program that provides funding to NGOs that improve living conditions for very low-income populations.(5)
National Vocational Programs†	MONEVT program that provides education and training to at-risk youth; specific programs address factors that contribute to reduction of child labor.(2, 5)
Tayssir Conditional Cash Transfer Program†	MONEVT program that provides direct cash transfers of between $7 and $16 a month to qualifying families whose children meet school attendance criteria. Provides transportation and student housing through a program with Entraide Nationale .(5, 46) Aims to increase school enrollment and reduce dropout rates, particularly in rural areas.(27, 46, 60, 61) The program helped 828,400 students during the 2015–2016 school year with a budget of $91.9 million, compared to $86.4 million during 2014–2015, an increase of 6 percent.(6, 15)
MONEVT Funding for School Children†	MONEVT program that funds housing and transportation for school children. During the 2015–2016 school year: provided $105 million to cover the costs of dormitories for 149,737 children, student cafeterias utilized by 1.4 million children, and student houses, known as Dar Talib/Taliba , for 149,737 children. Transportation assistance totaled $3.8 million, which covered the costs of 516 buses and 15,454 all-terrain bikes, benefiting 122,636 students.(6, 15)
Entraide Nationale †	Prevent child labor through improving school retention rates, in particular for girls in rural areas. It coordinates with MSWFSD and provides social services in MSWFSD's social protection centers Dar Talib and Dar Taliba .(38)

Program	Description
"A Million Backpacks"†	Continued government-funded $38 million project that provides kits including backpacks, textbooks, and school materials. During the 2015–2016 school year, MONEVT provided 45% of the program's total budget, or $17 million, which allowed 3,910,000 students to receive assistance.(6, 15)
Child Protection Centers†	Childhood Division of the Ministry of Youth and Sport program that provides social and educational services to minors referred by the courts. Serves victims of abuse, child laborers, and street children, among others. Aims to strengthen children's ties with their families and society.(62, 63)
Child Reception Centers†	Government program to provide Child Reception Centers staffed by nurses and social workers. As of 2015, 96 Centers were operational at major hospitals to provide medical services to victims of violence and trafficking in persons.(15)
Child Protection Units†	Government program that provides temporary shelter for street children, including former child domestic workers. Offers medical, legal, and psychological services. Based in Casablanca, Essaouira, Marrakech, Meknès, and Tangier.(23, 46, 64)
Social Welfare Program	UNDAF program that addresses education, including equal access to education, especially for vulnerable children. Also addresses health and socio-economic development of children.(2)
Taking Action Against Child Domestic Work in Africa and the Union of Mediterranean Countries (2011–2015)	$1.3 million Government of France-funded, 5-year ILO IPEC regional project to combat child domestic labor.(65)
After-School Program for a Second Chance (E2C)†	Program provides students with after-school educational assistance. Was part of the Government's nonformal education program engagement during the 2014–2015 school year and involved partnership agreements with associations that provided assistance to 29,935 student beneficiaries and 139 migrant children beneficiaries, to a school accompaniment program that provided assistance to 2,708 beneficiaries and 190 migrant children beneficiaries, and to a community mobilization program for preschool children that provided assistance to 30,174 beneficiaries. During the 2015–2016 school year, 70,000 students benefited from enrollment in E2C programs, and these programs included an education integration component for 721 migrant children.(6, 15)
Program to Improve the Safety and Services at the Government's Child Protection Centers (2011–2015)	$2 million USDOS-funded project implemented by Bluelaw to improve the safety and services of the Ministry of Youth and Sport's Child Protection Centers, by designing, and training staff on, a new set of standard operating procedures. Provide social and educational services to minors referred by the courts.(15, 38)
End Violence (2014–2015)	MSWFSD program, with support from UNICEF, that seeks to end violence against children.(6, 8, 15) Launched a national public awareness campaign on November 20, 2014, to commemorate the International Day of Children's Rights and ran until May 25, 2015. Primary objective was to increase awareness of children's rights and efforts to protect children at home; at school; at work; and online.(6, 8, 15)
Favorable Opportunities to Reinforce Self-Advancement for Today's Youth (FORSATY) (2012–2017)	$8.7 million USAID Morocco-funded, 5-year project implemented by IOM, seeks to prevent youth delinquency and reduce recidivism among at-risk youth. Implemented in close collaboration with MONEVT at the regional level and focuses on ensuring the social inclusion of marginalized youth, promoting a safer community environment, and strengthening NGOs and public youth-serving institutions.(15)

† Program is funded by the Government of Morocco.

Although the Government of Morocco has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Research could not find programs aimed at reducing child labor in domestic work and street peddling.

In 2015, NGOs that work with child laborers and at-risk children reported receiving only a small portion of their expected projected funding needs from the Government. They stressed that government support was not sufficient to carry out their activities; most were required to rely on private and international donations.(8, 15) NGOs reported that their government counterparts lack the necessary qualifications to address child labor issues effectively, especially in hospital and court units.(8, 15, 32)

Data gaps continue to exist regarding the nature and extent of child labor in Morocco. While the Government expressed its support to work with the ILO-IPEC on carrying out a national child labor survey, there have been insufficient efforts to begin implementing the survey.(2, 3, 5) Research is lacking particularly on the specific types of activities carried out by children working in farming, construction, and forestry, as well as comprehensive data on the number of child domestic workers, children subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, and children engaged in street work such as begging.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Morocco (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit child trafficking.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that laws prohibit children from being used, procured, or offered for the production and trafficking of illicit drugs.	2015
	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children who are self-employed, work for artisan businesses with less than five employees, or in private farms.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the penalties for those who employ children in hazardous work.	2012 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the funding of the labor inspectorate, the training system for inspectors, the number of inspections conducted at worksite and by desk review, and whether a reciprocal referral mechanism exists between labor authorities and social services.	2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor, and provide them with sufficient resources in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2012 – 2015
	Streamline child labor enforcement procedures among government agencies.	2013 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the training system for criminal law enforcement investigators, the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions for violations of criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2015
Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Migration Strategy and UNDAF policies.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Conduct a comprehensive study of children's work activities, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, street work, farming, construction, and forestry, to determine whether children are engaged in or at risk of being involved in child labor, and the number child laborers.	2013 – 2015
	Take measures to ensure children's safety in schools and remove barriers to education.	2013 – 2015
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2014 – 2015
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor in domestic work and street peddling.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure adequate funding for NGOs that carry out programs to combat child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that Government staff who carry out work related to child labor, especially those in hospital and court units, are qualified.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. As a result, statistics on children’s work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2015, Mozambique made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched the National Reference Group for the Protection of Children and Combating Trafficking in Persons and sustained provincial-level reference groups throughout the country. The Government also launched the Five Year Government Plan to address and prevent violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Mozambique are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. The law does not prohibit hazardous occupations or activities for children, and education is only compulsory until age 13, leaving children ages 13 and 14 vulnerable to child labor. Law enforcement agencies lack the capacity to adequately address the scope of child labor in the country, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mozambique are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mozambique.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.5 (1,526,560)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	69.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	22.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		47.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Clusters Survey 3, 2008.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton,* sesame,* tea,* cashews,* sugarcane,* and tobacco (1, 4-9, 12-17)
	Fishing, including preparing nets* (1, 5, 13)
	Forestry,* activities unknown (1)
	Cattle herding* (5)
Industry	Mining, including gold* and gemstones* (5, 8, 17-20)
	Construction,* including crushing stone* and making bricks* (5)
Services	Domestic work (4, 5, 7, 9, 12, 13, 15, 19, 21, 22)
	Street work, including car washing,* street vending, garbage scavenging,* collecting scrap metal,* and begging* (1, 4-8, 17, 22-27)
	Selling alcoholic beverages in markets* (7, 26)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4, 5, 8, 17, 28-35)
	Forced labor in agriculture* and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4-6, 20, 31, 34)
	Use in illicit activities, including stealing and assisting poachers in the illegal poaching industry* (5, 7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Mozambique

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Girls from Malawi, Swaziland, and Zimbabwe voluntarily migrate to Mozambique, where they subsequently become victims of commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work, particularly in Manica province.(4, 31, 32, 34) Mozambican children, lured from rural areas with promises of work and education opportunities, are subjected to forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas within Mozambique and in South Africa.(4, 6, 19, 28, 34, 36-38) Within Mozambique, the commercial sexual exploitation of children is especially prevalent in the urban regions of Beira, Chimoio, Maputo, and Nacala.(4, 28-30, 34) Commercial sexual exploitation of girls occurs in bars, in roadside clubs, and at restaurants in border towns and overnight stopping points along the southern transport corridor that links Mozambique, Swaziland, and South Africa.(4, 34) Research indicates that Mozambican children, particularly boys, are sometimes trafficked to South Africa for forced labor in agriculture, mining, and street vending.(6, 34)

Although tuition for primary education is free, families must provide supplies and uniforms.(4) Moreover, there are not enough schools to cover the population, and many students face difficulties traveling long distances to get to school, particularly in rural areas.(25, 39) In addition, physical and sexual abuse is common in schools; research found that some teachers demand sex from female students to promote them to the next grade.(2, 4)

It is estimated that more than two million children are orphaned, many as a result of the HIV/AIDS epidemic.(40) Additionally, the Government estimates that nearly 20,000 children are heads of households responsible for supporting their younger siblings.(41, 42) As a result, many children stop attending school in order to work, putting them at risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Mozambique has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 26 of the Labor Law; Article 4 of the Regulations on Domestic Work (44, 45)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 23 of the Labor Law (45)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 5, 10, and 11 of the Trafficking in Persons Law ; Articles 196 and 198 of the Penal Code (43, 46)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 5, 10, and 11 of the Trafficking in Persons Law (46)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 5, 10, and 11 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Articles 226 and 227 of the Penal Code (43, 46)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		The Law on Drugs (47)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Law on Compulsory Military Service (48)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Law on Compulsory Military Service (48, 49)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	13	Article 41 of the Law of Basic Child Protection (50, 51)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 41 of the Law of Basic Child Protection (50)

The Labor Law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside of formal employment relationships.(3, 45, 51)

The Labor Law states that employers may not engage children under age 18 in unhealthy or dangerous work, but Mozambique has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.(45, 47)

The Regulations on Domestic Work allow children ages 12 to 15 to conduct domestic work with the permission of their legal guardian.(44) Additionally, the Labor Law states that children ages 12 to 15 may work under certain conditions defined by the Council of Ministers.(45) However, the law does not determine the activities in which light work may be permitted, prescribe the number of hours per week for light work, or specify the conditions under which light work may be undertaken.(51)

While the Law on Drugs appears to contain provisions relating to the use of children for the production and trafficking of drugs, research did not uncover a public version of the Law on Drugs for review.(47)

The Government has reported that education is compulsory until age 13.(51) The gap between the end of compulsory education and the minimum age for work leaves children ages 13 and 14 vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(51)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MITESS)	Enforce laws and regulations on child labor.(52) The Labor Inspectorate works with the National Police Force to enforce criminal law.(1)
The National Police Force	Enforce all criminal laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor.(1) The Criminal Investigation Branch has a seven-person unit devoted to anti-human trafficking and violence against women and children; investigates cases and refers them to the Attorney General's Office.(1)
Attorney General's Office	Coordinate the Government's efforts against human trafficking and receive cases from the Criminal Investigation Branch of the National Police Force for prosecution.(1, 53) Lead the National Reference Group for the Protection of Children and Combating Trafficking in Persons and oversee the provincial-level human trafficking reference groups.(34, 54)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Mozambique took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Inspectors are poorly trained, which limits their ability to enforce labor laws effectively.⁽⁵⁷⁾ Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MITESS) officials can refer victims of child labor either to the police or to social workers from the Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Action (MGCAS) for family assessment and potential placement of the children in a foster home.⁽⁵⁵⁾

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Mozambique took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

In October 2015, the Government trained 30 judges in anti-human trafficking legislation.⁽⁵⁴⁾ However, research found that law enforcement officials responsible for investigating and prosecuting criminal child labor cases are poorly trained.^(5, 57) Many cases are of very low quality and lack appropriate evidence for prosecution.⁽¹⁾

Standardized procedures are in place for courts to refer victims of human trafficking to MGCAS' offices throughout the country, so they can receive support and reintegration services.⁽⁵⁸⁾ However, research did not find referral mechanisms for victims of other worst forms of child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Reference Group for the Protection of Children and Combating Trafficking in Persons*	Coordinate efforts to combat all forms of human trafficking. Led by the Attorney General's Office and composed of representatives from MITESS; the Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Action (MGCAS); the Ministries of Justice, Interior, Health, Immigration, and Education and Human Development; the Mozambican Human Rights League; Save the Children; the Association of Traditional Healers of Mozambique; IOM; and Mozambican media agencies. ⁽⁵⁴⁾

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Human Trafficking Reference Groups	Coordinate provincial efforts to address human trafficking. Composed of local officials, the National Police Force, border guards, social workers, NGOs, and faith-based organizations.(34) In 2015, the Government established three additional groups, resulting in national coverage.(34)
National Council on the Rights of the Child	Coordinate efforts to promote the welfare of children. Led by MGCAS and composed of civil society representatives and the Ministries of Justice, Education and Human Development, Health, and Youth and Sports.(13)
National Commission on Children's Rights	Oversee and report on children's rights in Mozambique to the African Charter and other international bodies; and perform consultations and deliberations on national action plans and legislation.(55) Inter-ministerial body created in 2010; includes representatives from MGCAS, and from the Ministries of Education and Human Development, Health, Interior, and Justice; civil society organizations; and religious organizations.(1, 55)
The Ministry of Interior's Women and Children Victim Assistance Units (GAMC)	Provide services to children who have been victims of crimes, including human trafficking, sexual abuse, domestic violence, and sexual assault. Officials operated facilities in more than 215 police stations and 22 victims of violence centers throughout the country.(34, 59)
MGCAS	Provide support and reintegration services to victims of human trafficking.(53)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Mozambique has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Children II (2013–2019)	Establishes four priority areas: child survival, child development, child protection, and child participation. Aims to reduce child labor in the area of child protection.(60)
Five-Year Government Plan (2015–2019)†	Prioritizes the prevention of violence against children, including human trafficking and exploitative child labor.(61)
Employment and Vocational Training Strategy (2006–2015)	Reduces poverty and unemployment by working with employers, workers, and members of civil society. Conducts child labor research on different topics and sectors to help design and implement government interventions.(13) Establishes support for participating institutions; implements policies and legislation on child labor; and provides training on child labor for institutions, stakeholders, and civil society.(13)
Education Strategic Plan (2012–2016)*	Aims to guarantee that all children have the opportunity to complete a basic quality education of 7 years. The plan's long term mission aims to build an education system based on 9 or 10 years of compulsory education for all children.(60)
Civil Registration and Vital Statistics Investment Plan*	Plans to strengthen legislation, raise awareness, and increase the registration of vital events, including birth registration.(43) Includes UNICEF and WHO in collaboration with the Ministries of Justice, Health, and Interior, as well as the National Institute of Statistics.(43, 62)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2014, MITESS submitted a draft National Action Plan on Child Labor to a consultative committee composed of representatives from various government ministries, unions, and the private sector. The draft remains under review.(3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Mozambique funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research in Mozambique.(63) In 2014, MITESS conducted a small-scale child labor study in partnership with the University of Eduardo Mondlane; however, the Government has not yet developed a final report presenting the study's findings.(3)

Mozambique

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2011–2015)	ILO-implemented program in partnership with the Government that contributed to the national priorities of inclusive and sustainable growth and poverty reduction by providing opportunities for decent work for all. Special emphasis was placed on the most vulnerable groups in the labor market.(25) Provided the Labor Inspectorate with a mandate to focus on eliminating child labor.(25)
Strengthening Coordination to Respond to Trafficking in Persons and Ensure Justice and Protection for All Victims of Trafficking in Mozambique (2014–2017)	$750,000, USDOS-funded, 3-year project implemented by IOM to support the establishment and institutionalization of a national human trafficking referral mechanism, including for victims of child trafficking. Includes upgrading shelter facilities, training staff to meet the minimum requirements for offering aftercare services to victims of human trafficking, and providing comprehensive protection services.(64)
Cash Transfer Program for Children Heads of Household†	Government and USAID-funded program that provides cash transfers to children heads of households until age 18.(1, 65)
Programs For Street Children†	Government and civil society-organized programs that provide shelters and schooling to prepare street children for reintegration into society.(65)
Direct Support to Schools Program†	$17.3 million, Government-funded program that provides funds to school councils and parent associations for use in improving access to and quality of education.(55, 65)
UNICEF Radio Program	UNICEF program established in coordination with the Government to communicate issues of child abuse, including child labor, on national and community radio broadcasts.(55)
Victims of Violence Centers†	Government-funded program implemented by GAMC that provides temporary shelter, food, limited counseling, and monitoring following reintegration for victims of crime. There are 22 centers located throughout the country.(34, 53)
Speak Child-116	NGO-funded program that runs a hotline to receive complaints of child abuse, including those related to child labor and sexual exploitation.(3)
Permanent Shelter for Vulnerable Children†	Funded and operated by MGCAS and Save the Children, and staffed with two psychologists to provide services to vulnerable children, including trafficking victims.(59)

† Program is funded by the Government of Mozambique.

Although the Government has implemented programs that target street children and child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in agriculture and domestic work. Additionally, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Mozambique (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that all children are protected by law, including children working outside of formal employment relationships.	2015
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2015
	Establish the activities, number of hours per week, and conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2015
	Make the Law on Drugs publicly available.	2015
	Raise the age of compulsory education to be consistent with the minimum age for employment.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Make law enforcement information publicly available, including the Labor Inspectorate's funding; the number and training of labor inspectors; the number and type of labor inspections conducted; the number of child labor violations, citations, and penalties; as well as the training of investigators responsible for enforcing laws on the worst forms of child labor; and the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2009 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen the Labor Inspectorate by initiating routine inspections and targeted inspections based on analysis of data on risk-prone sectors and patterns of serious incidents.	2015
	Allocate sufficient resources to law enforcement agencies in order to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Provide labor inspectors with adequate training on child labor; ■ Provide adequate training to criminal law enforcement officials to ensure violators are prosecuted. 	2009 – 2015
	Establish referral mechanisms to link all victims of the worst forms of child labor with the appropriate social services.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2010 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Take measures to ensure all children have access to education, by providing supplies and establishing an adequate number of classrooms. Protect students from teachers who demand sex as a condition for advancement.	2010 – 2015
	Make the results of the child labor study publicly available and use the findings to inform policies and programs.	2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and domestic work, and expand existing programs in order to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Namibia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Child Care and Protection Act, which criminalizes child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities. The Government also ordered the elimination of secondary education school fees and implemented regulations that prohibit the employment of domestic workers less than 18 years. However, children in Namibia are engaged in child labor, including in herding livestock, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps remain in existing laws regarding the prohibitions on hazardous work for children in agriculture and there are no existing social programs that specifically target child labor in agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Namibia are engaged in child labor, including in herding livestock. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.⁽¹⁻³⁾ Although the Government of Namibia published the Young People in Namibia: An Analysis of the 2011 Population and Housing Census and A Namibia Fit for Children: 25 Years of Progress in 2015, data discussed in those reports were not available for analysis in this report. Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Namibia. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		86.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.⁽⁴⁾ Data were unavailable from Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis, 2015.⁽⁵⁾

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Tending and herding livestock, including cattle, sheep,* and goats* (1-3, 6, 7)
Services	Domestic work (2, 3, 9, 10)
	Taking care of children* (11, 12)
	Working in bars called shebeens*(13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Street work,* including selling candies,* fruits,* handicrafts,* and cell phone air time vouchers* (13, 14)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 7, 12)
	Forced labor in agriculture, cattle herding, and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 12, 13, 15)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Namibia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children in Namibia are trafficked and subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in agriculture and domestic work. Some children from Angola, Zambia, and Zimbabwe are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in the fishing sector and in organized street vending in Windhoek and other cities.(3) Children orphaned as a result of HIV/AIDS and San and Zemba children are particularly vulnerable to child labor. San and Zemba children are especially vulnerable to forced labor on farms or in homes and, to a lesser extent, are exploited in prostitution.(3, 13, 16, 17) Namibian children as young as 10 years old are also found in the Caprivi, Kavango, Oshikoto and the Ohangwena regions working an average of 11 hours a day as herd boys, weeders, plowers, and harvesters.(18, 19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Namibia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 20 of the Constitution (21)

* No conscription (26)

During the year, the Government of Namibia via cabinet resolution ordered the elimination of all secondary education fees starting in 2016.(8) The Government also passed the Child Care and Protection Act which criminalizes child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities.(8, 23) Additionally, the Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment Creation (MLIREC) developed regulations in 2014 that prohibited the employment of domestic workers under the age of 18, and these regulations came into effect on April 1, 2015.(8)

The Namibian Constitution states that children under age 16 should not be required to perform work that is likely to be hazardous. However, the Labor Act states that children between 16-18 years may perform hazardous work subject to approval by the MLIREC and in accordance with the restrictions outlined in Articles 3(c) and 3 (d) of the Labor Act.(20, 21) Under Articles 3(c) and 3(d) of the Labor Act, children are prohibited from hazardous work including underground work, mining, construction, demolition, manufacturing, electrical work, installation of machinery, and night work. However, the law does not prohibit hazardous work for children in the agricultural sector, where there is evidence of children working 11 hours a day doing weeding and plowing as herd boys.(18, 19) The MLIREC reported that it drafted additional hazardous work prohibitions, but these have not been approved.(8, 14, 27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment Creation (MLIREC)	Enforce child labor laws and investigate allegations of violations, including forced labor. Responsible for cases involving human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 9, 28) Work with the Ministry of Safety and Security (MSS); Ministry of Gender, Equality, and Child Welfare (MGECW); Namibia Central Intelligence Service; and Ministry of Education (MOE) on child labor matters.(1, 9) Lead these ministries in joint inspection teams.(1, 9, 28)
Ministry of Safety and Security (MSS)	Enforce criminal laws and conduct site visits with labor inspectors.(1, 9) The MSS through the Namibian Police handles enforcement.(9)
Ministry of Gender, Equality, and Child Welfare (MGECW)	Collaborate with the Namibian Police's Gender Based Violence Protection Units (GBVPU) to address child labor issues. Responsible for cases involving human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(9, 28, 29) Remove children from child labor situations during inspections and take them to a regional GBVPU to receive assistance from MGECW social workers or to an MGECW shelter, eight of which exist throughout the country.(29)
Joint Child Labor Inspection Committee	Coordinate activities to enforce child labor laws. Committee includes the Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment Creation (MLIREC), Ministry of Safety and Security (MSS) and the Ministry of Gender Equality and Child Welfare (MGECW).(1) Refer children identified during labor inspections to MGECW social workers or to an MGECW-operated shelter for care.(1)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Namibia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

*The Government does not make this information publicly available.

NGOs reported that the MLIREC lacked sufficient resources such as office space and transportation to enforce child labor laws. Inspectors have the legal authority to inspect private farms but encounter difficulties accessing the properties because the gates to such farms are almost always locked as a security measure.(8) NGOs also reported difficulties accessing such locations, making it challenging to address child labor concerns.(1, 7, 27)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Namibia took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (27)	1 (8)
Number of Convictions	N/A (8)	1 (8)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	Yes (8)

The Government has a toll-free hotline operated by Namibian Police for reporting crimes, including child trafficking. An NGO operates a separate hotline that offers resources to victims of gender based violence and child exploitation and makes referrals to relevant government organizations. During the year a perpetrator was convicted on a total of 11 counts for trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and subsequently sentenced to 13 years in prison.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate Government policies and efforts to combat child labor. The committee consists of officials from the Ministry of Education (MOE), Ministry of Gender Equality and Child Welfare (MGECW), Ministry of Safety and Security (MSS), as well as the Office of the Ombudsman.(27) The committee was inactive during the year.(8)
Gender Based Violence Protection Units	Coordinate the efforts of ministries, including Ministry of Labor, Industrial Relations and Employment Creation (MLIREC), Ministry of Home Affairs and Immigration, Namibian Police, MGECW, and MOE that handle the worst forms of child labor. In addition, all these ministries participate in MLIREC-led inspection teams that investigate labor violations in the country.(9) Currently, there are 15 units in the country.(8)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Care and Protection Forums	Organize forums to address child protection issues and services within the country and includes regional councils, MGECW social workers, government agencies, NGOs, community leaders, churches, and other local-level stakeholders.(9)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Namibia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2010-2016)	Outlines strategies for promoting decent work in Namibia. Prioritizes employment promotion, and enhanced social protections, and strengthening social dialogue and tripartism. Includes elimination of forced labor and child labor as an outcome.(30) The program was extended to 2016.(31)
National Development Plan IV (2012/2013-2016/2017)	Includes goals for addressing child protection and trafficking concerns.(1, 32)
National Plan of Action on Gender-Based Violence (2012-2016)	Establishes a plan for reducing incidences of gender-based violence and improving the country's understanding and response. The plan also addresses child protection and trafficking concerns.(1, 9, 33)
National Protection Referral Network*	Determines how services should be provided to children experiencing any form of abuse.
Education for All National Plan of Action (2002-2015)*	Focuses on providing all children, including the most vulnerable, with relevant and quality education.(34)
National Agenda for Children (2012-2016)*	Establishes guidelines for Government in advancing and protecting children's rights.(12, 35)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Namibia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011- 2017)	USDOL-funded and implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 project established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010.Aims to build the capacity of the national Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(36) During the year, the ILO held a workshop that presented the legal and situational analysis on children in domestic work to 23 participants, including social partners and members from civil society. (37)
Social Protection System†	UNICEF financially supports the MGECW comprehensive, social protection system that includes grants for orphans and children in foster care and child maintenance grants for children whose parents have died, are on pension, or are in prison.(9, 38) The program was expanded to 2018.
Namibian School Feeding Program†	Government program providing mid-morning meals to about 330,000 school children throughout the country.(39)
National Youth Service†	Government program offering training in civic education, national voluntary service, and job skills to unemployed youth, some of whom have never attended school.(39)
Birth Registration and Documentation	UNICEF and Government-sponsored efforts to register births and issue birth certificates, including through mobile birth registration.(17)
Shelters and victim services†	Government-established six operational shelters for women and children that assist victims of sexual assault, gender-based violence, and the worst forms of child labor.(9) In addition, there are 15 Gender Based Violence Protection Units that serve as a "one-stop-shop" for victim protection that provide lodging, medical, and psychosocial care for victims. Also, provides subsidies and funding to NGOs that assist victims of trafficking.(29)

† Program is funded by the Government of Namibia.

During the year, the Government developed a Training of Trainers Manual on School Health for teachers, health workers, and social workers. The manual instructs teachers, health workers, and social workers on how to identify health issues such as child abuse and neglect that may affect a student's academic performance. (40) In March 2015, the manual was used in a workshop to train teachers, health workers, and social workers. (40) Although the Government of Namibia provides assistance to vulnerable children and services to some victims of child labor, research found no evidence of programs specifically addressing children working in agriculture or domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Namibia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish hazardous work prohibitions for children in the agriculture sector.	2014–2015
Enforcement	Ensure that sufficient resources such as office space and transportation are available for labor inspectors to facilitate enforcement of child labor laws.	2014–2015
	Ensure that labor inspectors can access large communal and family-owned commercial farms to conduct labor investigations.	2014–2015
	Make information publicly available about the types of trainings for criminal investigators receive concerning child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that child labor coordination committees such as the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Labor are active during the year.	2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing education and youth policies.	2013–2015
Social Programs	Conduct research on the prevalence of child labor to inform the development of policies and social programs to address children working in agriculture.	2013–2015
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and domestic work.	2009–2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Nepal

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Nepal made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor and Employment launched an initiative to conduct unannounced monitoring visits at 100 establishments in formal and informal sectors where child labor is more common. The Ministry of Women, Children, and Social Welfare designated 22 Child Protection Officers and 53 Child Protection Inspectors to investigate and manage cases involving violations of children's rights. Following the April 2015 earthquake, government agencies took actions to reduce the vulnerability of children to human trafficking.

However, children in Nepal are engaged in child labor, including in the production of bricks, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Nepal lacks a compulsory education law, and children ages 16–17 are excluded from the protections of the country's hazardous work list, leaving children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Labor Inspectorate's budget, the number of labor inspectors, and the resources and training are all insufficient for enforcing labor laws, including those related to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Nepal are engaged in child labor, including in the production of bricks.(1, 2) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(3-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Nepal.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	33.7 (2,097,163)

	Collecting and selling recyclable waste (10, 24)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 13, 25, 26)
	Domestic work* and begging,* each as a result of human trafficking (3, 6, 21, 27)
	Forced labor in the production of embellished textiles (zari) sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 6, 28)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* producing bricks, quarrying and breaking stones, and weaving carpets (6, 16, 29, 30)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked within Nepal and to India, the Middle East, Asia, and Sub-Saharan Africa for commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 25, 26) Nepali children are trafficked to India for various types of work, including in the leather and garments industries.(31, 32)

Research indicates that not all children in Nepal have access to education, which increases their risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor. Some rural villages do not have secondary schools, causing some children to walk for hours to attend classes.(33) The costs of teacher’s fees, books, and uniforms are prohibitive for many families, and some children, often girls, are not sent to school.(34, 35) In addition, a lack of sanitation facilities in schools also deters some girls from attending.(36) Children with disabilities face barriers to education in some cases, including denial of school admission.(37)

Earthquakes in April and May 2015 increased children’s vulnerability to human trafficking and labor exploitation due to the widespread closure of schools and the destruction of services and infrastructure.(38, 39)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nepal has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Military Service Regulations (44)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 16D of the Education Act (45)

* No conscription (46)

On September 20, 2015, Nepal adopted a new Constitution, which carried over provisions of the Interim Constitution prohibiting the exploitation of children; the employment of children in factories, mines, and other hazardous occupations; and child trafficking. Provisions from the interim Constitution prohibiting human trafficking, bonded labor, and forced labor were also carried over to the new Constitution.(10)

During the previous reporting period, the Ministry of Land Reform and Management drafted a Bonded Labor Bill, which addresses the elimination of all forms of bonded labor in agriculture, including the Haruwa and Charuwa systems. The bill continues to await finalization by an Inter-Ministerial Committee.(47)

The Child Labor (Prohibition and Regulation) Act sets the minimum age for hazardous work at 17 by defining a child as a minor who has not completed the age of sixteen years. This law is not consistent with international standards as it fails to protect children age 17 from work that could jeopardize their health and safety.(40, 48) The types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover brickmaking, a sector in which there is evidence that work involves carrying heavy loads and exposure to hazardous substances.(1, 40)

The legal framework does not specifically prohibit slavery as a form of forced labor.(40-42) While the Human Trafficking and Transportation Control Act increases penalties in cases of child trafficking for prostitution, the legal framework does not include increased penalties for cases involving child trafficking for forced labor.(42) The legal framework also does not explicitly prohibit offenses related to the use of a child in the production of pornography and pornographic performances or the possession of child pornography.(43) While the Children's Act criminally prohibits the use of children in the distribution of drugs, the law does not prohibit the use of children in the production of drugs and it does not extend to children who are 17 years of age.(43)

There is no compulsory age for education, which increases the risk of children's involvement in child labor.(45)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor (DOL), Ministry of Labor and Employment (MoLE)	Enforce labor laws, including those involving child labor. Investigations and hearings are carried out from 10 District Labor Offices.(49)

Organization/Agency	Role
Nepal Police Women and Children Service Directorate (Women's Cell)	Investigate crimes involving women and children, including human trafficking. Conduct work through the Nepal Police Women and Children Service Centers located in all 75 districts.(50) Complaints received about child labor in districts without a District Labor Office can be handled by the Nepal Police.(49)
Ministry of Land Reform and Management	Enforce laws that prohibit bonded labor in agriculture.(51)
Child Protection Officers and Investigators, Department of Women and Children	Investigate and manage cases involving violations of children's rights. In 2015, the Ministry of Women, Children, and Social Welfare (MWCSW) designated 22 Child Protection Officers and 53 Child Protection Inspectors to carry out these roles.(10, 52)
District Court	Enforce children's rights stipulated by the Children's Act.(52)
Office of the Attorney General, Ministry of Law	Prosecute human trafficking-related cases from the district level to the Supreme Court.(50)
Monitoring Action Committees, MWCSW	Investigate reports of commercial sexual exploitation at the district level, including the exploitation of children in the adult entertainment sector.(53)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Nepal took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from the Government of Nepal for the period from July 2013 to July 2014.

‡ Data are from the Government of Nepal for the period from July 2014 to July 2015.

In 2015, for the first time, the Department of Labor (DOL) provided information about labor inspectorate funding. The budget for general labor inspections for the Nepali fiscal year was $7,250, which included a $2,000 budget for inspections focused on child labor.(10) DOL officials noted that the budget was inadequate and had been decreased from the previous year. They also noted that the number of inspectors is inadequate.(10) According to the ILO's standard of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in developing economies, Nepal should employ approximately 380 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(54-56) Inspectors periodically receive training on child labor laws and inspection, although this training does not necessarily coincide with the beginning of employment.(49)

During the reporting period, DOL increased the number of inspections that exclusively focused on child labor from 92 in fiscal year 2013/2014 to 389 in fiscal year 2014/2015. During fiscal year 2014/2015, 86 children were rescued as a result of DOL referrals to District Child Welfare Boards and NGOs.(10) The Ministry of Labor and Employment (MoLE) also launched an initiative to conduct unannounced monitoring visits at 100 establishments in formal and informal sectors where child labor is more common, including brick kilns, embroidery, hotels, and restaurants.(10)

The size of fines and employer-paid compensation imposed by Labor Officers was not sufficient to deter child labor violations.(10)

In 2015, DOL submitted to MoLE three sets of draft regulatory guidelines that address child labor inspection and monitoring; the rescue, reintegration, and rehabilitation of child laborers; and the litigation and prosecution of cases. MoLE is in the process of conducting a review of the documents prior to granting final approval.(10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Nepal took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

† Data are from the Government of Nepal for the period from July 2013 to July 2014.

‡ Data are from the Government of Nepal for the period from July 2014 to July 2015.

From July 2014 to July 2015, 181 human trafficking cases involving 280 victims, including 95 victims under age 18, were registered with the police. The majority of the cases involved sex trafficking to India.(10) However, Nepal does not have a centralized database of criminal human trafficking investigations nor a coordinated approach for gathering and storing data.(53)

While the Nepal Police investigators have insufficient resources, during the reporting period, the Government did increase material support and training to the Nepal Police, including to the Women's Cell, to build their capacity to investigate crimes against women and children.(10) The Ministry of Land Reform and Management lacks the capacity to enforce laws that prohibit bonded labor.(44)

Following the April 2015 earthquake, the Government took actions to reduce the vulnerability of children to human trafficking. The Nepal Police issued orders for personnel at camps for displaced persons, border crossings, and transportation hubs to be alert to activities that may involve child trafficking. Monitoring operations were set up at 10 strategic points on highways, and checkpoints on Nepal's borders with India and China were increased from 8 to 22.(26)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Elimination Section, MoLE	Coordinate, monitor, and report on all efforts to address child labor. Implement a national action plan on child labor once it is approved.(57)
Central Child Welfare Board (CCWB), MWCSW	Monitor and report on the enforcement of laws and the implementation of policies related to child protection in coordination with District Child Welfare Boards.(52) Coordinate with MoLE and civil society to formulate and implement child protection and child labor-related policies.(49) In 2015, CCWB published a child protection mapping and assessment report to provide the Government with recommendations for future child protection policies and programs.(52)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
District Child Welfare Boards (DCWBs)	Report on child welfare activities, monitor child care homes, mobilize resources for children at risk, receive and respond to child protection cases, and establish referral mechanisms. Consists of social workers, medical practitioners, and government officials.(52) Child Rights Officers coordinate and monitor child welfare activities and are appointed by, and report to, the DCWBs. In 2015, the number of Child Rights Officers decreased from 75 to 63 due to reduced NGO funding.(10)
National Network Against Child Labor	Serve as a referral mechanism for children who are found in child labor to access services.(58) Consists of District Labor Officers, District Women and Children Officers, officers from the Nepal Police Women and Children Service Centers, Chief District Officers, NGOs, and thousands of youth clubs.(50)
Inter-Agency Coordination Group	Collaborate with the Government in assessing and mapping child protection in Nepal. Composed of UNICEF, Plan Nepal, Save the Children International, Terres des Hommes, World Vision, and World Education International.(59)
National Coordination Committee on Human Trafficking	Serve as the lead agency involved in policy to control human trafficking. Implement laws and counter-trafficking efforts, including working with NGOs to link children to proper services.(50) Formed by the MWCSW and made up of senior officials from the MWCSW and other ministries, as well as representatives of NGOs, intergovernmental agencies, and victims of human trafficking.(50) Enhance coordination between central and district-level officials and NGOs through regular meetings and trainings with officials from District Committees for Controlling Human Trafficking and newly created Village Committees.(53) By 2015, 187 Local Committees for Controlling Human Trafficking had been established by USAID's Combating Trafficking in Person program, and MWCSW had established 136 Local Committees.(26)
National Human Rights Commission	Monitor and receive complaints on child rights violations.(52) Report on the status of trafficking in persons victims and coordinate with civil society organizations through the Office of the Special Rapporteur on Trafficking.(50, 52)

Since the expiration of the National Master Plan on Child Labor (2004-2014), Nepal does not have a mechanism, such as a national steering committee, to coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor across government ministries.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Nepal has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
School Sector Reform Plan (2009–2015)	Targets children out of school and at risk of entering the worst forms of child labor. Aimed to expand access to education and provide alternative schooling and non-formal education to vulnerable populations.(50, 60) Overseen by the Ministry of Education.(50, 60)
National Planning Commission's Three-Year Plan (2013–2015)	Aimed to create an enabling environment for the protection and promotion of children's rights, including elimination of child labor and child abuse in all sectors.(49)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons (2011–2016)	Promotes and protects the rights of human trafficking victims and survivors, and outlines policies for providing justice and punishing perpetrators.(4) In 2015, MWCSW, with support from the Combating Trafficking in Persons program, conducted 6 two-day regional workshops, covering all 75 districts. Roles and responsibilities of district-level agencies were clarified and the budget and timeline to accomplish the goals of the national action plan were established.(26) Chief District Officers, Women Development Officers, district attorneys, and local officials attended the program.(26)

In 2015, MoLE officials worked on a five-year national action plan that aims to eliminate child labor by 2020. MoLE seeks to finalize the draft plan and submit it for Cabinet approval in 2016.(10)

Following the April 2015 earthquake, the Government adopted policies to reduce the vulnerability of children to human trafficking. The MWCSW required that when children under 16 years of age travel, they must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian, unless an exception was approved by the District Child Welfare Board.(26) The MWCSW also increased monitoring of child welfare homes and temporarily suspended the registration of new homes.(26)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Nepal funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Comprehensive Child Labor Program (2011–2015)	UNICEF National Committee-funded program, implemented by UNICEF and municipal governments in collaboration with NGOs, that provided rehabilitation and reintegration services for children rescued from the worst forms of child labor.(49) In 2015, 555 children in exploitative labor were identified and rescued.(10)
Green Flag Movement (2014–2017)†	ILO-funded, municipal government campaign to eliminate child labor. Includes child labor monitoring and awareness-raising activities.(61) Homes and businesses display a green flag to indicate that it is a child labor-free zone. Jointly organized by Lalitpur and Hetauda municipal governments and Children and Women in Social Services and Human Rights in 2014.(10, 61) In 2015, the campaign expanded to Panauti and Dhulikhel municipal governments, resulting in the rescue of two children in each municipality.(10)
Child Helpline – 1098†	MWCSW- and Child Workers in Nepal-funded helpline operated by the Nepal Telecommunications Authority.(10) Responds to calls about missing children, child abuse, child labor exploitation, child trafficking, and child sexual abuse.(62) Currently operates in 13 districts and municipalities.(10, 63) Also operates in Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Maldives, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka to ensure access for children who have been trafficked in this region.(49, 64)
Country-Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II) (2014–2018)	USDOL-funded capacity-building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in at least eight countries to build the local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards, improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor, collaborate with the South Asia Initiative to End Violence Against Children (SAIEVAC) on a Regional Action Plan on Child Labor, and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at reducing and preventing child labor in Nepal.(65) In response to the 2015 earthquakes, the project is working with the municipalities of Dhulikhel and Panauti to develop and revise Disaster Response Plans to include child protection provisions.(65)
From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (The Bridge Project)*	USDOL-funded global project implemented by the ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at combating forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to ILO C. 29 on Forced Labor. Includes Mauritania, Nepal, and Peru as priority countries.(66) A list of project activities is to be finalized in 2016.
Towards Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor as Priority (ACHIEVE) (2013–2016)	$582,000 Government of Denmark-funded, 3-year program implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen national-level capacity and to support the policy environment. Includes the development and testing of a training program and the preparation of a national child labor policy, a revised hazardous work list, and recommendations for upgrading national legislation related to child labor.(67) Projected outcomes include creating child labor-free communities through replicable and scalable models, and strengthening the policy environment and the capacity of institutions that can contribute toward child labor elimination.(67)
Project for the Prevention and Reduction of Child Labor in Restaurants in the Kathmandu Valley (PRE-CLOR) (2011–2015)	Japanese-funded project implemented by Child Workers in Nepal Concerned Center that increased the capacity-building of municipal and ward child protection committees, granted certificate awards for child labor-free restaurants and tea shops, and continued an awareness-raising campaign that included workshops with the MWCSW, the Ministry of Federal Affairs and Local Development, and other stakeholders.(68)
Decent Work Country Program, Nepal (2013–2017)	ILO, MoLE, Federation of Nepalese Chambers of Commerce and Industry, and Nepal Trade Union Congress-implemented program.(69) Key objectives are to provide technical and financial assistance to implement the provisions of ratified conventions on child labor, strengthen MoLE's child labor monitoring and reporting systems for prevention and early detection, support the mapping of community service providers, and assist the Government to revise a hazardous child labor list.(69)
Combating Trafficking in Persons (CTIP) Project (2010–2016)	$9.1 million USAID-funded, 6-year project to reduce human trafficking and protect the rights of victims. Aims to strengthen protection services for survivors of human trafficking, build the capacity of the judiciary and law enforcement agencies to effectively enforce legal measures and increase prosecutions, and prevent human trafficking by building awareness among groups that are vulnerable to human trafficking for purposes of labor and sexual exploitation.(10, 70)
Support for Schools†	MoLE program that supports five schools in the Kathmandu Valley for children ages 5–16 who are at risk of working in the worst forms of child labor. Provides scholarships to cover associated schooling costs for children outside the Kathmandu Valley to attend a local public school, and works with local NGOs to verify that children are attending class.(49)
Compulsory Education Pilot Program†	Ministry of Education program under the School Sector Reform Plan, designed to provide compulsory basic education, including free tuition and books, in 13 districts for children ages 5–12.(49) In 2015, compulsory basic education was expanded from 13 districts to an additional 8 districts.(10)
School Sector Reform Program (2009–2016)	World Bank-financed, 7-year investment loan program to support the School Sector Reform Plan (2009–2016). Seeks to increase access and improve the quality of school education, particularly basic education (grades one to eight), with a focus on children from marginalized groups.(71)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Nepal.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Nepal (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that laws are in line with ILO C. 182 by raising the minimum age for entry into hazardous work to 18.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the types of hazardous work prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2015
	Ensure that the legal framework criminally prohibits all forms of forced labor and the trafficking of children for the purposes of forced labor.	2015
	Ensure that the law explicitly criminalizes the use of children in the production of pornography and pornographic performances, and the possession of child pornography.	2015
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use of children through age 17 in the production of drugs and other illicit activities.	2015
	Make primary education compulsory until at least the minimum age for.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Collect and publish data on labor law enforcement actions, including the number of child labor law violations. Collect and publish data on criminal law enforcement actions, including the number of violations, prosecutions, and convictions involving the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors trained and responsible for providing enforcement of child labor laws to meet international standards.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that penalties are sufficient to deter child labor law violations.	2015
	Increase the capacity to gather, store, and report on data related to human trafficking, including the ability to disaggregate data to identify the number of child trafficking victims.	2009 – 2015
	Provide additional resources for the Nepal Police so that they are able to enforce laws prohibiting crimes against children, including the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2015
	Increase the capacity of the Ministry of Land Reform and Management to effectively enforce laws that prohibit bonded labor in agriculture.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Eliminate barriers to education, including lack of schools, lack of sanitation facilities, and fees.	2013 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
55. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and,

- ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Nicaragua

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Nicaragua made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government conducted its first human trafficking prosecutions under the Law Against Trafficking in Persons, which went into effect in February 2015 and raises penalties for the trafficking of children and adolescents to 19 to 20 years' imprisonment. The Government also reported conducting trafficking in persons prevention and awareness programs that reached 112,359 individuals, including law enforcement officials. The Ministry of Education expanded the National School Supply Program, which provided 700,000 packages of school supplies and 3 million textbooks to children in need. However, children in Nicaragua are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. National policies to eliminate child labor and protect children have not been fully implemented, and the Government appears to lack a specific and consistent mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor. In addition, the Labor Inspectorate is reported to lack the human and financial resources it needs to adequately enforce child labor laws across the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Nicaragua are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in street work and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Nicaragua.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	47.7 (342,076)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	88.3
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	40.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		85.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta Continua de Hogares (ECH) Survey, 2012. Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting coffee, bananas, tobacco,† African palm,* and oranges* (2, 3, 7-11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Nicaragua, children are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in Granada, Managua, the Caribbean Coast, and San Juan del Sur.(27, 30) It has been reported that children in Nicaragua who lack identification documents, sometimes because of a lack of birth registration, are at an increased risk of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(8) An estimated 20 percent of children born in Nicaragua lack birth certificates.(31)

Education is free and compulsory in Nicaragua. However, costs associated with school supplies and transportation make it difficult for some children, in particular those from poor backgrounds and rural areas, including the Caribbean coastal region, to attend.(23, 32-34) Some sources indicate that secondary schools have not received adequate assistance and that secondary school attendance remains low, increasing the risk that older children engage in exploitative work.(3, 30, 34)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nicaragua has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The National Assembly approved the Law Against Trafficking in Persons – Nicaragua’s first anti-trafficking law – through a two-stage process in December 2014 and January 2015; it was enacted in February 2015.(41, 46) The law amends the Penal Code by raising penalties for the procurement of prostitution from 4 to 6 years’ imprisonment to 8 to 10 years; it also applies these penalties to an expanded set of criminal offenses that include benefitting commercially from and managing prostitution.(40, 41) These penalties are increased to 12 to 15 years’ imprisonment when the victim is a child or adolescent. The law also raises penalties for the trafficking of children and adolescents from 10 to 12 years’ imprisonment to 19 to 20 years.(40, 41) Additionally, the law specifies that exploitative child labor figures among an expanded set of criminal offences that may be prosecuted as human trafficking.(41)

Nicaraguan law is not clear regarding the age up to which education is compulsory. Article 121 of the Constitution states that primary school education is compulsory without specifying an age.(38) Under Articles 19 and 23 of the Education Law, education is compulsory only through the sixth grade, which it specifies is up to age 12 and the end of primary school.(44) Article 43 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code states that both primary and secondary school education are compulsory, suggesting up to age 17, but does not specifically state an age.(37) The lack of clarity regarding the age up to which education is compulsory and the potential gap between the compulsory education age and the minimum age for work may leave children vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 47)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MITRAB)	Enforce labor laws and set child labor policy priorities.(19, 48) Conduct labor inspections through its General Labor Inspectorate, including child labor inspections through its Child Labor Inspections Unit. Conduct training on child labor issues and inspections, and coordinate with other public and private agencies.(9, 49, 50) Maintain a mailbox in each of Nicaragua's 17 departments to receive complaints of child labor violations.(51)
Nicaraguan National Police (NNP)	Investigate cases of child labor and human trafficking through the Police Intelligence Unit, which detects crimes; the Special Crimes Unit, which investigates crimes; and 54 Women's Commissions, which work on prevention and protection.(9, 19, 49) Maintain a hotline for receiving reports on the welfare of children, including those in danger of exploitation.(51)
Ministry of Governance	Coordinate participation between MITRAB and NNP in labor inspections in which employers resist inspection.(51)
Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecute cases of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Contains 2 national-level and 35 department-level prosecutors that prosecute these and other crimes.(9, 19, 49)
Human Rights Attorney for Children	Assist in the enforcement of laws relating to child labor and hazardous child labor.(9, 19)
Ministry of the Family, Adolescence, and Childhood (MIFAN)	Maintain a hotline for receiving reports on human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(51) Assist in providing officials with training on child labor violations.(31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Nicaragua took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the overall budget for the Ministry of Labor (MITRAB) was approximately $3 million, with approximately $1 million allocated for the labor inspectorate.(52) NGO's report that MITRAB's budget is the third-lowest of all government ministries and that MITRAB lacks sufficient resources to adequately enforce child labor laws.(51, 52)

During the reporting period, MITRAB employed 98 labor inspectors whose responsibilities included investigating child labor violations. NGO's report that the number of inspectors is insufficient to address the scope of the child labor problem in Nicaragua.(19) According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Nicaragua should employ roughly 199 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(55-57)

Nicaragua

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

MITRAB reported conducting 1,321 inspections of worksites from January to November 2015.(52) Also during the reporting period, the Government conducted 1,272 inspections that focused on commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor that were preventative in nature.(53) Government officials and child labor experts have reported that child labor inspections throughout the country, and those in agricultural areas in particular, are limited due to resource and personnel constraints.(9, 19, 51) Complete information on the geographic distribution of labor inspections and the sectors in which they occurred was not publicly available.(51)

As a result of inspections, MITRAB reported 539 infractions of child labor laws.(52) Among these, 86 children were found working in hazardous conditions. MITRAB reported removing these children from hazardous work and referring them for services.(52) However, research could not determine whether a reciprocal referral mechanism exists between social service providers and labor authorities.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Nicaragua took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	9 (46)	23 (54)
Number of Convictions	9 (46)	6 (54)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (46)	Yes (53)

The Government reported that criminal law enforcement officials received training on the new Law Against Trafficking in Persons, which went into effect on February 25, 2015.(53) The Government also reported conducting human trafficking prevention and awareness programs that reached 112,359 individuals. Participants included government criminal investigators, prosecutors, judges, and other law enforcement officials.(53) Research did not find the number of criminal investigators employed by the Nicaraguan National Police (NNP) or Prosecutor General’s Office during the reporting period.

The Government reported that as of February 2015, the Law Against Trafficking in Persons was the principal basis for all suspected human trafficking prosecutions and related convictions.(53) However, NGOs that work on human trafficking issues reported that the number of investigations was low compared with the scope of the problem.(53)

In 2015, the budget for the NNP and the Prosecutor General’s Office was not made publicly available. Reports from NGOs indicate that the NNP has insufficient resources, including a lack of personnel, equipment, vehicles, and funding, to carry out criminal investigations. NGO’s also report that the NNP’s Women’s Commissions are functionally inoperational.(31, 46, 54)

The Government and NGOs have reported that, according to a process developed by the National Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP), victims of the worst forms of child labor are referred by the NNP to the Ministry of the Family, Adolescence, and Childhood (MIFAN), which then refers them to NGOs for services. Reports indicate that this method of referral has been successful.(46)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Social Welfare System (SNBS)	Coordinate efforts on child labor and ensure that government institutions protect the rights of, and provide social services to, children and adolescents as part of its mandate to assist the Nicaraguan population. Comprises various government ministries, including MITRAB, MIFAN, the Ministry of Education (MINED), the Ministry of Health (MINSa), and the Ministry of Governance.(51)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP)	Coordinate efforts to address human trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation, including the implementation of the Strategic Plan Against Trafficking in Persons. Led by the Ministry of Governance and comprising the NNP, Prosecutor General's Office, governmental ministries, the Supreme Court of Justice, and civil society organizations.(19, 41, 53, 58) Coordinate Nicaragua's participation in the Central American Regional Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons.(31)
Ministry of the Family, Adolescence, and Childhood (MIFAN)	Maintain a guide for the provision of assistance to victims of commercial sexual exploitation and coordinate between agencies responsible for their care.(30) Part of the SNBS.(51)

In 2015, the Government reported that the National Social Welfare System (SNBS) is the mechanism that coordinates efforts to address child labor.(51, 52) However, NGO reports indicate that the SNBS does not comprise a specific and consistent coordinating mechanism due to limited coordination among constituent ministries and a lack of resources dedicated to combating child labor.(51) Coordination between the SNBS and NGOs that address child labor is also limited. In addition, research did not find that the SNBS published information during the reporting period on its child labor coordination efforts or how it monitored the implementation of national policies, such as the Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers (PEPETI).(52)

NGOs working on human trafficking issues reported that the CNCTP, as well as its regional working groups, were largely inactive following the enactment of the Law Against Trafficking in Persons in February 2015. Reports also indicate that the CNCTP did not appoint its Executive Secretariat, which is mandated by the Law Against Trafficking in Persons.(53)

While MIFAN maintains a guide for providing assistance to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, reports indicate that the Government had no formal procedures for the identification of human trafficking victims among high-risk populations, including children who are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation.(30, 46) MIFAN appears to be responsible only for the care of child trafficking victims under age 13, and the extent of its coordinating role is unclear.(30, 58)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Nicaragua has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Sets the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor by 2016, and all forms of child labor by 2020.(51, 59, 60)
Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers (PEPETI) (2007–2016)	Aims to eliminate child labor and ensure protections for adolescent workers. Seeks to reintegrate child laborers into the school system and increase school enrollment.(30)
National Human Development Plan (2012–2016)	Sets the Government's strategy for national development, including in poverty reduction, social well-being, and education. Includes efforts to eliminate child labor and uphold children's and adolescents' rights.(19, 61, 62)
National Plan of Youth Employment (2012–2016)	Seeks to eliminate child labor and protect the rights of working adolescents. Established by the National Commission of Youth Employment.(63–65)
Coffee Harvest Plan	Aims to develop a comprehensive approach to assist children whose parents work in the coffee harvest and to improve educational opportunities for children on coffee plantations. Focuses on eliminating hazardous child labor in the coffee sector in the Department of Jinotega. Developed by the Government, in collaboration with the private sector and civil society.(9, 19, 65, 66)
Plan of Integrated Attention	Prioritizes assistance for children and adolescents who work in stone quarries, mines, and in African palm cultivation. Involves coordination among several national ministries and local municipalities in order to determine the extent of child labor; create an action plan to uphold the rights of working children and adolescents to education, recreation, and health care; and promote better livelihoods for the families of working children and adolescents.(48, 64, 65)

Policy	Description
Inter-Ministerial Agreement on the Sustained Development of Children's Rights (2013)	Aims to make Nicaragua a country free from child labor, including hazardous child labor, through inter-ministerial cooperation channeled through the SNBS. Participating ministries agree to jointly create an action plan to address child labor and to generate dignified work for adolescents permitted to work.(67) Signed by MITRAB, MIFAN, MINED, the Presidents of the National Assembly and the Supreme Court, as well as by representatives from unions, the private sector, and NGOs.(67)
Policy on Special Protection for Children and Adolescents (Decreto No. 20-2006)	Focuses and consolidates the Government's guiding principles, objectives, and strategies on children's and adolescents' rights. Seeks to mainstream the recognition and defense of children's rights, including protections against child labor and commercial sexual exploitation, in policy areas such as social protection, development, and education.(68)
National Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons Strategic Plan (2014–2015)	Addresses human trafficking through directives shared by national and international public and private actors. Focuses on planning and monitoring efforts for awareness-raising, prevention, prosecution, and assistance for victims and their reintegration.(46)
Strategic Education Plan (PEE) (2011–2015)*	Articulates national educational strategies with development objectives that prioritize the building of human capital. Based on three core areas: (1) equality of access to free, universal education; (2) improved quality; and (3) increased institutional strength.(69, 70)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Nicaragua at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(71-73)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation in order to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by Nicaragua at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November, 2015).(74-76)
XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor†	Promotes decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas. Held in Cancún, Mexico; participating countries adopted the Declaration of Cancún 2015 which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(77, 78) Participating countries also adopted a Plan of Action that prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(77, 79)
Panama Declaration (2012)	Establishes commitments among Central American countries, Belize, and the Dominican Republic to implement country-based actions to eradicate the worst forms of child labor. MITRAB highlighted good practices and lessons learned from its child labor programs in coffee plantations and stone quarries.(80-85)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The Government's Roadmap for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor sets the goal of eliminating child labor in Nicaragua by 2020. However, research has not found a comprehensive action plan for its full implementation.(3, 86) The Government has developed a Strategic Plan to combat human trafficking through the CNCTP for 2014–2015.(46) However, research did not find information on this Strategic Plan publicly available, and the full extent of its implementation is unknown.(46, 53) NGOs working on human trafficking issues have reported that the Government lacks adequate resources to implement the victim care assistance procedures prescribed in the plan.(53)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Nicaragua funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Program Lovet (Programa Amor)	MIFAN program that targets 20,000 children, primarily in Managua, who are impoverished or involved in child labor, including in street vending and garbage scavenging. Provides education for children and vocational training for parents.(19, 48, 58, 87, 88) Overseen by Nicaragua's First Lady in coordination with the, MINED, MINSa, MITRAB, and the Ministry of Governance.(87) Includes children from birth to age 6 through "Program Love for the Smallest Ones".(19, 89) In 2015, the program reported reaching 18,415 children and adolescents through a range of initiatives, including by providing educational materials and tutoring to help children complete school.(52)

Program	Description
First, I Learn (Primero, Aprendo)†	Regional project supported by the European Union that promoted the eradication of child labor through access to education, among other avenues, in support of the Roadmap to Eliminate Child Labor.(90, 91) In Nicaragua, served children working in the agricultural sector in Jinotega.(92) Program ended in 2015.(52)
Educational Bridges (Puentes Educativos)†	MITRAB and MINED public-private partnership that provides education to children of coffee workers to prevent child labor during coffee harvests.(93-95) In 2015, the program continued to maintain and secure commitments from coffee farms to eliminate child labor in coffee production.(96)
Integral School Meal Program (Merienda Escolar)†	MIFAN and WFP initiative that provides more than 1 million children and adolescents meals at school to address poverty and bolster school attendance.(97, 98) Program is 70 percent funded by the Government of Nicaragua.(99) Plans to assist approximately 1.2 million children in 2016.(100)
National School Supply Program	MINED program to distribute packages of school supplies to preschool and primary school children in the poorest districts to increase attendance and completion rates. In 2014, program assisted 400,000 children.(101) In 2015, MINED expanded the program to provide 700,000 packages of school supplies to children from families in need. Program also provided 1.4 million textbooks to children in primary school, and 1.6 million textbooks to children in secondary school.(102)
La Chureca Project	$50 million Government of Spain-funded project that closed La Chureca garbage dump in Managua in 2013 and opened a recycling plant in its place. Accomplishments include the creation of a school that keeps children out of child labor, construction of houses, and employment for 258 families who had worked scavenging in the garbage dump.(103-106) In 2015, continued to assist beneficiaries.(107)
Birth Registration Campaign (Derecho a un Nombre)	Government initiative, in coordination with Save the Children and UNICEF, to advance birth registration campaigns.(31, 60, 108)
Pro-Child Program (Proniño)	MINED and Telefónica Foundation public-private partnership that increases educational opportunities for children to reduce and prevent child labor in line with ILO goals to eradicate the worst forms of child labor by 2020. Implemented with the assistance of local NGOs, assists children, families, and schools by helping to strengthen curricula and by working to support families' commitments to ensure children attend school.(109-111)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Nicaragua.(112)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2015)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Nicaragua. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(112)

† Program is funded by the Government of Nicaragua.

The scope of current social programs does not appear to be sufficient to assist children who are trafficked or engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation.(19) While the Government provides medical, educational, and legal assistance to trafficking victims, international organizations and NGOs provide their shelter, food, clothing, and psychological assistance.(9, 46, 113) NGOs indicate that the regions most affected by human trafficking lack adequate care facilities, and that victims of the worst forms of child labor in these areas are referred to NGO shelters in Managua.(46)

NGOs also indicate that Program Love lacks overall effectiveness and transparency.(7, 9, 19) For example, while the Government reported that Program Love assisted 18,415 children and adolescents during the reporting period, information on the kind of assistance provided to beneficiaries, including on whether beneficiaries were engaged in child labor, was not publicly available.(51, 52)

Although the Government's birth registration campaign is advancing, it does not reach all children, especially in remote areas, and many children lack the documentation needed to access basic services.(108, 114-116) In an effort to promote birth registrations, Nicaragua's new Family Code, which was passed in 2014 and went into effect in 2015, provides for free birth registrations up to age 7.(60, 117)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Nicaragua (Table 11).

Nicaragua

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law is consistent and provides a compulsory education age that is not less than the minimum age for work.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Publicly report on the training provided to labor inspectors on child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
	Dedicate more human and financial resources, such as by hiring and retaining more labor inspectors, to the enforcement of child labor laws, in particular in agriculture.	2009 – 2015
	Publicly report on the geographic distribution of labor inspections and on the sectors in which inspections occur.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that penalties are imposed and fines are collected for child labor violations.	2015
	Ensure a reciprocal referral mechanism exists between labor authorities and social services, and make information on the number of children referred between agencies publicly available.	2015
	Publicly report on the number of criminal investigators employed to investigate the worst forms of child labor and ensure they have adequate training and resources to conduct their investigations.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure the number of criminal investigations for the worst forms of child labor, including for human trafficking violations, is adequate to address the scope of the problem.	2015
	Publicly report on the number of criminal violations found through investigations for the worst forms of child labor.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Clarify the roles of SNBS ministries in addressing child labor; increase their collaboration and resources to ensure the Government has a specific and consistent mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including with NGOs; and publicly report on its efforts.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure the National Coalition Against Trafficking in Persons meets regularly to coordinate government activities on human trafficking issues, and ensure it establishes its Executive Secretariat as mandated by the Law Against Trafficking in Persons.	2015
	Enhance coordination and information sharing among actors involved in child labor issues and in efforts to identify and refer victims of child trafficking.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Finalize and begin implementing a concrete action plan to achieve the objective of eliminating child labor by 2020.	2009 – 2015
	Make publicly available national plans that address human trafficking and publicly report on their implementation.	2014 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Strategic Education Plan.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Develop strategies and devote resources to improve attendance in secondary school education.	2009 – 2015
	Expand programs to address the worst forms of child labor to more sectors in which exploitative child labor exists, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015
	Dedicate greater resources to expand services that assist child trafficking victims.	2010 – 2015
	Assess the effectiveness of Program Love in reducing the worst forms of child labor and publicize its results in order to inform future efforts.	2010 – 2015
	Expand birth registration programs, in particular in remote areas, to ensure that children have access to basic services.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
57. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, "developed economies" equate to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing countries" to "industrializing economies, and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." For countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists, they will be considered "least developed countries" for the purpose of calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors.

Niger

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Niger made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Niger was the first country to ratify ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention. The Government also drafted a new version of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor and adopted the Migrant Anti-Smuggling Law, which criminalizes smuggling and abuse of migrants, including children, and provides specialized services to child victims of smuggling. However, children in Niger are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining, forced begging, and caste-based servitude. Gaps in laws and enforcement have left children unprotected. In addition, social programs to combat child labor in Niger are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Niger are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-3) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining.(4-7) According to the 2009 National Child Labor Survey, more than 30 percent of children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in hazardous work, and child labor is more prevalent in rural areas and among girls.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Niger.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	42.9 (2,516,191)
Attending School (%)	7-14 yrs.	48.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	22.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		58.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of rice,* fruits,* nuts,* and vegetables* (1, 3, 4, 11)
	Herding and caring for livestock,* including cattle* (3, 4, 11, 12)
	Fishing* (3, 12)
Industry	Mining† for trona, salt, gypsum, natron,* and gold (4-7, 12-14)
	Quarrying† (4, 15, 16)
	Mechanical repair,† welding,† and metal work*† (4, 12)
	Working in construction,† tanneries,† and slaughterhouses*† (8, 12, 15)
Services	Street work, including as market vendors* and beggars*† (5, 8, 12)
	Domestic work (4, 8, 11, 12, 15)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 11, 12)
	Caste-based servitude,* including as cattle herders,* agricultural workers,* and domestic workers* (2, 17)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (4, 11, 15, 16)
	Forced labor in domestic work* and mining,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 12, 18)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Traditional forms of caste-based servitude, such as the use of women and girls as wahaya, still exist in parts of Niger, especially among the Arab, Djerma, and Tuareg ethnic minorities, in distant western and northern regions, and along the border with Nigeria.(11, 17, 19, 20) Under the wahaya practice, men buy girls born into slavery, typically between the ages of 9 and 11 years old, as “fifth wives”. Wahaya wives, including girls, are typically forced to work long hours as cattle herders, agricultural workers, or domestic workers and are often sexually exploited.(2, 11, 17, 21) The children of wahaya wives are considered slaves as well and are passed from one owner to another as gifts or as part of dowries. Both the wives and the children are often forced to perform domestic labor in their masters’ households.(4, 15, 17)

In Niger, it is also a traditional practice to send boys (talibés) to Koranic teachers (marabouts) to receive religious education. However, some of these boys are forced by their teachers to beg on the streets and surrender the money they have earned, or to perform manual labor.(4, 11, 15, 16)

The Constitution of Niger provides free and compulsory education.(4, 22) However, access to education nationwide is hindered by a chronic shortage of teachers, school materials, and infrastructure, which may make children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(4, 11, 23-25) Many children in Niger also are not registered at birth. Since they are unable to prove their citizenship, these unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(3, 4, 11, 26, 27)

In 2015, Niger hosted approximately 192,700 refugees because of the ongoing instability in Mali and insecurity in northeastern Nigeria. It may be difficult for refugee children to access education which could put them at increased risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(11, 23, 28)

While information on cases of recruitment and use of children in armed conflict is limited in Niger, the Government detained 65 children for suspected association with Boko Haram during the reporting period. The majority of the children detained were Nigerian and were held in juvenile prisons.(29)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Niger has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In June 2015, the Government of Niger was the first country to ratify ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention.(30, 31)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 106 of the Labor Code (32)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Legislation title unknown(31)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 23 of the Constitution (22)

* No conscription (36)

In Niger, the minimum age for hazardous work does not meet the international standard age of 18.(37, 38) The law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children in mining, quarrying, manufacturing, construction, tanneries, and slaughterhouses.(33, 34) However, these prohibitions do not cover agriculture, an area in which there is evidence of work in unhealthy environments that expose children to hazardous substances and dangerous equipment.(1, 8, 33) In addition, children performing unpaid or non-contractual work do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as do children performing contractual work.(4, 25)

The Penal Code prohibits employing and provoking children to beg; however, the penalties outlined in Article 181 are lenient and may not prevent violations.(34) Article 178 of the Penal Code also provides penalties for vagrancy, which is defined by Article 177 as a person without a home, an occupation, or means of subsistence. This Article may compel children who live on the streets to engage in the worst forms of child labor.(34, 39)

In May 2015, the Government adopted the Migrant Anti-Smuggling Law, which criminalizes smuggling and the abuse of migrants, including children. This law prescribes penalties of up to 12 years of imprisonment and a fine of up to $11,500 against those convicted of migrant smuggling, which is a punishment commensurate with the penalties prescribed for other serious crimes, such as rape.(40, 41) It also provides for legal protection and social assistance to migrant victims of smuggling. Under the Migrant Anti-Smuggling Law, children identified as victims of migrant smuggling are to receive specialized assistance that addresses the particular needs of minors, including educational support and family reintegration services.(40, 41)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labor and Social Security (MELSS)	Enforce laws related to child labor by receiving complaints, investigating violations, and referring cases to courts.(4, 11, 12)
MELSS Child Labor Division	Conduct studies on the scope and nature of child labor, raise awareness of child labor, and coordinate government efforts to eliminate child labor.(12)
National Human Rights Commission (CNDH)	Receive child labor complaints, investigate violations, and report violations to courts.(11, 12)
Ministry of Population, Women's Promotion and Child Protection	Work with law enforcement officials to provide vulnerable children with services, including education and counseling, in 34 centers across the country.(4, 11, 12)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Justice's Judicial Police Sections	Oversee cases involving juveniles at regional and district levels.(4, 12)
District and Magistrate Courts	Address children's issues, including child labor, through 10 district courts and 36 magistrate courts.(4, 12)
Regional and Vigilance Committees	Prevent child trafficking, dismantle human trafficking rings, and raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor. In the case of vigilance committees, which work in 30 localities, report suspected cases of illegal transport of minors to the police.(12, 37)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Niger took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (12)	Yes (31)

The Labor Inspectorate has budgeted $117,000 toward investigating cases of child labor in 2015. This funding is insufficient; inspectors also lack the access to transportation, fuel, and tools required to satisfactorily investigate and document child labor cases.(31) In 2015, the Ministry of Employment, Labor and Social Security (MELSS) employed 60 labor inspectors whom they disseminated throughout Niger to enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor. Given the prevalence of child labor in the country, the number of labor inspectors is inadequate. According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Niger should employ roughly 157 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(31, 42-44) While labor inspectors are legally allowed to conduct unannounced inspections in both formal and informal sectors, MELSS admits that many cases of child labor in the informal sector are not investigated because of their remote locations and the inspectorate's lack of resources.(31)

Inspectors occasionally refer children rescued from dangerous work situations to government social services, which refer these children to NGOs.(31)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Niger took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Number of Violations Found	Unknown (12)	Unknown(31)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown(12)	0(31)
Number of Convictions	Unknown(12)	0(31)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes(12)	Yes(31)

The Government of Niger does not differentiate between labor inspectors and criminal investigators for cases involving child labor. The 60 labor inspectors refer complaints to criminal law enforcement. (31) Investigators received basic and continued training on matters related to the laws and the enforcement of laws relating to child labor during the reporting period.(31) In 2015, Niger did not initiate any prosecutions, nor were there any convictions in cases involving child labor.(31) An informal referral mechanism between NGOs, the police, and government social services is in place, but the resources and facilities for the social services agencies are inadequate.(31) While the exact number of children removed from the worst forms of child labor is unavailable, removals are only conducted in the most extreme cases of exploitation, according to MELSS.(31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor	Review proposals for action plans for the ILO-IPEC country program and ensure that they are consistent with national child labor policy and priorities.(37)
National Commission to Coordinate Efforts to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CNCLTP)	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking, and to develop and implement policies and programs related to human trafficking.(12, 35, 39) Comprises five executive board members and 19 other members, including representatives of government ministries; members of CNDH, civil society organizations, women's rights groups, labor unions, judges, bar associations; and two foreign donor representatives who act as observers.(37, 45)
National Agency to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (ANLTP)	Implement policies and programs developed by the CNCLTP; conduct awareness campaigns about human trafficking in conjunction with the CNCLTP; provide training and education to reduce the risk of human trafficking; and maintain a hotline to receive complaints of human trafficking.(12, 37, 39, 45)
National Committee to Combat Child Labor in Agriculture	Coordinate policies and programs to combat child labor in agriculture.(46) Chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture and includes representatives from MELSS and the Ministry for the Promotion of Women and Child Protection. Also includes nongovernmental stakeholders such as NGOs, labor unions, international organizations, and social partners.(47)

In 2015, the ANLTP, in collaboration with international partners, organized training and awareness raising campaigns on the newly adopted Migrant Anti-Smuggling Law.(48) However, reports indicate that the effectiveness of the established coordinating mechanisms to address child labor, including its worst forms, was hampered by budget constraints.(11, 49) In addition, the number of calls received by the ANLTP's hotline that involve child trafficking is unknown.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Niger has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Sexual Exploitation of Children	Seeks to combat the sexual exploitation of children.(5, 37)

Policy	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	Describes the child labor situation in Niger and includes targets for the elimination of child labor. Falls under the direction of MELSS.(11, 50, 51)
Social and Economic Development Plan (2012–2015)	Describes Niger's overall development agenda, aims to prevent the worst forms of child labor, and calls for the adoption of the Nation Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(11, 12, 52)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2014–2018)	Includes goals of enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking, effectively implementing the laws, providing effective protection and care for victims, and strengthening social and educational initiatives for vulnerable children. Led by the ANLTP. (11, 53, 54)
National Social Protection Strategy	Aims to improve the quality of, and access to, basic education and health services; includes strategy to combat child labor. Overseen by the Ministry of Population, Women's Promotion and Child Protection.(55)
UNDAF (2014–2018)	Promotes improved access to education for vulnerable children and aims to build the capacity of the Government to address child labor. Falls under the direction of the Ministry of Planning, Territorial Administration, and Community Development, and supported by international donors. (56)
Education and Training Sectorial Program (PSEF) (2014–2024)*	Sets out a comprehensive map to improve the quality of, and access to, basic and higher education. Led by the Ministry of Education.(11, 57)
Nigeriens Nourish Nigeriens Development Plan "3N" (2012–2015)*	Seeks to develop the national agricultural sector and improve food security and nutrition for children located in vulnerable and remote geographical areas. Overseen by the Prime Minister's office and supported by international donors.(58, 59)
Strategy for Development and Security in Sahel-Saharan Areas of Niger (2012–2017)*	Describes Niger's overall security and development agenda with local populations in northern Niger. Seeks to increase youth employment and improve infrastructure and strengthening social services, particularly in health, education, and transportation.(60, 61) Overseen by the Prime Minister's Office.(60)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2015, the Government of Niger drafted the latest version of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor, which aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Niger by 2025.(12, 31) The Plan also addresses child labor in various sectors, including agriculture, mining, domestic work, and begging.(5) However, the Plan has yet to be adopted.(5, 11, 12)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Niger funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Combat Child Labor in Domestic Service (2011–2015)	Government of France-funded, 3-year, $1.3 million regional project to combat child labor in domestic work.(62)
Project Against Forced Labor and Discrimination (PACTRAD II) (2014–2015)	Government program, supported by the ILO, to combat forced labor and discrimination practices against women and children in Niger.(63, 64) In 2015, conducted a training session for journalists on forced labor and decent work.(65)
Centers for Education, Legal, and Preventive Services (SEJUP)†	Government program, in collaboration with UNICEF, aiming to provide food, shelter, education, and vocational training to street children, many of whom are victims of child labor. Operates 34 centers located nationwide.(11, 66)
WFP	UN program supporting cash-for-work schemes and other initiatives to address food insecurity. In 2015, allocated $420,000 in food assistance to 2,648 children in Niger.(59, 67)
Niger Safety Net Project (2011–2017)	World Bank cash transfer and cash-for-work project aiming to establish a safety net system for vulnerable households. In 2015, provided more than $10.5 million in cash to work transfers to 44,800 beneficiaries located in Dosso, Maradi, Tahoua, Tillabery, and Zinder.(68)
Second Chance Community Literacy Education and Vocational Training Program	Government program, collaborating with Volunteers for Education Integration, (a local NGO) that provides literacy and vocational training opportunities to vulnerable children.(37)
Niger Education and Community Strengthening (2012–2016)	USAID and Millennium Challenge Corporation-funded, $7.6 million, 4-year project implemented by the Ministry of Education and Plan International to increase access to quality education for girls and boys.(69)

Program	Description
Resilience in the Sahel-Enhanced (RISE) (2014–2019)	USAID program helping vulnerable communities in Niger and Burkina Faso mitigate vulnerabilities, shocks, and stresses by facilitating inclusive growth.(70) Aims to reach an estimated 1.9 million beneficiaries.(71)
Migration Forum	Government forum, with support from the ILO-IPEC and a local NGO, that combats the migration of youth, especially girls, from rural to urban areas.(37)

† Program is funded by the Government of Niger.

Although Niger has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the problem, especially in agriculture, herding, and mining. Niger also lacks a specific program to assist children exploited by religious instructors.(16)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Niger (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Make publicly available the law containing the official compulsory education age.	2015
	Raise the minimum age for hazardous work to 18 to comply with international standards.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure the types of work that children perform in Niger that fall into a R.190 category, such as work in unhealthy environments, are prohibited to children under 18.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions and protections apply to children in unpaid or non-contractual work.	2015
	Ensure that the Penal Code provides higher penalties for inciting people to beg and that street children are not compelled to engage in the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
Enforcement	Increase efforts to ensure that perpetrators of traditional forms of caste-based servitude and hereditary slavery are prosecuted according to the law.	2015
	Increase the resources and number of labor inspectors and criminal investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure inspections and enforcement efforts take place in the informal sector, in which most child labor occurs.	2014 – 2015
	Make efforts to increase the number of prosecutions and convictions in cases related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Collect and publicize information on the number and type of labor inspections, violations, complaints, citations, and penalties related to child labor, as well as the number of criminal law investigations and violations.	2012 – 2015
	Ensure government social services have sufficient resources and facilities to provide the necessary care to children withdrawn from hazardous labor.	2015
Coordination	Ensure that the CNCLTP, ANLTP, the National Steering Committee on Child Labor, the National Committee to Combat the Phenomenon of Street Children, and the National Committee to Combat the Vestiges of Forced Labor and Discrimination receive adequate funding to fulfill their missions.	2011 – 2015
	Disaggregate complaints made to the ANLTP's hotline by number of children trafficked.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Adopt and implement the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.	2009 – 2015
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PSEF, the Nigeriens Nourish Nigeriens Development Plan, and the Strategy for Development and Security in Sahel-Saharan Areas of Niger.	2013 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Increase access to education by— <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Increasing school infrastructure, teacher availability, and school supplies; ■ Ensuring school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates to attend school; and ■ Making sure all children, including refugees, have access to education. 	2013 – 2015
	Expand the scope of programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, herding, and mining.	2009 – 2015
	Implement a program to target children exploited by religious instructors.	2011 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
44. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Nigeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Nigeria made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted a law that restricts the ability of judges to offer fines in lieu of prison time for human trafficking offenses and investigated and prosecuted individuals involved in operating a human trafficking network that trafficked girls to Dubai for commercial sexual exploitation. The National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor also worked to standardize child labor reporting. However, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying gravel and armed conflict. The legal framework has inconsistencies on child labor, and the minimum age for work is below international standards. The Government did not take actions to implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor, and social programs are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Nigeria are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in quarrying gravel and armed conflict.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Nigeria.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	31.1 (13,924,739)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	76.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	26.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		76.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of manioc/cassava, cocoa, rice,* and tobacco* (8-14)
	Herding livestock (10, 14, 15)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (8, 10)
Industry	Mining and quarrying granite and gravel and breaking granite into gravel (4, 10, 11, 13, 16-18)
	Harvesting sand (11, 19)
	Artisanal gold mining and processing (10, 11, 13, 20-24)
	Construction, including making bricks* and carrying construction materials* (10, 13, 14)
Services	Domestic work (10, 13, 14, 17, 25)
	Conducting and collecting money on public buses, and automotive repair (10, 14, 17, 26)
	Street work, including vending, begging, and scavenging (8, 10, 13, 14, 16, 17, 25-28)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 8, 10, 14)
	Use in the production of pornography* (10)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging, domestic work, street vending, textile manufacturing,* mining and quarrying gravel and granite, and labor in agriculture, including in cocoa, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 8, 10, 14, 16, 29, 30)
	Use in illicit activities for armed groups, sometimes as a result of forced recruitment, including participating in extortion, armed robbery, and drug trafficking (10, 14, 26, 28)
	Use in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced recruitment (1-3, 5, 31, 32)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In northern Nigeria, many families send children from rural to urban areas to live with and receive a Koranic education from Islamic teachers, known as mallams. These children, known as almajiri, may receive lessons, but teachers often force them to beg on the streets and surrender the money they collect.(8, 28, 33) These children are highly vulnerable to recruitment by Boko Haram.(34)

Benin City, the capital of Edo state, is a major human trafficking hub in Africa.(35, 36) Children in Nigeria are trafficked internally and subjected to forced labor in agriculture, begging, domestic work, mining, stone quarrying, textiles manufacturing, street vending, and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 37) Children from Nigeria are trafficked to Equatorial Guinea, where they may be forced to work as domestic servants, market laborers, street vendors, and launderers.(38) Girls from Nigeria are trafficked to Europe for commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 35) During the reporting period, reports indicated that children were trafficked from internally displaced persons camps for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation; however, a government multi-agency taskforce investigated the allegations and found no evidence of child trafficking.(39-41)

Children from West African countries experience forced labor in Nigeria, including in granite mines.(2) Boys from Niger are subjected to forced labor, including forced begging, by corrupt mallams.(33, 41) Children from Benin are trafficked to Nigeria for domestic and agricultural work.(30)

Pervasive poverty, coupled with mass unemployment and a poor education system, has created an atmosphere in which youth are susceptible to participation in armed conflict with various groups, including ethnic-based militia organizations, criminal gangs, extremist groups, and partisan political organizations, such as party youth wings.(28, 42-44) Children as young as age 8 are recruited, and sometimes forced, into such groups.(28) Research found no reports of children being used in the Government’s armed forces.

Boko Haram recruited and used child soldiers during the reporting period.(1-3, 5) Reports indicate that children as young as age 7 were recruited to participate in combat operations, burn houses, cook, and work as look-outs and porters.(45) Young girls were used to carry out numerous suicide bombings.(3, 5, 46-48) The terrorist group also abducted girls, and militants subjected them to forced labor and sexual servitude.(2, 32) Children as young as age 14 joined Borno state’s Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) and other civilian vigilante groups.(2, 32) The CJTF works with security forces by identifying and helping to arrest suspected Boko Haram members.(32) Although it is unclear whether the CJTF forcibly recruited children under age 18 during the reporting period, the Nigerian military has told the group not to allow children to join.(2, 3, 32)

Ongoing insecurity has forced the displacement of millions of people in Cameroon, Chad, Niger, and Nigeria.(49) By the end of 2015, more than 1.8 million people had been displaced within Nigeria, including more than 1 million children.(5) Despite hundreds of schools reopening in northwest Nigeria for the first time in a year and a half, many classrooms are severely overcrowded because some school buildings are still being occupied by displaced persons seeking shelter from the conflict.(50, 51) Furthermore, schools continue to be occupied by government armed forces combating Boko Haram.(5) Many teachers and students are reluctant to return to school because of persistent conflict in the region.(50)

Although free and compulsory education is federally mandated by the Education Act, little enforcement of compulsory education laws occurs at the state level.(31) While some states offer free education, free and compulsory education does not yet fully exist in Nigeria.(10) School fees are often charged, and the cost of books, uniforms, and other supplies can be prohibitive for low-income families.(10, 31, 52) Under financial strain, many families choose to send girls to work and boys to school.(10)

Nigeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2011, the Government collected data on the prevalence of child labor; however, this data has not been published.(31)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Nigeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Nigeria has ratified the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, known as the Kampala Convention.(53) The Convention prohibits armed groups from recruiting children, or otherwise permitting them to participate in conflict, and engaging in sexual slavery and trafficking, especially of women and children.(54)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	12	Section 59(1) of the Labour Act; Sections 28 and 29 of the Child's Right Act (55, 56)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 59(6) of the Labour Act; Sections 28 and 29 of the Child's Right Act (55, 56)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Sections 59-61 of the Labour Act; Section 28 of the Child's Right Act (55, 56)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 13, 22, 24, and 25 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act; Sections 28 and 30 of the Child's Right Act (56, 57)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 13 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act; Section 30 of the Child's Right Act (56, 57)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 13-17 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act; Sections 30 and 32 of the Child's Right Act (56, 57)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 19 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act; Sections 25 and 30 of the Child's Right Act (56, 57)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Section 28 of the Armed Forces Act; Section 34 of the Child's Right Act (56, 58)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Sections 2 and 15 of the Education Act; Section 15 of the Child's Right Act (56, 59)
Free Public Education	Yes		Sections 2 and 3 of the Education Act; Section 15 of the Child's Right Act (56, 59)

* No conscription (60)

In 2015, the Government amended the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Law Enforcement and Administration Act to increase penalties for human trafficking offenders and restrict the ability of judges to penalize human trafficking offenders with fines in lieu of prison time. In addition, the Act criminalizes the employment of children under age 12 in domestic work.(2, 57)

The Federal Child's Right Act (CRA) codifies the rights of children in Nigeria and must be ratified by each state to become law in its territory.(14, 56) Nigeria had no new adoptions of the CRA during the reporting period.(14) To date, 23 states and the federal capital territory have ratified the CRA; of the remaining 13 states, 12 are in northern Nigeria.(14, 25)

The laws in Nigeria regarding minimum age for employment are inconsistent. The CRA states that the provisions on young people in the Labour Act apply to children under the CRA, but also that the CRA supersedes any other legislation related to children.(56) The CRA restricts children under age 18 from any work except light work for family members; however, Section 59 of the Labour Act, which is in force in all 36 states, sets the minimum employment age at 12.(55, 56, 61) The Labour Act also permits children of any age to do light work alongside a family member in agriculture and domestic work.(55, 61) This language makes it unclear what minimum ages apply for certain types of work in the country.(61) The minimum age protections in the Labour Act do not apply to children who are self-employed.(55, 61)

Although the Labour Act forbids the employment of youth under age 18 in work that is dangerous to their health, safety, or morals, it does allow children to participate in certain types of work that may be dangerous by setting different age thresholds for various activities.(55) For example, the Labour Act allows children ages 16 and older to work at night in gold mining and the manufacturing of iron, steel, paper, raw sugar, and glass, and thus, children are vulnerable to dangerous work in industrial undertakings, underground, and with machines.(55, 61) The National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor developed a report in 2013 that identified hazardous child labor in Nigeria. The Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE) is establishing guidelines that will operationalize the report.(13, 14, 33)

Some states have enacted additional provisions to protect working children in their territories. The 2006 Abia State Child Rights Law prohibits all children under age 18 from engaging in domestic work outside of the home or family environment.(62) The state governments of Anambra, Bayelsa, and Lagos have prohibited children from all street trading, and Delta state prohibits children from street trading during the school day. Kano state has initiated a prohibition against almajiri begging on the street.(14)

The law does not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children because the distribution and possession of child pornography are not criminally prohibited.(56, 57)

In Zamfara state, the Shari'a Penal Code, the moral code and religious law of Islam, defines an offender as anyone who "does any obscene or indecent act in a private or public place, or acts or conducts himself/herself in an indecent manner." This language may leave children forced into commercial sexual exploitation to be treated as offenders instead of victims.(63)

Although the CRA criminalizes using, procuring, and offering a child in the production and trafficking of drugs, the 13 states that have not yet ratified the CRA have no legislation in place to criminalize this activity.(56)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MLE), Labor Inspectorate	Enforce federal child labor laws. Deploy labor inspectors across 36 state labor offices and the federal capital territory to investigate all labor law violations, including those related to child labor.(14, 64)
National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons and Other Related Matters (NAPTIP)	Enforce laws against human trafficking and exploitative labor.(14) Investigate whether any person has committed an offense under the anti-human trafficking law.(65) Coordinate with the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development and state governments to provide child victims with social services and reunite trafficked children with their families.(14)

In 2015, the Labor Inspectorate employed 258 factory inspectors and 402 labor officers; however, according to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Nigeria should employ about 3,830 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(31, 67-69)

There are no labor inspectors available to conduct inspections on seafaring vessels.(70) The Labour Act states that children ages 15 and older may work onboard these vessels and, therefore, children are unprotected by the country's enforcement framework.(55) Research did not find mechanisms to enforce existing protections for street children; however, the Government is developing guidelines to extend labor law protections to the informal economy.(71)

State agencies are responsible for enforcing the CRA, and they can undertake additional measures to enforce child labor laws.(14) In Edo state, for example, labor officers work with the transportation industry to prevent children from working as bus conductors during the school day.(14)

MOLP refers cases of children that are gravely in danger to the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons and Other Related Matters (NAPTIP); however, research found no other referral mechanisms between MOLP and social welfare services.(66)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Nigeria took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Convictions	12 (74)	2 (73)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (14)	Yes (72)

In 2015, NAPTIP, in collaboration with international organizations, provided training on investigation and reportage of human trafficking cases and victim identification to 341 NAPTIP officials, Nigerian Immigration Service Officers, Nigeria Police officers, and media practitioners.(75)

During the reporting period, the Government initiated an investigation against a Nigerian soldier who was accused of exploiting a child in forced labor.(2) NAPTIP investigated and prosecuted individuals involved in operating a human trafficking network that trafficked girls to Dubai for commercial sexual exploitation.(72)

In 2015, NAPTIP identified and provided assistance to 516 child trafficking victims, 261 of which were victims of labor exploitation.(72)

NAPTIP coordinates with the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development and state governments to provide social services to trafficked children through the National Referral Mechanism; however, research did not find a referral mechanism for children found in other worst forms of child labor.(14) During the reporting period, criminal law enforcement authorities detained 129 children for alleged association with Boko Haram.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor. Includes representatives from MOLP; the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development; and the Ministries of Mining and Metal Production, Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, and Education, along with NAPTIP and the National Bureau of Statistics.(14) In addition, includes representatives from ILO-IPEC, UNICEF, NGOs, and faith-based organizations that work on child labor issues.(14) During the reporting period, the Committee discussed efforts to standardize child labor reporting across Nigeria to identify violations and update child labor statistics.(31)
Ogun and Oyo State Steering Committees on Child Labor	Facilitate action plans for the elimination of child labor in each state and enhance collaboration among agencies. Includes officials from MOLP, Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development, Ministry of Education, NAPTIP, Nigeria Police, Nigeria Immigration Service, and NGOs.(76, 77)
Inter-Ministerial Taskforce on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate child labor issues related to human trafficking. Chaired by NAPTIP.(14) In 2015, completed its first report, which designated human trafficking as a national priority; provided recommendations to mobilize government agencies to focus on human trafficking; and provided recommendations to strengthen coordination at the federal, state, and local levels.(72)
State Child Labor Task Forces	Ensure that children attend school. Established in Akwa Ibom, Delta, Lagos, Ogun, Ondo, and Oyo states.(14, 78)

In April 2015, an expert consultation met to discuss options for handover and return of children associated with armed forces and armed groups in northeast Nigeria. Participants included federal and state government officials, NGOs, and UN agencies.(45)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Nigeria has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy on Child Labor	Aims to significantly reduce the prevalence of child labor in Nigeria by 2015 and achieve total elimination by 2020.(79)
National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in Nigeria (2013–2017)	Provides the roadmap for implementation of the National Policy on Child Labor in Nigeria.(80)
Ogun and Oyo State Action Plans on Child Labor (2014–2017)	Guides implementation of the National Policy on Child Labor in Ogun and Oyo states.(77, 81, 82)
NAPTIP Strategic Plan (2012–2017)	Provides a framework for mobilizing NAPTIP and all stakeholders involved in combating human trafficking within Nigeria and internationally. Structured around six main areas: organizational development; research and assessment; prevention, protection, return, and re-integration measures; law enforcement; monitoring and evaluation; and international cooperation.(83)
National Policy on Protection and Assistance to Trafficked Persons in Nigeria	Outlines protection and rehabilitation services for victims of human trafficking and child labor.(84)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor	Aims to eliminate worst forms of child labor in ECOWAS member states by 2015.(85)
National Framework for the Development and Integration of Almajiri Education into the Universal Basic Education Scheme	Provides guidelines for state governments to improve the Islamic education system and address the problem of begging by almajiri .(86-88)
Action Plan for Ending Violence Against Children in Nigeria†	Focuses on eliminating sexual and physical violence against children. Implemented by the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Social Development. May encourage more states to adopt and enforce the Child's Rights Act.(31)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

According to the Government, no steps were taken to implement the National Policy and National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor in 2015.(31)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Nigeria funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
NAPTIP Shelters for Human Trafficking Victims†	Government-funded program that operates 9 shelters in Nigeria, with a total capacity for 313 victims. Shelters provide legal, medical, psychological, and family reunification services, and vocational training and business management skills.(2)
State Government Programs†	Anambra state program raises awareness of the state's ban of children in street trading. Ogun state has a program for labor officers to initiate awareness-raising programs for parents of children working in stone quarries.(14) Akwa Ibom, Delta, and Rivers states provide free primary education.(14, 78, 89) Katsina state provides free primary and secondary education. Osun state operates an elementary school feeding and health program that provides free lunch for elementary school students.(14) Borno state provides funds, transportation, and lunch to vulnerable children to help them attend school.(78) Kano state provides free primary education, free school meals, and some free transportation for children to attend school and the state is also introducing kindergarten classes.(14) In 2015, Kaduna state launched a program to cover costs of school uniforms, books, and meals for students in public primary and junior secondary schools.(52)
Safe Schools Initiative†	Government-funded program, with support from the UN, that aims to provide remedial education and pilot 10 safe education facilities in northeast Nigeria in Borno, Yobe, and Adamawa states. Combines school-based interventions, community interventions to protect schools, and special measures for vulnerable populations.(90, 91)
Sokoto and Niger States Program	United Kingdom's Department for International Development-funded program, implemented by the Government and UNICEF, that provides cash transfers to pay for textbooks and other school-related costs for girls ages 6 to 15.(92)

† Program is funded by the Government of Nigeria.

During the reporting period, NAPTIP conducted awareness-raising events at select primary and secondary schools in six states known for a high prevalence of human trafficking. More than 10,000 students learned about human trafficking.(72)

Although Nigeria has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address children engaged in agriculture, commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, forced labor, illicit activities, and armed conflict.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Nigeria (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Increase the minimum age for regular work to at least 14, in accordance with international standards; ensure that national legislation on minimum age for work is consistent and that all children, including those who are self-employed, are protected; and ensure that provisions related to light work conform to international standards.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children are comprehensive.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that the distribution and possession of child pornography are criminally prohibited.	2015
	Ensure that states that apply Shari'a as the penal code do not penalize child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that using, procuring, and offering a child for the production and trafficking of drugs are criminally prohibited in all states.	2015
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the Labor Inspectorate's funding, training of labor inspectors and criminal investigators, number and type of labor inspections conducted, number of violations found, number of prosecutions initiated, and complaint mechanisms.	2009 – 2015
	Provide an adequate number of trained inspectors to effectively enforce labor laws, including laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Ensure that child labor inspections occur on seafaring vessels and that a mechanism exists for enforcing existing protections for street children.	2010 – 2015
	Establish referral mechanisms between Nigeria's law enforcement and social service agencies for all children found during labor inspections and criminal investigations.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that children associated with armed groups are not detained and refer these children to social service providers.	2015
Government Policies	Take steps to implement the National Policy on Child Labor and National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Make the results of the 2011 child labor study publicly available, and, if necessary, conduct additional research to determine the activities of children working in fishing.	2011 – 2015
	Take steps to provide sufficient educational infrastructure for children to access school. Remove all armed groups and forces from schools and compounds.	2015
	Ensure that all states adopt programs to offer free education and expand existing programs that provide vulnerable children, especially girls, with funds to cover school fees and the cost of materials.	2014 – 2015
	Establish and expand programs that prevent and remove children from child labor in agriculture and domestic work, and from the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, illicit activities, and armed conflict.	2009 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Oman

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Oman made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established a study group to conduct research on child labor and how to combat it, drafted regulations outlining the conditions in which children may engage in light work, and set up a mechanism to receive complaints of child labor, including its worst forms, and refer them to the Royal Oman Police for investigation. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in child labor, including in the agricultural sector in Oman. The Government lacks a policy to address all worst forms of child labor, and information on the enforcement of child labor laws is not publicly available.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in child labor, including in the agricultural sector in Oman.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Oman. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		108.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(2)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (1)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (1)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

The Ministry of Social Development set up a study group, in cooperation with the Sultan Qaboos University, to research how to combat child labor in Oman.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Oman has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 46 of the Child Law (4)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 76 of the Labor Law; Article 45 of the Child Law (4, 5)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 76 of the Labor Law (5)

There was no evidence of child trafficking in the reporting period.⁽¹⁶⁾ Research found no evidence of formal mechanisms or procedures to proactively identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the National Committee for Combating Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Combating Human Trafficking	Oversee the National Plan for Combating Human Trafficking. Although the Government of Oman had adopted the National Plan for Combating Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy to address all forms of child labor, including in farming and fishing.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Oman funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

The exclusion of migrant workers and their children from public social services, including education and housing benefits available to citizens, may increase their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.⁽¹⁹⁾

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Oman (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available data on the labor inspectorate funding, whether inspectors are authorized to assess penalties, the types of training for labor inspectorate, the number of inspections and whether they were conducted at the worksite or via desk review only, the number of violations, the penalties including those imposed, and whether routine and targeted inspection were conducted.	2013 – 2015
	Establish a referral mechanism between law enforcement and social services.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that investigators receive training on the worst forms of child labor.	2015
	Collect and make publicly available data on the number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions.	2013 – 2015
	Develop formal mechanisms and procedures to proactively identify victims of all worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2015
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat child labor, including in its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Develop a national policy to address all worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that migrant workers' children are afforded protection from exploitation through access to social services.	2011 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. In 2015, Pakistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Provincial Government of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa passed the Prohibition of Employment of Children Act and the Bonded Labor Systems (Abolition) Act. The Provincial Government of Punjab collaborated with the International Labor Organization to provide free education and books to the children of brick kiln workers. The Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill, which criminalizes serious offenses against children, was passed by the National Assembly and is waiting for Senate approval. However, children in Pakistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and bonded labor in brick kilns. Three Provincial Governments have not established a minimum working age, and the Federal minimum age for hazardous work falls short of international standards. Provincial Governments do not have the resources necessary to enforce laws prohibiting child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Pakistan are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and bonded labor in brick kilns. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Pakistan.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

A national child labor survey has not been conducted since 1996, and the lack of recent data hampers the ability of the Federal and Provincial Governments to accurately assess the scope and prevalence of child labor.(40)

Girls are trafficked domestically and internationally into commercial sexual exploitation.(33) Boys are victims of human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation around hotels, truck stops, bus stations, and shrines in Pakistan.(33, 35) Children are sold or kidnapped and forced to beg in Pakistan.(33, 41)

Non-state militant groups, such as pro-Taliban insurgents, force children to engage in espionage, armed conflict, and suicide attacks.(33, 37) Children are used to smuggle drugs and small arms across the Pakistan-Afghanistan border.(38, 39)

Some child domestic workers are subjected to sexual assault and extreme abuse, including cases in which child domestic workers were killed by their employers.(1, 34) Some children work as bonded laborers in the production of bricks and in coal mines. This is typically a result of Pakistan’s debt bondage system, peshgi, in which children are forced to work to pay off a family loan.(32, 42)

While education is free and compulsory through age 16, access to education is still limited. High rates of teacher absenteeism, inadequate facilities, lack of transportation, and corporal punishment may deter children from attending school.(15, 40, 43) In conflict zones, military operations often disrupt school attendance and damage infrastructure.(44) Armed groups and extremist groups regularly attack and threaten schools, disrupting children’s access to education.(43, 45)

Pakistan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The 18th Amendment to the Pakistan Constitution devolves all child welfare and labor issues from the Federal Government to the four Provincial Governments. Until each Province repeals or adopts a replacement law, Federal laws on child protection and bonded labor are in force.(40)

In 2015, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province passed the Prohibition of Employment of Children Act and the Bonded Labor Systems (Abolition) Act.(46, 54) During the year, the National Assembly passed the Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill, which criminalizes serious offenses against children, including child pornography and domestic trafficking in persons. The bill was waiting for Senate approval.(61, 62)

Pakistan's Federal and Provincial laws are not completely in compliance with international standards on child labor, including the worst forms of child labor. The Federal and Provincial Governments, with the exception of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa have not established a national minimum age for employment, which may increase the likelihood that very young children engage in activities that jeopardize their health and safety. The Federal law and Punjab Provincial law setting the minimum age of 15 for hazardous work is not in compliance with international standards.(47, 63) Punjab, Sindh, and Balochistan Provinces have drafted legislation that prohibits work for children under age 14, and hazardous work for children under age 18; however, legislation in these Provinces has been pending ratification since 2012.(64)

Pakistan's hazardous work prohibitions are not comprehensive because they do not cover domestic work.(39) Pakistan's minimum age for hazardous work does not extend to factories with fewer than 10 people employed.(47)

The Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance and the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Act do not comply with international standards because they do not provide that children can be trafficked without coercion. These laws are also insufficient because they do not specifically prohibit internal human trafficking.(51, 55) The Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Act further does not comply with international standards because it prohibits child trafficking only for exploitative entertainment.(55) In 2013, the Federal Government drafted anti-trafficking legislation to address internal and transnational trafficking, with a focus on crimes against women and children; however, it has yet to be introduced in the National Assembly.(65)

The Federal Penal Code prohibits procuring girls under age 18 for prostitution; however, the law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation because it does not extend to boys under age 18, and it does not prohibit using children for prostitution. It also does not criminalize the use, procuring, or offering of children in the production of pornography and pornographic performances.(50) Punjab Province has enacted legislation that criminalizes the procurement of a child for prostitution; however, the law does not prohibit the use of children for pornography and pornographic performances.(56) Federal and provincial laws do not criminally prohibit the possession of child pornography.(50, 55, 56)

While Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Punjab Provinces have enacted legislation prohibiting the use of children in begging, these Provincial laws and the Federal law are not sufficient as they do not prohibit the use of children in drug production and drug trafficking.(55, 56) The Federal and Provincial Governments have not enacted laws that prohibit the recruitment and use of children by non-state groups for armed conflict.(43)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Provincial Labor Inspectors	Inspect industrial areas and markets to identify child labor violations, enforce Provincial labor laws, and pursue legal action against employers.(66)
Provincial and Regional Police	Enforce violations of Federal and Provincial laws, including the Pakistan Penal Code and the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act, concerning the worst forms of child labor. Refer children taken into custody to Child Protection Officers.(67)
District Vigilance Committees	Implement the Bonded Labor System (Abolition) Act and assist in rehabilitating bonded laborers.(49)

Organization/Agency	Role
Anti-Trafficking Unit of the Federal Investigation Agency	Enforce transnational trafficking-related laws, particularly the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance. Cooperate with other governments on trafficking cases, operate a hotline for victims, and publish information on anti-trafficking efforts on its Web site.(68)
Child Protection Units	Take into custody at-risk children, including those rescued from exploitative labor situations. Present cases of children taken into custody to the Child Protection Court or the appropriate authority. Established in Punjab, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, and Sindh Provinces.(55, 56, 69, 70)
Child Protection Courts	Determine protective custody for at-risk children, including those rescued from exploitative labor situations. Established in Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Provinces.(55, 56, 71)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Pakistan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from 2014 and 2015.

Following the devolution of Federal powers to Provincial Governments, the Provinces are responsible for enforcing labor laws, including those involving child labor law violations. Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh Provinces were the only Provinces to provide information about labor law enforcement actions taken during 2015.(62)

Pakistan has a critical shortage of labor inspectors and provincial agencies that support law enforcement are severely under-resourced. For example, labor inspectors receive very little training and have insufficient resources to adequately inspect workplaces.(43, 62, 73) Labor inspections vary across Provincial Governments. In Punjab, inspections are conducted regularly, while in Sindh, inspectors are required to give advance notice to employers.(73) Fines and penalties are assessed only infrequently and are insufficient to deter employers from using child labor.(40, 62)

In 2015, the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province created a labor complaint cell and allocated $160,990 to establish a child labor and bonded labor unit in the Directorate of Labor.(62)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Pakistan took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Unknown (62)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	Unknown (62)
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (74)	Yes (75)
Number of Investigations	Unknown	Unknown (62)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	Unknown (62)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	Unknown (62)
Number of Convictions	Unknown	Unknown (62)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (62)	Yes (62)

Research has found no evidence that Balochistan has a referral mechanism by which rescued children can be placed in protective custody and obtain rehabilitation services. The Province has not yet passed legislation mandating the creation of child protection units.(76)

Law enforcement officials lack the necessary personnel, training, and equipment to confront the armed guards who often oversee bonded laborers.(2) These circumstances have hampered the effectiveness and enforcement of the Bonded Labor System Abolition Act and, since its passage in 1992, no convictions have been made under the Act.(33) District Vigilance Committees have been established in Punjab, and cases of bonded labor have been reported by the local police. In other Provinces, however, District Vigilance Committees may not be functioning.(33)

In 2015, the Federal Investigation Agency hosted anti-human trafficking training for local law enforcement officials and judges who hear trafficking cases.(75)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Federal and Provincial Child Labor Units	Advise Provincial Governments and coordinate reporting responsibilities on the implementation of child labor conventions.(77) Conduct research, build capacity, and coordinate anti-child labor activities.(68)
Interagency Task Force	Coordinate the anti-human trafficking efforts of the Ministry of the Interior; intelligence and law enforcement agencies; the Ministry of Law and Justice; and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Support 13 anti-trafficking units that work with Provincial and district police officers to monitor and combat internal and transnational human trafficking.(74) Maintain an Integrated Border Management System.(78)
Punjab Child Protection and Welfare Bureau	Coordinate the protection of destitute and neglected children by appointing child protection officers, supervising child protection units, and establishing child protection institutions and child protection courts.(56)
Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Child Protection and Welfare Commission	Coordinate efforts to enhance the safety, welfare, and well-being of children, including by running programs for the prevention of exploitative child labor practices.(79)
Sindh Child Protection Authority	Coordinate efforts to ensure the rights of children in need of special protection, including child laborers, by establishing child protection units and appointing child protection officers.(70) The Provincial minister heads the authority and members include two parliamentarians, lawyers, social activists, and representatives from departments that deal with children's issues.(80) As of May 2015, the Sindh Child Protection Authority has not set up district child protection units nor established rules of business or a budget.(81)

Research has found no evidence that Balochistan Province has a coordination mechanism to ensure the welfare and protection of children at the provincial level. A new version of the Balochistan Child Welfare Protection Bill, which would mandate the creation of child welfare and protection bureau, was drafted in 2015, but it has yet to be passed by the Provincial Assembly.(76, 82)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Pakistan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Children	Aims to prohibit, restrict, and regulate child labor with the eventual goal of its elimination.(83) Lays out 14 key strategies and actions, including harmonizing work among Government agencies, NGOs, and donors; promoting research on child labor issues; developing non-formal education for child laborers; providing microcredit for families of child laborers; and conducting national surveys on child labor. Also addresses child trafficking and outlines key objectives for its elimination.(83)
National Education Policy	Focuses on increasing the literacy rate and providing livelihood skills to children, including those engaged in child labor. Aims to expand non-formal and vocational education programs to children, including child laborers.(84)
National Action Plan for Combating Human Trafficking	Describes prevention, prosecution, and protection strategies for ending human trafficking, including child trafficking.(85)
Provincial Plans of Action to Combat Child Labor	Details how each Province plans to revise child labor legislation, including by strengthening the capacity of labor inspectors, generating awareness of child labor, improving reporting, and computerizing labor inspection data.(77, 86)
Sindh and Punjab Provincial Plans of Action to Combat Bonded Labor	Details how the Sindh and Punjab Provinces plan to revise their bonded labor laws. Includes plans to strengthen the capacity of labor inspectors, generate awareness of bonded labor, improve reporting, and computerize labor inspection data.(86, 87)
Federally Administered Tribal Areas (FATA) Child Protection Policy	Describes how FATA will promote and create a protective environment for all children. Includes actions to be taken toward the prevention and elimination of child labor.(88)
Punjab Labor Policy†	Seeks to improve working conditions, eradicate child and bonded labor, and establish social safety for workers and their families. Includes the goal of ending all child labor in brick kilns, in addition to the construction of schools, hospitals, and residences for workers.(89)
National Plan of Action to Accelerate Education-Related Millennium Development Goals (2013–2016)*	Aims to increase enrollment of out-of-school children in primary education, to retain all children enrolled in school and ensure they complete their primary education, and to improve the quality of primary education. Sets out province-level action plans to achieve these goals.(90)
One UN Program II (2013–2017)*	Identifies key strategic priority areas for UN development assistance, including increased access to social services and food security, development of sustainable livelihoods, and strengthened governance and social protections for excluded and vulnerable populations.(91)
Balochistan Education Sector Plan (2013–2017)*	Seeks to increase the quality and relevance of school curriculum and increase inclusion of excluded communities and children in primary, secondary, and non-formal educational institutions.(92) In 2014, Balochistan Province was awarded $34 million from the Global Partnership for Education to implement its State Action Plan.(93)
Punjab Reforms Road Map*	Aims to achieve 100 percent enrollment of all school-age children, 100 percent retention of all enrolled children up to age 16, and to provide free and compulsory education for all in the Punjab Province.(94)
Sindh Education Sector Plan (2014–2018)*†	Aims to increase equitable access to education and to improve the quality of the teachers and curriculum.(95) In 2014, the Sindh Provincial Government was awarded $66 million from the Global Partnership for Education to implement the Plan.(96)
Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Education Sector Plan (2010–2015)*	Set out strategies to increase student enrollment, improve the quality of education, and improve school infrastructure and learning environments.(97)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Pakistan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Pakistan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Centers for Rehabilitation of Child Labor†	Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal program that aims to remove children ages 5–14 from hazardous labor and provide them with education, clothing, and a stipend.(98)
Child Support Program†	Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal program that distributes conditional cash transfers to families living below the poverty line to send their children ages 5–16 to primary school. Approximately $3 million has been disbursed.(99)
Benazir Bhutto Income Support Program†	Federal Government scheme that provides financial assistance to underprivileged families and offers incentives for parents to keep their children in school and out of work.(40)
Decent Work Country Program (2010–2015)	ILO technical assistance program that included strategies to reduce the worst forms of child labor by strengthening institutions and taking direct action to withdraw children from the workforce. Program also sought to combat forced labor by strengthening law enforcement interventions in cases of internal human trafficking and bonded labor in the Sindh and Punjab Provinces.(100)
Sabawoon Rehabilitation Center†	Pakistan Army center that rehabilitates children who were recruited and ideologically influenced by terrorist organizations and militant groups. Reintegrated more than 2,200 youth into society.(74)
Project to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Punjab Provincial Child Labor Unit program that provides non-formal education and literacy services to children in the worst forms of child labor in four Punjab districts. Provides livelihood services to target families and improve working conditions.(101)
Education Program for Children of Brick Kiln Workers*	ILO-funded project implemented by the Government of Punjab to provide free education to children of brick kiln workers, enrolls children in school and provides them with free school bags and books. Covers all brick kilns in the Punjab Province.(102)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues*	USDOL-funded project, implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in Pakistan.(103)
Education Voucher Scheme‡	Punjab Educational Foundation program that provides stipends to students from low-income areas to attend private schools.(14, 104)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Pakistan.

‡ Program is funded by the Provincial Government of Punjab.

In 2015, the Government of Punjab conducted a survey of brick kilns in the district and found 23,000 children residing at 6,600 brick kilns. The survey resulted in the enrollment of 18,622 brick kiln children in school.(105)

The social programs of the Federal and Provincial Governments are insufficient to address the prevalence and scope of Pakistan's child labor problem. Existing programs also do not provide enough protection and rehabilitation services for bonded laborers and victims of human trafficking.(33) Government initiatives are needed to specifically target child domestic workers and child labor in the informal sector. Additional social programs are also necessary to raise awareness and provide assistance to children used by non-state militant groups to engage in armed conflict.(43, 64)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Pakistan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2015
	Establish a minimum age for employment that is harmonized with the compulsory education age.	2009 – 2015
	Create comprehensive prohibitions against additional specific hazardous activities and clearly establish a minimum age of 18 for hazardous work.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that relevant child labor laws and regulations apply equally to children working in all sectors, regardless of the size of the establishment.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that the law criminalizes child trafficking in compliance with international standards, including internal trafficking within Pakistan.	2011 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law criminalizes the use of both female and male children in all forms of commercial sexual exploitation, including child pornography and pornographic performances and prostitution.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that the law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including in producing and trafficking of drugs.	2011 – 2015
	Prohibit the recruitment and use of children by non-state groups for armed conflict.	2015
Enforcement	Collect and publish enforcement data for child labor violations and criminal violations of laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Provide the funding necessary to adequately hire, train, and equip inspectors and investigators to enforce laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2015
	Allow labor inspectors in all Provinces to conduct inspections and assess penalties at any time, without notice.	2011 – 2015
	Ensure that fines and penalties are sufficient to deter employers from violating child labor laws.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that referral mechanisms exist among labor investigators, law enforcement officers, and child protection services in all Provinces.	2014 – 2015
	Ensure that vigilance committees are established and active throughout Pakistan.	2013 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the education and development policies of the Federal and Provincial Governments.	2014 – 2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children have access to free and compulsory education, as required by law.	2011 – 2015
	Conduct child labor surveys at the Federal and Provincial levels.	2009 – 2015
	Increase the size and scope of government programs to reach children working in the worst forms of child labor, including domestic work, bonded child laborers, and victims of human trafficking.	2009 – 2015
	Implement programs to raise awareness of and provide assistance to children used by non-state militant groups to engage in armed conflict.	2011 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. Panama

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Panama made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers and adopted a policy framework document on the elimination of child labor in domestic work. The Ministry of Labor conducted 1,337 child labor inspections, 429 more child labor inspections than the 908 conducted in the previous year. The Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers also updated the Roadmap towards the Elimination of Child Labor to outline interagency action plans and budgets for 2015 and 2016-2019. In addition, the Ministry of Education began construction to improve the infrastructure of 1,000 schools in indigenous areas experiencing high prevalence of child labor and challenges accessing education. However, children in Panama continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Panamanian law does not adequately define light work and allows minors under age 16 to engage in hazardous work within training establishments. Moreover, the labor inspectorate has insufficient funding and inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws to prevent the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Panama are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Panama.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.7 (32,858)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	94.9

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Panama are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, mainly in tourist areas in Panama City and in beach communities.(3, 7) According to the results of Panama’s 2014 biennial Survey on Child Labor, the highest prevalence of child labor is in autonomous indigenous areas, followed by the provinces of Bocas del Toro and Darién.(1) Panamanian children of indigenous descent face barriers to accessing education, including having to travel significant distances to reach school and experiencing the frequent interruption of their education due to family migration to work in agriculture. Ngäbe Buglé indigenous children journey with their families from Panama to Costa Rica and participate in the harvest of coffee beans.(3, 4, 6, 13, 14, 39-43) Panamanian girls from indigenous communities are subjected to forced domestic work. The ILO Committee of Experts has noted that children from indigenous and Afro-Panamanian communities are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, recommending government efforts to ensure their social integration and access to education.(8, 44)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Panama has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

In 2015, Panama ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers.(45)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 70 of the Constitution; Articles 508, 509, and 716 of the Family Code; Articles 117, 119, and 123 of the Labor Code (46-48)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 510 of the Family Code; Article 203 of the Penal Code; Article 4 of Executive Decree No. 19 of 2006; Article 118 of the Labor Code (47-50)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 2 and 3 of Executive Decree No. 19 of 2006; Article 118 of the Labor Code; Article 510 of the Family Code (47, 48, 50)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 157, 158, 205-208, and 456 of the Penal Code; Article 489 of the Family Code; Article 21 of the Constitution (46, 47, 49, 51)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 205-208 and 456 of the Penal Code; Article 489.17 of the Family Code (47, 49, 51)

Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 34 and 45 of the Law on Education; Article 489 of the Family Code; Article 95 of the Constitution (46, 47, 52, 53)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 34 and 41 of the Law on Education; Article 95 of the Constitution (46, 52, 53)

† No standing military (46, 54)

Although the Constitution, Family Code, and Labor Code set the minimum age for employment at 14, the Family Code and Labor Code specify exceptions for domestic and agricultural work.(46-48) Article 716 of the Family Code permits children ages 12 to 14 to perform domestic and agricultural work as regulated by the Labor Code.(47) Article 119 of the Labor Code allows children ages 12 to 15 to perform light work in agriculture if the work is outside regular school hours, and Article 123 allows children over the age of 12 to perform light domestic work. However, the Labor Code does not define the kinds of tasks children may perform as light work or the total number of hours they may work.(48)

Article 118 of the Labor Code and Article 510 of the Family Code allow minors to perform hazardous work in training establishments, when the work is approved by the competent government authority and carried out under its supervision, but neither law establishes a minimum age for this work.(47, 48)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MITRADEL)	Enforce child labor laws through two directorates with direct authority over child labor matters: the Directorate Against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers (DIRETIPPAT) and the Labor Inspection Directorate.(27) The Labor Inspection Directorate carries out labor inspections in establishments and sites where children may be working, particularly in the formal sector. DIRETIPPAT is a supervising entity responsible for overseeing the fulfillment of laws related to working children in the formal and informal sectors and plans and executes public policies; carries out education programs on child labor for employers, parents, and children; and coordinates the implementation of the National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Young Workers.(11, 27, 55-57) Refer cases of children found in exploitative work to the Child and Adolescent Courts or to the National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNIAF).(11, 27)
Attorney General's Office	Investigate and prosecute crimes of sexual exploitation. Investigations initiated by the Judicial Investigative Directorate; cases passed to the prosecutors.(58)
Public Ministry's Organized Crime Unit	Investigate human trafficking cases and operate a unit dedicated to investigating trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation.(11)
National Commission for the Prevention of Crimes of Sexual Exploitation (CONAPREDES)	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation.(31) Coordinate, advise, and implement policies related to sexual exploitation, as well as study related trends and prevalence. Promote public policies for the prevention and eradication of sexual exploitation through specific actions, projects, and programs.(59) Members include the Attorney General as well as the Ministries of Labor, Education, Social Development, and Health. Refer cases of sexual exploitation to the Attorney General's Office.(26, 59)
SENNIAF	Conduct inspections to identify children and adolescents engaged in child labor, particularly in the informal sector.(2) Enhance the capacity of government agencies and NGOs to address child labor by monitoring and coordinating a network of government services that address the needs of vulnerable populations. Promote education as a means to eliminate poverty.(27, 34) Run shelters for victims of human trafficking, including minors.(60)

Organization/Agency	Role
Childhood and Adolescence Police	Conduct inspections to identify children and adolescents engaged in child labor, particularly in the informal sector.(2) Support SENNIACF inspections in areas with high rates of child labor.(34)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Panama took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor (MITRADEL) conducted 1,337 child labor inspections, an increase from the 908 child labor inspections MITRADEL conducted in 2014.(3) In 2015, the Directorate Against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers removed 1,508 children and adolescents from the streets and hazardous work, incorporating 1,335 of these children and adolescents into the Direct Government Action Program.(3) MITRADEL reported that the 2015 budget of $905,123.00 allocated to the Directorate Against Child Labor and for the Protection of Adolescent Workers was insufficient to meet its commitments for coordination, implementation, and monitoring related to child labor.(62)

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Panama should employ roughly 106 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(63-65) MITRADEL noted that the number of labor inspectors employed and labor inspections conducted in 2015 were insufficient to adequately enforce labor laws.(3) Civil society groups have stated that labor inspections in Panama focus primarily on the formal sector, leaving children in the informal sector vulnerable.(6, 7) Moreover, unannounced labor inspections are not conducted in agricultural areas outside of Panama City.(3) MITRADEL has also indicated that Article 125 of the Labor Code sanctions fines ranging from $50 to $700 for child labor violations but does not specify whether the employer can be charged this amount per each affected worker.(2, 3, 7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Panama took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Although member agencies of the National Commission for the Prevention of Crimes of Sexual Exploitation receive training to carry out covert organized crime operations related to commercial sexual exploitation, turnover in personnel has resulted in a lack of permanently trained staff at the National Commission for the Prevention of Crimes of Sexual Exploitation.(31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers	Coordinate various efforts to combat child labor. Led by the First Lady of Panama and includes MITRADEL; the ministries of Education, Health, and Agriculture; and representatives from civil society and organizations of workers and employers.(59) Conduct a National Child Labor Survey every 2 years.(3) In 2015, updated the Roadmap towards the Elimination of Child Labor to define interagency coordination, action plans, and budgets for the periods of 2015 and 2016–2019.(67-69) Also in 2015, adopted a protective policy framework document on the elimination of child labor in domestic work and the protection of young domestic workers of legal working age.(70)
CONAPREDES	Coordinate government efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Office of the Attorney General and includes members from the ministries of Labor, Education, Social Development, and Health.(71) Conduct investigations in the area of sexual exploitation.(31)
SENNIAF	Enhance government and NGO capacity to address child labor by creating a network of services that addresses the needs of vulnerable populations and by promoting education as a means to eliminate poverty.(27, 34)
Subcommittee to Combat Child Labor	Incorporate Panamanian Institute for Sports and the Ministry of Education in efforts to address child labor and its causes.(7, 57, 72)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Panama has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap towards the Elimination of Child Labor (2011–2019)	Aims to eliminate all forms of child labor in Panama by 2020 by strengthening anti-poverty, health, and educational programs and policies.(67-69)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and was signed by Panama at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(73, 74)

Policy	Description
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In December 2015, the Government of Panama participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(75, 76) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(75, 77)
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Sexual Commercial Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Aims to prevent and eliminate the sexual commercial exploitation of children and adolescents, including by providing services to victims, strengthening CONAPREDES, and raising awareness. Implemented by CONAPREDES, with support from the Public Ministry.(24, 26, 27, 59)
National Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2012–2017)	Aims to combat human trafficking through prevention, victim assistance, and international cooperation. Includes provisions to protect child victims of human trafficking.(78)
Declaration of the Vice-Ministers of the XX Regional Conference on Migration†	Aims to strengthen regional cooperation to protect the human rights of migrants, especially youth and children, in countries of origin, transit, and destination, including by increasing opportunities for education and employment. Adopted by Panama at the XX Regional Conference on Migration in Mexico City (November 2015).(79, 80) In 2015, Panama participated in two meetings with the Ad Hoc Group on Migrant Children and Adolescents of the Regional Conference on Migration to identify ways for member states to increase protections for underage migrants and refugees. These meetings promoted the exchange of information on migrant children's rights and experiences, guiding principles relating to migration, and the holistic protection of children and adolescents.(81)
Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama*† (2015–2020)	Aims to strengthen dialogue between the Governments of Costa Rica and Panama on labor migration between the two countries, with an emphasis on indigenous Panamanian migrant workers, to ensure social protection of migrant workers and their families. Establishes a bilateral technical committee to promote joint action to combat human trafficking, exchange information, and develop cooperative strategies and projects.(82)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Panama funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Direct Government Action Program for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor†	MITRADEL program implemented through the Institute for Training and Utilization of Human Resources that provides a network of social and economic services to child workers and children at risk of child labor. Services include provision of food and scholarships, support of sports activities, and social monitoring.(7, 12, 83, 84) Scholarships for schooling provided to approximately 5,500 children.(85) Achieved nationwide coverage in 2014.(2, 7)
Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor†	SENNIAF program that identifies children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, removes them from exploitative situations, and connects them to a network of social and economic services offered by the Government.(26, 34)
National Council of Private Businesses (CoNEP) Corporate Social Responsibility Program	Joint effort created by MITRADEL and the National Council of Private Businesses that involves a partnership with businesses across Panama to sign the Voluntary Agreement of Corporate Social Responsibility to prevent and eradicate child labor.(86, 87)
MITRADEL and Fundación Telefónica Cooperative Agreement (2014–2016)	MITRADEL public-private partnership with Telefónica Móviles Panamá S.A. to prevent and eliminate child labor by improving access to education and providing trainings to teachers and private employers.(7, 88)
Building Effective Policies Against Child Labor in Ecuador and Panama (2012–2016)	USDOL-funded, $3.5-million, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to strengthen policies for the identification and referral of child labor cases and the enforcement of child labor and occupational safety laws in Panama.(89, 90)

Program	Description
EducaFuturo (2012–2016)	USDOL-funded, $6.5-million, 4-year project implemented by Partners of the Americas to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most vulnerable populations, including Afro-descendants and migrant and indigenous children, by providing them with educational and livelihood services in Panama. The project targets approximately 1,800 children, 500 youth, and 600 households.(91)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to strengthen legal protections and delivery of social services for child domestic workers in Panama.(92)
National Child Labor Survey†	Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers survey conducted every 2 years by the National Institute of Statistics and Census with funding from SENNIAF and MITRADEL. Results from the 2014 survey were released in February 2015.(3, 93)
Prevention and Care for Child and Adolescent Victims of Sexual Violence†	SENNIAF program that identifies children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, removes them from exploitative situations, and provides them with social services. Conducts training workshops nationwide for professionals providing direct care to child and adolescent victims of sexual violence.(94)
Blue Heart Campaign against Human Trafficking	Government of Panama and UNODC campaign to combat human trafficking through awareness raising. Activities include social media campaigns, workshops, forums, and trainings for civil society and government officials.(60, 95, 96)
Network of Opportunities†	Ministry of Social Development program that provides conditional cash transfers to families in extreme poverty, conditioned on their children's participation in health and education services and the acquisition of a birth certificate. Offers training to beneficiaries to improve income-generating opportunities.(26, 97)

† Program is funded by the Government of Panama.

In 2015, the Ministry of Education began construction of 1,000 schools in the Ngäbe Buglé autonomous indigenous area to replace existing schools with poor infrastructure. However, access to education remained a challenge for indigenous children during the reporting period.(4) Although Panama has programs that reach children from indigenous and Afro-Panamanian communities, the scope of these programs is insufficient and these children remain vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(8, 44)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Panama (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish regulations that define the number of hours and types of activities that children between the ages of 12 and 14 can undertake as light work to ensure they are not exposed to hazardous labor.	2009 – 2015
	Ensure that only minors age 16 and older who have received adequate, specific instruction or vocational training are permitted to perform hazardous work, and that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected.	2013 – 2015
Enforcement	Make information on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review publicly available.	2015
	Allocate sufficient funding for DIRETIPPAT to meet its commitments for coordination, implementation, and monitoring related to child labor.	2014 – 2015
	Employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce laws related to child labor and to address child labor in the informal sector and agricultural areas outside of Panama City.	2014 – 2015
	Strengthen the inspection system by conducting unannounced inspections in agricultural areas outside of Panama City.	2015
	Clarify whether fines for child labor violations, as sanctioned in Article 125 of the Labor Code, may be applied for each affected worker.	2014 – 2015
	Revise CONAPREDES assignment policies to address high turnover in personnel and ensure staff are trained to investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation.	2011 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Coordination Agreement on Labor Migration between the Ministries of Labor of Costa Rica and Panama.	2015
Social Programs	Expand existing programs to ensure children from indigenous and Afro-Panamanian communities have access to education.	2014 – 2015

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary. Total. [accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 63. Central Intelligence Agency. The World Factbook, CIA, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
64. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
65. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and,

- ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Papua New Guinea

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Papua New Guinea made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the country's first National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor and commenced implementation of a new social program aimed at identifying children working on the street and ensuring that they are returned to safe living situations and to school. However, children in Papua New Guinea are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Papua New Guinea's labor laws do not specifically define the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children, and the minimum age at which children are permitted to engage in light work is not in compliance with international standards. The labor inspectorate lacks the training and resources necessary to effectively enforce laws related to child labor. Additionally, there is no compulsory age for education in Papua New Guinea, which increases the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Papua New Guinea are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Papua New Guinea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		78.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working on tea,* coffee,* cocoa,* copra,* oil palm,* and rubber plantations* (1, 7)
Services	Domestic work (1, 2, 4, 7)
	Street work, including vending, chopping firewood for sale,* moving furniture,* scavenging for scrap metal and scrap food for pig feed,* and begging* (1, 3, 7-12)
	Work in markets, including unloading and carrying heavy bags of food (7, 10, 12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, including working in bars,* nightclubs, and brothels,* and used in the production of pornography,* each sometimes as a result of trafficking (1, 2, 4, 7, 12)
	Forced domestic work (1-4, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Papua New Guinea, children are trafficked within the country for commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 4) Children from rural areas are sometimes sent to live with relatives or “host” families in cities, where they engage in domestic work.(13) In some cases, these children are forced to perform domestic services to pay off family debts.(1, 2, 12, 14) Child domestic workers in situations of indentured servitude lack freedom of mobility, work long hours, do not have access to medical treatment, and do not attend school.(2)

Some reports indicate that the threat of gender-based sexual harassment and violence prevents many girls from attending school.(12, 15, 16) Although the Government has established a free education policy, in practice, many schools charge fees for books, uniforms, and other supplies.(4, 17-20) These additional school fees are a barrier to education and may make children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Papua New Guinea has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 103 of the Employment Act (21)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 10 and 96 of the Child Bill (Lukautim Pikinini); Sections 104–105 of the Employment Act (17, 21)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 43 of the Constitution of the Independent State of Papua New Guinea; Section 208 of the Criminal Code Amendment Act (22, 23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 208 of the Criminal Code Amendment Act (23)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 229J–229O and 229R–229T of the Criminal Code (Sexual Offenses and Crimes Against Children Act) (24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16	Section 30 of the Defense Act (25)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

* No conscription (26)

Papua New Guinea has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Department of Labor and Industrial Relations (DLIR) has been developing a hazardous work list since late 2012 to include in

Papua New Guinea

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

amendments to the Employment Act and the Occupational Safety and Health Act.(1, 8, 27) Parliament, however, did not adopt legislation related to hazardous child labor during the reporting period.(3)

According to the Employment Act, children ages 11 to 16 may be allowed to work under certain conditions. The minimum age of 11 for light work is not in compliance with international standards, and the law does not specify the types of activities in which light work may be permitted or prescribe the number of hours per week that this work may be undertaken.(21) Papua New Guinea also does not have laws that prohibit using, procuring, or offering a child for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.(27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor and Industrial Relations (DLIR)	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(16)
Department of Religion, Youth, and Community Development	Enforce the Child Bill (Lukautim Pikinini). (16)
Royal Papua New Guinea Constabulary Sexual Offenses Squad	Enforce laws against commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities.(16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Papua New Guinea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2014	2015

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	No (7)	No (7)

Labor inspectors sometimes carry out routine inspections in hazardous workplaces or in the manufacturing sector; however, due to limited capacity, the DLIR reported that labor inspectors generally respond only to specific child labor complaints.(3, 7) Both the ILO Committee of Experts and senior staff at the Department of Religion, Youth, and Community Development have noted that inadequate resources and cultural acceptance of child labor limit the effectiveness of child labor law enforcement.(27, 29, 30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Papua New Guinea took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015
Training for Investigators
■ Initial Training for New Employees	Unknown	Yes (7)
■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (31)	N/A
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown	Yes (7)

Number of Violations Found	0 (16, 30)	3 (32)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (16, 30)	0 (32)
Number of Convictions	0 (16, 30)	0 (32)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	No (31)	No (32)

In 2015, the Department of Justice and the Attorney General incorporated instruction on the topic of human trafficking into its countrywide training programs. The Papua New Guinea Customs service also provided anti-human trafficking training as part of a training course held in September.(32) During the reporting period, the National Human Trafficking Committee drafted standard operating procedures for a National Referral Mechanism to assist victims of human trafficking, including children. Although these procedures were piloted in 2015, they have not yet been finalized or officially endorsed.(32)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism to combat human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Human Trafficking Committee	Coordinate efforts to combat trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Department of Justice and the Attorney General.(31) Includes representatives from the Office of the Prime Minister, the Department for National Planning and Monitoring, the Immigration and Citizenship Service Authority, Customs, the Royal Papua New Guinea Constabulary, the DLIR, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the National Council of Women, the Consultative Implementation and Monitoring Council, the State Solicitor's office, the Department of Provincial and Local Government Affairs, the Department for Community Development, various NGOs, the IOM, the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR), the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCHR), UNICEF, UN Women, and the U.S. Embassy Port Moresby.(30)

Coordination mechanisms that were expected to launch in 2012 were still pending during the 2015 reporting period. The DLIR Child Labor Desk, designed to track child labor cases and facilitate coordination among relevant agencies, was not yet in place.(7, 16) The Secretary of DLIR did not sign the endorsement necessary to establish the Project Advisory Committee, a permanent, interagency committee on child labor.(7, 16, 33)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Papua New Guinea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor in Papua New Guinea†	Establishes a comprehensive framework to coordinate government efforts to reduce and eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Papua New Guinea. Includes four strategic objectives: mainstreaming child labor and the worst forms of child labor in social and economic policies, legislation, and programs; improving the knowledge base; implementing effective prevention, protection, rehabilitation, and reintegration measures; and strengthening the technical, institutional, and human resource capacity of stakeholders.(34)

Papua New Guinea

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Policy	Description
Universal Basic Education Plan (2010–2019)*	Seeks to ensure that all children complete 9 years of basic, quality education, starting at age 6; to reduce poverty through education; and to build Government capacity to manage education.(18) Key objectives include improving infrastructure; increasing access to safe drinking water and sanitation facilities at school; providing teacher training; providing over-age children with access to basic education; and abolishing all school fees.(18, 35)
Tuition Fee-Free Policy*	Aims to improve access to education by abolishing school fees for children in grades 1 through 10 and providing subsidies for students in grades 11 and 12.(3, 20)
Vision 2050*	Establishes a long-term socioeconomic strategy for Papua New Guinea. Pillars of the plan include human capital development and gender, youth, and people empowerment.(36) Prioritizes access to education, knowledge, and improved technology; community empowerment; access to credit; the inclusion of more individuals in the formal economy; and equitable development in rural areas, where poverty is most pronounced.(36)
Medium-Term Development Plan (2011–2015)*	Established a 5-year plan for national development, in line with Vision 2050.(37) Prioritized education and public utility infrastructure improvements.(37)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the National Human Trafficking Committee finalized the country's first Trafficking in Persons National Action Plan, which was jointly drafted by the Department of Justice and the Attorney General and the IOM.(31, 32) The plan will not be enforceable, however, until it is endorsed by the Papua New Guinea National Executive Council.(32)

Although Papua New Guinea's Universal Basic Education Plan includes the goal of establishing 3 years of mandatory schooling for children until age 9, the Government has not yet enacted an enforceable policy for compulsory education. The lack of standards in this area increases the risk of children's involvement in child labor, as children are not required to be in school nor are they allowed to legally work until age 16.(8, 33)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Papua New Guinea funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2013–2015)	Implemented by the Government, the Trade Union Congress, and the Employers' Federation through technical assistance from the ILO and cooperation with the Government of Australia. Seeks to establish a national employment strategy.(38) Explicitly recognizes the relationship between education and child labor and prioritizes youth employment services.(38) Concrete measures to be taken include finalizing child labor provisions in the draft Employment Bill, drafting a hazardous work list, and formalizing the Child Labor Unit in the DLIR. Includes a youth employment initiative that provides business training to out-of-school youth, particularly those who are marginalized or disabled.(38)
Urban Youth Employment Project† (2011–2016)	Jointly funded Government and World Bank project that aims to provide training, temporary jobs, skill development through apprenticeships, and 2-month placements on public works projects for youth. Targets 13,500 disadvantaged youth in and around Port Moresby.(39)
Safe Care Homes Project*†	Government project implemented in collaboration with partners, including World Vision, that seeks to identify children working on the streets and return them to their parents and to school. Receives referrals of children in need of further protection.(40)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Papua New Guinea.

During the reporting period, Papua New Guinea Government officials, civil society organizations, representatives from worker and employer organizations, and the media participated in an ILO-sponsored Sub-regional Forum on Combating Child Labor and Trafficking. Representatives from five Pacific Island nations shared knowledge, practical experiences, and innovative approaches to address the worst forms of child labor.(13) As a result, tripartite partners in Papua New Guinea identified priority areas for action, including the institutionalization of a Child Labor Unit in the DLIR.(13)

Although the Government has implemented programs that address children engaged in street work, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children involved in commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, or agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Papua New Guinea (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, and the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2014 – 2015
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2015
	Raise the minimum age for light work to 13 to comply with international standards and ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2015 – 2015
	Ensure that the law specifically prohibits the use, procuring, and offering of children for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Make data on labor law enforcement publicly available, including the number of child labor violations found and the number of penalties imposed and collected.	2014 – 2015
	Institutionalize training for labor inspectors, including training for new labor inspectors at the beginning of their employment and subsequent refresher courses.	2015
	Establish a mechanism to receive child labor complaints.	2015
	Strengthen the inspection system by ensuring that inspectors conduct routine or targeted inspections in addition to those that are complaint driven.	2014 – 2015
	Provide inspectors with the resources necessary to enforce labor laws and other laws required to protect children from the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2015
	Establish a referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social services agencies to ensure that victims of child labor, including in its worst forms, receive appropriate support services.	2014 – 2015
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2015
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2013 – 2015
	Endorse the National Action Plan to address trafficking in persons issues, including the trafficking of children.	2015
	Implement the Universal Basic Education Plan to ensure that basic education is compulsory for all children and that the compulsory education age is equivalent to or greater than the legal minimum age for employment.	2009 – 2015
Social Programs	Institute programs that address the issue of sexual violence in schools to ensure that children, especially girls, are able to safely access education.	2014 – 2015
	Monitor schools to ensure that extra educational fees are not imposed on children for the mandated term of free education, as defined by national policy.	2014 – 2015
	Institute programs that assist children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in all relevant occupations or activities, especially commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work.	2010 – 2015

This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio

In 2015, Paraguay made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government raised the minimum age for employment in domestic work to 18 and introduced legislation that would create specialized child and adolescent courts. The labor inspectorate hired and trained 30 new labor inspectors and formalized an agreement with the ILO to develop child labor training modules for inspectors. The National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate the Exploitation of Children coordinated interagency meetings to draft legislation to address the worst forms of child labor and develop magistrate training to strengthen the enforcement of child labor laws. The National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents launched a national awareness-raising campaign on commercial sexual exploitation of children and opened a shelter for child and adolescent victims of human trafficking. However, children in Paraguay are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in cattle raising and domestic work. The funding and reach of existing social programs and law enforcement agencies are insufficient to fully address the worst forms of child labor, particularly in rural areas.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Paraguay are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in cattle raising and domestic work.(1-9) The 2011 National Survey of Child and Adolescent Activities found that 21 percent of all Paraguayan children are engaged in hazardous work and that approximately 91 percent of all working children perform hazardous tasks, such as carrying heavy loads or using dangerous tools.(1) A 2011 study on child labor in Paraguay’s sugarcane sector estimated that children comprise more than 25 percent of the sugarcane workforce, and about one out of four of those children suffer injuries twice a year, on average, while working.(10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Paraguay.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The practice of criadazgo, a system whereby middle-class and wealthy families informally employ and house young domestic workers from impoverished families, is pervasive in Paraguay. NGOs have noted that domestic workers are particularly vulnerable to being trafficked for sexual exploitation and reported that 60 percent of rescued trafficking victims began working as domestic servants as minors.(14, 23, 28) Children from poor rural areas, in particular the Departments of Caaguazú and Alto Paraná, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and domestic servitude, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking, in the border areas with Argentina and Brazil and in urban areas, including Asunción, Ciudad del Este, Encarnación, and Filadelfia.(4, 5, 18, 28) The Government acknowledged the recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed groups, including the Paraguayan People’s Army and the Armed Peasant Association. Some children were recruited at the age of 14 or younger to serve as lookouts or to carry supplies and later were incorporated as full-time combatants.(6, 8, 9, 23, 28, 29) Children work alongside their parents in debt bondage on cattle ranches in the remote Chaco region.(3, 7)

The 2011 National Survey of Child and Adolescent Activities indicates that children who speak Guaraní exclusively are more likely to be involved in child labor and have higher rates of school absence as compared to other working children; poverty is pervasive in rural Paraguay, where Guaraní is the predominant language.(1, 30) School buses or other forms of public transportation are limited in rural areas. The Government has noted that girls from rural areas leave school at an earlier age than boys and estimated that 50 percent of children with disabilities could not attend school due to lack of access to public transportation.(6, 9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Paraguay has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 76 of the Constitution; Article 32 of the General Education Law No. 1264 (38, 44)

In 2015, the Government of Paraguay raised the minimum age for domestic work from 16 to 18 through passage of Law No. 5407 on Domestic Work.(33, 36, 46) Also in 2015, the Paraguayan Congress introduced legislation to create specialized child and adolescent courts and strengthen the ability of the Judicial Branch to address the worst forms of child labor.(8)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforce laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor, inspect workplaces for child labor, and fine companies found in violation of labor laws. Refer cases involving criminal violation of child labor to the Public Ministry or the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents (SNNA).(3, 8)
National Police	Maintain a special unit of 33 police officers who handle complaints regarding trafficking in persons, including children, with offices in five cities.(3, 8)

Organization/Agency	Role
The Public Ministry (Prosecutor's Office)	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. Investigate and prosecute violators based on complaints, its own information, or referrals from the MTESS and other agencies, such as the SNNA and the Public Defender's Office.(3) Maintain Special Directorate to Fight the Trafficking of Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children that works with local prosecutors nationwide to prosecute human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation crimes.(3)
SNNA	Maintain a unit dedicated to fighting child trafficking.(3, 8) Sponsor a hotline to report cases of human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children; provide social services to trafficking victims upon receiving referrals from law enforcement agencies.(24)
The Public Defender's Office	Maintain the Specialized Unit to Combat Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents.(47)
Attorney General's Office	Investigate and prosecute cases of child labor involving human trafficking through the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit. The unit is composed of 3 specialized prosecutors based in Asunción, who work with local prosecutors nationwide, and 35 assistants.(8)
Ministry of Women's Affairs	Provide social services to female victims of human trafficking, half of whom are estimated to be children. House an office dedicated to combating trafficking of children and staffed with five dedicated personnel.(3, 8, 24)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Paraguay took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

According to the ILO's recommendation of one inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Paraguay should employ roughly 216 inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(51-53)

In 2015, the Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) hired 30 additional labor inspectors, of whom 12 will be assigned to regional offices, and formalized an agreement with the ILO to develop child labor training modules for inspectors. However, government agencies, international organizations, NGOs, and labor organizations agree that the funding for the labor inspectorate and the total number of labor inspectors remain inadequate to address child labor in Paraguay, particularly in the informal sector.(8, 14) The inspectorate is particularly limited by the lack of dedicated vehicles or travel funds.(8, 14) An additional constraint to labor law enforcement is the legal requirement that the Public Ministry and the MTESS secure a search warrant from a judge if an employer does not permit their entrance for a workplace inspection. There is a lack of efficient and timely cooperation by judicial authorities in granting workplace inspection search warrants, as the system is paper-based and orders routinely take more than 3 months to arrive.(3, 8, 14, 54) In 2015, the MTESS continued negotiations with the Supreme Court to create an electronic filing and communication system, allowing judges to submit and receive legal orders and information requests more quickly.(8, 14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Paraguay took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2014	2015

■ Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	Yes (48)
■ Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (28)	Yes (48)
Number of Investigations	Unknown	68 (48)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	28 (28)	60 (48)
Number of Convictions	16 (28)	35 (48)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	Yes (8)

In 2015, the MTESS referred three child labor cases to the Attorney General’s Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit.(8) During the reporting period, members of a joint task force, composed of military personnel, national police, and the national anti-drug secretariat, coordinated to identify and detain three child soldiers in the San Pedro and Amambay Departments.(8) The Government placed the children, between the ages of 13 and 15, in juvenile detention facilities and assigned them a specialized public defender in children’s rights. Government representatives from several human rights units agreed to charge them. (48)

Government agencies, international organizations, NGOs, and labor organizations have observed that more specialized prosecutors are needed to support local prosecutors nationwide and to increase the Public Ministry’s ability to investigate and prosecute child labor cases involving human trafficking.(8, 14) The Special Directorate to Fight the Trafficking of Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children has insufficient resources, including vehicles, fuel, and logistical support, to carry out investigations, particularly in remote areas, such as the Chaco region, where the worst forms of child labor, human trafficking, and debt bondage are most prevalent. Overall, Paraguay’s law enforcement agencies lack resources, including staff and training, to sufficiently identify, investigate, and prosecute cases of the worst forms of child labor; as a result, the number of convictions of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor is insufficient, and the existing penalties are inadequate deterrents.(3, 8, 14, 55) Furthermore, there is a lack of formal referral mechanisms for agencies that receive complaints related to the worst forms of child labor, such as the National Secretariat for Children and Adolescents, to refer cases to prosecutors in the Attorney General’s Office.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate the Exploitation of Children (CONAETI)	Lead government efforts against child labor and include representatives from the MTESS, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Women’s Affairs, the SNNA, and other government agencies, as well as labor union representatives, industry associations, and NGOs.(3, 56) In 2015, CONAETI and the MTESS met with Congressional representatives, the Attorney General’s office, and the Human Rights office of the Supreme Court to draft legislation that prohibits and establishes specific penalties for criadazgo. CONAETI also organized eight workshops for the Judicial branch and the SNNA to update the magistrate training curriculum to include legal courses related to the enforcement of child labor laws.(8, 48)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (National Council)	Establish policies to protect children’s rights and approve specific programs aimed at children and adolescents.(3, 56)
Inter-Institutional Working Group on Preventing and Combating Human Trafficking	Coordinate interagency efforts to combat all forms of trafficking in persons, including child trafficking. Headed by the Ministry of Foreign Relations.(3, 18, 56)

Paraguay

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Defense Councils for the Rights of Children and Adolescents	Coordinate government efforts to protect children's rights at the municipal level, including by maintaining a registry of children and youth involved in economic activities and coordinating with vocational training programs for adolescent workers.(3, 31)
National Commission of Fundamental Labor Rights and Prevention of Forced Labor	Include representatives of employers, unions, and government agencies, such as the MTESS.(14)

Although the National Commission to Prevent and Eradicate the Exploitation of Children organized several interagency efforts on child labor in 2015, in general, government coordination—including between the Ministries of Education and Health—is done on an informal basis and remains insufficient to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 5, 8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Paraguay has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents (2010–2015)	Provides access to free, quality education for child laborers and livelihood alternatives for their families. Raises public awareness of child labor and improves enforcement of child labor laws.(3, 56)
National Plan for Development (2014–2030)	Includes goals for reducing child labor as part of broader efforts to reduce social exclusion and poverty. Includes the Embrace Program, which specifically aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor.(14, 57)
National Plan on Human Rights	Includes components on child labor, forced labor, and indigenous child labor. Was established in 2012 and has no expiration date.(3)
Inter-Institutional Agreement on Government Procurement	Seeks to ensure that any goods or services procured by the Government are not produced through child labor. Was established between SNNA and the National Bureau for Public Contracts.(58)
MERCOSUR Social Labor Declaration of 2015†	Aims to promote decent work and sustainable development in the five member states of MERCOSUR, in part through commitments to uphold core labor standards, including the elimination of forced labor, the prevention and elimination of child labor, and the protection of adolescent work. Signed in Brasilia, Brazil in July 2015.(59, 60)
MERCOSUR United Against Child Labor Campaign	Develops public awareness about the need to combat child labor in MERCOSUR. Addresses child labor in agriculture, domestic work, and sexual exploitation, with particular emphasis on communities along country borders.(61)
Second Presidential Declaration on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in MERCOSUR	Promotes greater coordination between governmental agencies, levels of government, and with civil society among MERCOSUR members.(62, 63)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor; by improving country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children; and by exchanging best practices.(64)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Paraguay at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru, in October 2014.(65, 66)
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Paraguay participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(67, 68) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(67, 69)

†Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In November 2015, USDOL and the MTESS signed a letter of understanding, noting their intent to collaborate on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor, increase educational and livelihood opportunities for vulnerable children and their families, and improve labor law enforcement and working conditions in Paraguay, with a particular focus on the Department of Guairá.(70, 71)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Paraguay funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Program on the Eradication of Child Labor	$4.5 million Government of Spain–funded, 3-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to combat child labor.(72)
Partnership Program to Eliminate Child Labor	$2.3 million Government of Brazil–funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to combat child labor.(72)
Shout Program	Ministry of Education and Culture/ILO program to raise awareness about child labor among students and teachers to help school administrators identify child laborers and prevent children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(14, 56)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded, capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor in Paraguay.(73)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity of the Government to conduct research in this area. In 2015, Paraguay's Department of Statistics, Surveys and Censuses trained enumerators and implemented the first stage of the pilot survey in two departments. (74, 75)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011–2017)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Paraguay.(76)
Paraguay Okakuaa (Paraguay Progresses) (2015–2019)*	$6 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Partners of the Americas to combat child labor, improve labor law enforcement, and improve working conditions in Paraguay, with a focus on the Department of Guairá and a particular emphasis on providing opportunities to adolescent girls. Aims to improve data systems on labor law enforcement, increase interagency collaboration, and implement education and training programs that will benefit approximately 1,650 children and 1,350 families.(71)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Regional initiative to conduct prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(77)
Southern Child Initiative (Niñ@sur)	Regional initiative to carry out public campaigns against commercial sexual exploitation, human trafficking, and child labor. Also, facilitates technical assistance to improve domestic legal frameworks to comply with international standards on those issues and supports the exchange of best practices related to victim protection and assistance.(78, 79)
Trafficking in Persons Shelter*†	Joint SNNA and religious organization program to provide housing, food, and psychological and educational assistance for up to 12 child and adolescent victims of human trafficking.(5) SNNA staff include three educators, a psychologist, and a pedagogy specialist living onsite and working with victims. Inaugurated in October 2015 and currently serving 10 victims.(5)
Combating Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Girls, Boys and Adolescents in Trips and Tourism*†	National campaign of the National Secretariat for Tourism and the Association of Female Tourism Executives to raise awareness on protecting children from commercial sexual exploitation. In 2015, provided awareness-raising materials for Asunción taxis and ran a series of public outreach events in the cities of Asunción, Salto de Guairá, and Curuguaty.(5)

Program	Description
Embrace Program (Programa Abrazo)†	SNNA program to assist children engaged in exploitative work by providing them and their families with health and education services, food deliveries, and cash transfers conditioned on children's school attendance and withdrawal from work.(56) Works closely with NGO Fortalecer in the implementation of ILO-IPEC programs and with the Sugarcane Growers' Association, Ministry of Education and Culture, and CONAETI to set up programs tailored to at-risk children who work during the sugarcane harvesting season.(3) As of October 2015, operates in 27 districts in 11 departments, providing support to 11,288 children.(8)
Well-Being Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Tekoporã)†	Government-administered program through the Secretariat for Social Action. Provides conditional cash transfers to families in rural communities in the departments of Concepción, San Pedro, Canindeyú, Caaguazú, Caazapá, Alto Paraguay, and Presidente Hayes.(8) Incorporates aspects of the Embrace Program, such as the family monitoring methodology, to ensure beneficiary families do not allow their children to engage in child labor.(3)
Comprehensive Attention Program for Street Children and Adolescents (Programa PAINAC)†	SNNA program to provide assistance and services to children living on the streets. Program's goal is to assist approximately 200 children.(8, 56)
Youth Apprenticeship Program	National Service of Vocational Promotion program to provide free technical training to youth between ages 15 and 29 who have completed the ninth grade in fields such as graphic arts, metalworking, and auto mechanics.(80)
Teen Apprentice Program*	Public-private partnership between the MTESS, the Social Security Institute, the National Service of Vocational Promotion, and the Chamber of Supermarkets to provide apprenticeships to youth between the ages of 15 and 18.(48, 81)
National Employment Training System	National employment training system funded through the Social Security Institute to provide free job training opportunities throughout the country for youth and adults.(82, 83)
Paraguay Youth Republic Forums	National Secretariat of Youth program to promote social dialog and youth participation in the formation of public policies regarding youth health, education, labor, and other areas.(84)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Paraguay.

The 2012 Law Against Trafficking in Persons requires the Ministry of Women's Affairs to provide compensation and financial assistance to victims of sexual and labor trafficking, including minors. However, the Government has not allocated funding for the Ministry of Women's Affairs to implement such a program, and most victims did not have access to comprehensive care.(8, 14, 40, 85) Although Paraguay has programs that target child labor, the scope and funding level of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, and programs are limited by the absence of government education and health services in rural areas. Additional programs are needed to reach the large numbers of working children, especially in agriculture and domestic service.(8, 14) NGOs have also called for the establishment of a program to rehabilitate child soldiers.(8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Paraguay (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make publicly available information on the labor inspectorate's funding levels and the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review.	2015
	Hire a sufficient number of labor inspectors to effectively enforce laws related to child labor and increase the funding and resources available to the labor inspectorate, including dedicated vehicles and travel funds, to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2015
	Build enforcement capacity to address children's work in the informal sector.	2014 – 2015
	Improve the cooperation mechanisms among judicial authorities and labor enforcement officials to grant search warrants for workplace inspections in a more efficient and timely manner.	2013 – 2015
	Cease the incarceration of children associated with armed groups and ensure these children are referred to appropriate rehabilitation and reintegration programs.	2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Increase efforts to prosecute crimes related to the exploitation of children in the worst forms of child labor, including by hiring and training more specialized prosecutors; providing resources, such as vehicles and fuel, to enable investigations in remote areas, such as the Chaco; developing coordination and referral mechanisms for government agencies to refer relevant cases to the Public Ministry; and increasing penalties for crimes.	2012 – 2015
Coordination	Strengthen interagency coordinating mechanisms, with particular focus on the communication between the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Health, to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2015
Social Programs	Increase access to education for children living in rural and indigenous communities, including in the Chaco region, and for children with disabilities.	2014 – 2015
	Further expand government programs to assist more families and children affected by the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture, domestic servitude, and human trafficking.	2010 – 2015
	Implement disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration programs for children associated with armed groups and ensure these children receive sufficient rehabilitation services.	2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. 51. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.
52. Central Intelligence Agency. The World Factbook, CIA, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country’s total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development as determined by the UN.
53. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

Peru

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Peru made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed a law prohibiting the physical or humiliating punishment of children and adolescents, including in the workplace; launched a national policy against trafficking in persons that highlights the increased vulnerability of child laborers; and conducted a national child labor survey. The National Labor Inspection Superintendency opened a new inspection office in Ancash, and the National Commission for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor created subcommittees to address hazardous adolescent work, child domestic work, and intervention strategies for the Regional Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. However, children in Peru continue to engage in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Labor and criminal law enforcement agencies in Peru lack sufficient training and resources to adequately combat child labor, including its worst forms. Moreover, Peruvian law allows adolescents to work in mining and commercial fishing, despite the designation of both activities as hazardous under other provisions of Peruvian law, and to engage in night work in some circumstances.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Peru are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-8) According to the Government's 2011 National Household Survey, 68 percent of child laborers under the legal working age work in rural areas, principally on farms.(1, 9) According to the same survey, approximately 31 percent of child laborers in urban areas work in the service sector, including in hazardous occupations such as street work. Official statistics indicate that the rates of child labor are significantly higher in the highland and jungle regions of Peru than in the coastal regions.(9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Peru.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.8 (1,297,106)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	79.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	19.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2014, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta Nacional de Hogares (ENAH), 2014.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of Brazil nuts/chestnuts* (6, 8, 12)
	Planting and harvesting avocados,* barley,* beans,* cocoa,* coffee,* corn,* grass,* passion fruit,* pineapples,* plantains,* potatoes,* rocoto chili peppers,* and yucca* (13)
	Transplanting and harvesting rice*(2, 14-24)
	Herding and caring for farm animals*† (9, 25)

	Forced labor in logging,* street vending,* and begging (2-7, 12, 31)
	Forced domestic work sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 4, 6, 32)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, including in bars, brothels, and mining camps, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 5-8, 12, 31, 33-35)
	Growing and processing coca (stimulant plant) sometimes as a result of human trafficking and transporting drugs (2-4, 6, 8, 12, 31, 34, 35)
	Counterfeiting United States dollars,* smuggling gas* and gasoline* (16, 17)
	Use in armed conflict sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment* (4, 7, 8, 12, 31)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Peruvian girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation across the country, particularly in mining communities and in the tourist zones of Cuzco, Iquitos, and Lima.(7, 31, 33, 36, 37) Young Colombian girls and boys enter Santa Rosa, Peru, by canoe, where they engage in illicit activities and are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. Canoe access to Colombia closes from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. every day, resulting in further commercial sexual exploitation of children unable to return to Colombia by night.(34, 35)

Remnants of the terrorist group Shining Path use children as soldiers and domestic workers as well as to produce coca and transport drugs.(2-4, 6, 12, 31) In July, the Government of Peru rescued 54 indigenous Ashaninka people, including 34 children, who were being held by Shining Path members in remote jungle areas.(38) Colombian children from the departments of Amazonas and Nariño frequently travel across the border to Peru to work in the cultivation of coca and illegal drug production. Sometimes, these children are trafficked to perform these activities.(39, 40)

Children in Peru work in informal mining, particularly in informal gold mines and peripheral services. Children working in informal and small-scale mining are exposed to hazards, including wall and mine collapses, landslides, explosives accidents, and harmful gases.(6, 16, 41, 42)

Adolescents from indigenous communities had a 42.5 percent secondary school completion rate in 2013, whereas 67.6 percent of non-indigenous youth completed secondary school. Only 42.1 percent of girls ages 17 to 18 in rural communities completed secondary school in 2013, as opposed to 75.7 percent of girls the same age in urban areas.(43) Some parents do not to send their daughters to high school because of the distance, cost, and concerns over sexual violence and teen pregnancy.(44) A 2012 family health survey indicated that 34.9 percent of girls who had completed only primary school were either pregnant or already had a child.(45) School authorities reportedly deny girls admission to school if they are pregnant or dating, despite legislation requiring school directors to ensure that female students who are pregnant or have children remain in school and do not face discrimination.(44, 46)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Peru has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 51 of the Child and Adolescent Code (47)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 58 of the Child and Adolescent Code (48)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Sections A–B of the Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES (49)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 23 of the Constitution; Article 4 of the Child and Adolescent Code; Articles 128–129, 153, 168, and 182 of the Penal Code (48, 50-53)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 4 of the Child and Adolescent Code; Articles 153 and 182 of the Penal Code (48, 50-52)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 4 of the Child and Adolescent Code; Articles 153 and 179–183 of the Penal Code (48, 52, 54)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 128 and 297 of the Penal Code (51, 55, 56)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 42 of the Military Service Law (32)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 42 of the Military Service Law (32, 57)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17‡	Article 17 of the Constitution; Articles 12 and 36 of the General Education Law; Article 61 of the Supreme Decree No. 011-2012-ED (2, 53, 58-60)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution; Article 4 of the General Education Law (53, 58)

‡ Age calculated based on available information.(2, 53, 58-60)

Education is compulsory in Peru through secondary school, with a projected progression of 6 years of study in primary school, beginning at age 6, and 5 years of study in secondary school. The Government of Peru has indicated that the average secondary school completion age is 17.(2, 53, 58-60)

In 2015, the Government of Peru strengthened legal protections for children and adolescents by passing a law prohibiting the use of physical or humiliating punishment against children and adolescents, including in the workplace.(61) The Child and Adolescent Code does not fully protect adolescents (ages 12 to 18) engaged in night work and hazardous work. Article 57 prohibits children (under age 12) and adolescents from working between the hours of 7 p.m. and 7 a.m., with the exception that a judge may authorize adolescents age 15 and older to engage in night work not exceeding 4 hours a day. In 2014, the Government of Peru proposed a bill amending the Child and Adolescent Code to raise the minimum age for authorized night work to 16. This amendment was not approved during the reporting period.(2, 48, 62) Additionally, although Section A of the Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES designates fishing and mining as work that is hazardous by nature, Article 51 of the Child and Adolescent Code allows adolescents to perform work in mining at age 16 and in commercial fishing at age 17, without provisions to ensure that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected, or that they receive specific instruction or training in these activities.(47, 49)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Promotion of Employment (MTPE)	Set national policies and guidelines for labor law enforcement, including for inspections. Responsible for supporting the National Labor Inspection Superintendency (SUNAFIL).(63) Maintain an online reporting system to receive complaints of labor law violations.(64)
SUNAFIL	Enforce labor laws in nine regions with operational SUNAFIL offices.(2, 65) Conduct labor inspections of employers who have more than 10 registered workers.(66) Maintain a special inspection group composed of 15 inspectors who conduct inspections targeting forced labor and child labor violations, and train other inspectors on these topics.(16, 67) Address possible child labor violations during all inspections and refer cases of child labor to the Ministry of Women and Vulnerable Populations (MIMP) and the Public Ministry, as appropriate.(68, 69)
Regional Directorates for Labor	Inspect employers who have 10 or fewer registered workers.(63, 66)
Ombudsman's Department for Children and Adolescents	Coordinate government policies and programs that target children and adolescents. Assist the MTPE in investigating complaints of violations of child labor laws.(2)
National Police	Enforce criminal laws regarding child labor and child exploitation and maintain a trafficking in persons investigation unit to investigate cases of child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation.(2, 69, 70) Coordinate with the Public Ministry and MIMP to place rescued minors in the care of family members or state social services.(1)
Public Ministry	Coordinate with the MTPE, SUNAFIL, and the National Police to investigate and prosecute cases of criminal violations of child labor laws. Maintain a specialized trafficking in persons prosecutorial unit within the Public Prosecutor's Office.(69, 71)
Ministry of the Interior (MININTER)	Investigate child trafficking cases and refer children to victim services.(2) Maintain a hotline that functions during office hours to receive reports of trafficking in persons. Provide victims and the general public with information on human trafficking, communicate cases of human trafficking to relevant government offices, and coordinate services for victims.(1, 72)
MIMP Children's Bureau	Design, promote, coordinate, monitor, and evaluate government policies and programs for the well-being of children and adolescents.(2, 73) Manage the Street Educators program and a hotline for exploited children, including child laborers. Provide social services to children found working in the worst forms of child labor and refer cases to the MTPE.(67, 69, 74)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Peru took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

In 2015, the National Labor Inspection Superintendency (SUNAFIL) opened a new inspection office in Ancash and was operational in nine regions. SUNAFIL conducted 338 child labor inspections and removed 116 children from child labor, including its worst forms, during the reporting period.(2, 65, 76) Although the total number of labor inspectors and labor inspections increased in 2015 from the previous year, inspectors lacked sufficient training and resources, such as transportation and fuel, to address the problem of child labor, particularly in the informal sector.(2, 4, 42, 70) Many regional labor inspectorates were understaffed and underfunded, and the Ministry of Labor and Promotion of Employment (MTPE) continued to report an insufficient number of labor inspectors. The ILO Committee of Experts also noted that the number of labor inspectors is inadequate to monitor the informal economy where the majority of child labor in Peru occurs.(2, 3, 30)

According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Peru should employ roughly 1,120 inspectors to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(77-79) Of Peru's 482 labor inspectors, 88 were inspectors from the Regional Directorates for Labor and 394 were SUNAFIL inspectors.(2) Of the SUNAFIL inspectors, 20 were supervisors. While these supervisors are fully accredited inspectors, SUNAFIL reported that they focus on managerial functions. In addition, 267 inspectors were auxiliary, who required supervision to inspect employers who had more than 10 employees; and 107 were labor inspectors, who were authorized to inspect businesses with more than 10 employees. Of these, 98 were located in Lima.(2) In regions outside of Lima, there were only 9 SUNAFIL labor inspectors and the 88 inspectors from the Regional Directorates for Labor.(2)

Penalties for child labor were insufficient to deter violations, particularly as NGOs estimated that the labor authority collected only 10 percent of imposed fines. In addition, SUNAFIL reported it had not collected any fines from 2015 due to pending appeals.(2, 3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Peru took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

Number of Prosecutions Initiated	110 (42)	Unknown (2)
Number of Convictions	19 (80)	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (3)	Yes (2)

In 2015, the trafficking in persons investigation unit of the National Police employed 110 child labor investigators, and the specialized trafficking in persons prosecutorial unit of the Public Prosecutor's Office in Lima employed 11 prosecutors. During the reporting period, the Public Prosecutor's Office authorized funding to place six specialized trafficking in persons prosecutors in Lima, Madre de Dios, Tumbes, and Loreto.(2) NGOs and the MTPE noted that investigators did not have sufficient funding or resources to carry out investigations and that training for MTPE investigators was insufficient and failed to strengthen MTPE investigative capacity.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (CPETI)	Implement the National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(64) Propose public policies and coordinate, evaluate, and monitor government actions to combat child labor. Maintain subcommittees, including on informal mining, child labor in indigenous villages, and project evaluation.(2) Led by the MTPE and includes 17 government agencies, including MININTER, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Justice, and the Peruvian National Police as well as representatives from business associations, unions, and NGOs.(2, 4) Met regularly during the reporting period and created three subcommittees to focus on hazardous adolescent work, child domestic work, and intervention strategies for the Regional Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(2, 64)
Regional Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Carry out CPETI's mandate at the regional level.(81) Is present in all 25 regions of Peru.(16)
National Commission against Forced Labor	Coordinate government efforts to combat forced labor, including conducting research on forced labor, awareness-raising efforts, developing legislation, and strengthening Peru's institutional capacity to address forced labor. Led by the MTPE, with participation of eight additional government ministries.(1, 70) Met infrequently throughout the reporting period.(2, 64)
Permanent Multi-Sectoral Commission on Illegal Mining	Coordinate government efforts to address illegal mining, including by developing programs to eradicate child labor and child prostitution in mining areas. Led by the Prime Minister's Office and includes the participation of regional governments and six national government agencies, including the Ministry of Energy and Mines and MININTER.(82)
Multi-Sector Committee Against Trafficking in Persons	Lead and coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons. Chaired by MININTER and includes 12 government agencies, including the Ministry of Justice, MIMP, and the MTPE.(70)

Despite effective coordination among law enforcement agencies, including SUNAFIL, the MTPE, and the National Police, in the rice plantations of the Tumbes region during the reporting period, Peruvian officials acknowledged that, in general, the collection and sharing of information to address child labor was limited by an overall lack of interagency coordination.(2)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Peru has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor for 2012–2021	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by improving the livelihoods of low-income families, improving education opportunities, raising awareness of child labor, improving work conditions for adolescents, and increasing child labor law enforcement.(9, 74) Also seeks to improve the quality of child labor data in Peru. Includes the objective of carrying out pilot programs to combat child labor in urban and rural areas.(9)
A Peru without Child Labor	Aims to prevent and eradicate child labor through a partnership between the Government and a network of private businesses committed to supporting the National Strategy by investing in child development and building a skilled workforce.(74, 83)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Peru at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima (October 2014).(84, 85)
Declaration of Cancún and Plan of Action (2015)†	In 2015, the Government of Peru participated in the XIX Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to promote decent work with social inclusion throughout the Americas, held in Cancún, Mexico. Participating countries adopted the declaration, which aims in part to foster policies to eliminate labor exploitation, including child labor, and to promote education and vocational training for youth.(86, 87) Participating countries also adopted the Plan of Action, which prioritizes the elimination of child labor, including through data collection, enforcement of labor laws, and the development of social protection policies for children and families.(86, 88)

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Children and Adolescents for 2012–2021	Establishes a comprehensive set of government policies for children and adolescents, including the goal of eradicating the worst forms of child labor.(1, 70, 74)
Sector Strategy on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Includes the objectives of increasing the availability of child labor data, raising public awareness, strengthening coordination between public and private entities on child labor issues, and improving investigations of child labor violations. Developed jointly by the MTPE and the ILO.(69, 89)
Second National Plan to Combat Forced Labor for 2013–2017	Establishes the Government's policies and priorities for combating forced labor. Includes the goal of reducing children's vulnerability to becoming engaged in forced labor.(41)
Intersectoral Protocol against Forced Labor	Outlines the Government's role in combating forced labor and provides for the housing, legal defense, and educational reintegration of children and adolescent victims of forced labor. Monitored by the National Commission Against Forced Labor.(3, 90)
National Policy against Trafficking in Persons†	Aims to prevent and reduce human trafficking by addressing root causes, prosecuting perpetrators, assisting victims, and strengthening programs for vulnerable populations, including child laborers.(2, 64, 91)
Illegal Mining, Drug Trafficking, Inequality, and Poverty Elimination Agreement Between the Government of Colombia and the Government of Peru	Outlines 11 agreements between the 2 nations, including several that focus on child and adolescent labor protection issues, such as identifying and assisting children and adolescents who work in mining activities and are in vulnerable situations.(92) In addition, establishes a roadmap to apply concepts from the Cooperation Agreement on the Exchange of Experiences and Good Practices regarding labor and labor relations, including child labor.(92)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although potentially a useful policy tool, the Second National Plan to Combat Forced Labor for 2013–2017 still does not have funding for implementation.(2) Additionally, some Regional Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor have not fulfilled their mandate to create action plans to combat child labor, while others have action plans but have failed to provide the necessary funding to carry them out.(68, 71, 93)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of Peru funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (2013–2017)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Peru, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building the capacity of the Government to conduct research in this area.(94) In August 2015, organized a workshop in Lima to develop survey questionnaires for the National Child Labor Survey, which was funded by the project, the MTPE, and Peru's National Institute of Statistics.(95) The National Institute of Statistics and ILO conducted the National Child Labor Survey in November 2015, sampling 6,458 households in 24 regions. Results will be released in 2016.(2, 95)
Seed Project (Proyecto Semilla) (2011–2016)	$13 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the NGO Desarrollo y Autogestión to combat rural child labor. Supports the national and regional governments in developing child labor policies, carries out awareness-raising campaigns, and aims to provide 6,650 children and 3,000 families with education and livelihood services to reduce the incidence of child labor.(96)
Peru Works (Trabaja Perú)† (2006–2015)	MTPE program that offers temporary work and technical training to low-income households. Requires beneficiaries to ensure their children attend school and do not engage in child labor.(2, 69, 70)
Huánuco Project†	Seeks to improve school retention and attendance rates among child laborers in rural areas. In conjunction with the Together Program, assists approximately 4,000 children and 3,200 families by providing them with cash transfers, education, and livelihood services.(1, 9, 67, 71)
Carabayllo Project†	Provides scholarships, education assistance, psychological help, and other services to 1,000 families and 1,500 children, with the aim of reducing urban child labor, especially in garbage dumps.(1, 9, 67, 71)
Learn Program (Yachay)	MIMP program created in 2012 to increase protection and access to social services for children and adolescents subjected to street work, including begging and commercial sexual exploitation.(97)

Program	Description
Street Educators (Educadores de Calle)†	MIMP program within the Yachay program that provides counseling and training to children engaged in begging and street work in 20 cities throughout Peru.(2, 98) Connects working children and their families to educational and social services, with the goal of withdrawing them from exploitative work and improving family welfare.(68, 98) In 2015, MIMP provided identification cards, health insurance, education, and employment training to approximately 9,600 street children.(2)
Youth to Work (Jóvenes a la Obra)†	MTPE program to provide youth ages 16 to 24 with free job training, including on-the-job training in companies.(2, 4)
Responsible Perut	MTPE program to create formal youth employment and strengthen corporate social responsibility.(2)
Go Peru (Vamos Perú)†	MTPE program to provide job training and technical assistance to entrepreneurs as well as job placement services to the unemployed, including youth.(2, 4)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Regional initiative that conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(99)
Project to Consolidate Efforts to Combat Forced Labor in Brazil and Peru (2012–2017)	$6 million USDOL-funded, 5-year project implemented by the ILO to combat forced labor, including forced child labor, in Brazil and Peru, and to share Brazil's good practices with the Government of Peru and Peruvian stakeholders.(100) In 2015, conducted and published two research reports on forced labor in gold mining and logging, trained more than 280 law enforcement officials in forced labor, and partnered with the Government of Peru to raise awareness of forced labor in the Cusco and Piurá regions. Sponsored exchange activities between Brazilian and Peruvian law enforcement officials, including conducting joint forced labor inspections in Brazil and Peru.(101-104)
From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (The Bridge Project)*	USDOL-funded global project implemented by the ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at combating forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to C.29 on Forced Labor. Includes Mauritania, Nepal, and Peru as priority countries.(105)
Together Program (Juntos) (2005–2015)†	Ministry of Social Development program to provide cash transfers to approximately 650,000 low-income households in 15 of the country's 25 departments.(64, 106, 107)
Improved Rural High School†	Ministry of Education program to provide academic and social support to students in rural high schools. In 2015, 54 teams of 3 professionals collaborated with 214 schools to raise community awareness on the benefits of secondary education and encourage the reintegration of adolescents into the school system.(64, 108)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Peru.

Although Peru has programs that reach children who work in agriculture in rural areas, the scope of these programs is still insufficient to fully address the large numbers of children engaged in hazardous occupations in agriculture. Peru also lacks targeted programs to assist children who are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and child soldiering, as well as children who work in mining, logging, and domestic work.(2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Peru (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the minimum age for work in fishing, mining, and night work between, is 18 or that adolescents age 16 and older receive adequate, specific instruction or training and that their health, safety, and morals are fully protected.	2014 – 2015
Enforcement	Make publicly available information on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites and by desk review and about the training system for labor inspectors and criminal investigators, including details on training provided to inspectors and investigators and training provided on new laws related to child labor.	2015
	Increase the level of funding allocated to the MTPE, SUNAFIL, and Regional Labor Inspectorates for staff, training, and resources to help ensure effective enforcement of child labor laws, particularly in the informal sector and regions with high rates of child labor.	2009 – 2015

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Increase the collection rate of fines imposed for child labor law violations, in particular to deter future violations.	2015
	Increase publicly available information about law enforcement efforts related to child labor, particularly at the regional level and particularly related to criminal law enforcement, including the number of criminal violations identified, prosecutions initiated, and convictions involving the worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2015
	Increase the level of funding and resources allocated for criminal law enforcement related to the worst forms of child labor, including for increased training on the worst forms of child labor for criminal investigators that targets specific investigative challenges.	2015
Coordination	Strengthen coordination and information-sharing mechanisms among government agencies responsible for responding to child labor issues.	2012 – 2015
Government Policies	Allocate sufficient funding to fully implement the Second National Plan to Combat Forced Labor.	2013 – 2015
	Ensure that regional CPETI commissions develop action plans to combat child labor, and allocate sufficient funding to implement these plans.	2010 – 2015
Social Programs	Improve access to education for girls in rural and indigenous communities.	2014 – 2015
	Expand social programs to reach a greater number of children working in hazardous occupations in agriculture and initiate social programs to address child commercial sexual exploitation, child soldiering, child labor in mining, child labor in logging, and child domestic work.	2009 – 2015

- UNESCO Institute for Statistics. Gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary. Total. [accessed December 16, 2015]; <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades. For more information, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" section of this report.

Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. For more information on sources used, the definition of working children and other indicators used in this report, please see the "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" section of this report.

77. Central Intelligence Agency. The World Factbook, CIA, [online] [cited March 18, 2016]; <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/fields/2095.html#131>. Data provided is the most recent estimate of the country's total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development as determined by the UN.
78. ILO. Strategies and Practice for Labour Inspection. Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient” number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.

79. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp_current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

In 2015, the Philippines made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Government agencies signed a joint memorandum on the Rescue and Rehabilitation of Abused Domestic Workers, which established a protocol for interagency coordination on efforts to rescue and assist exploited domestic workers, including child domestic workers. The Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking established five new regional task forces to support enforcement of criminal laws related to child labor and provided training on trafficking in persons to a total of 3,693 government personnel and 5,972 non-government participants. In addition, the Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography adopted a new strategic plan that aims to eradicate child pornography in the Philippines. However, children in the Philippines are engaged in child labor, including in the production of sugarcane, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Despite the existence of strong mechanisms to respond to cases of child labor, enforcement of child labor laws remains challenging due to the limited number of inspectors and lack of resources for inspections.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Philippines are engaged in child labor, including in the production of sugarcane, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-10) The 2011 National Survey on Children indicated that 3.2 million children are engaged in child labor, of which approximately 3 million work in hazardous labor.(11) Most child labor occurs in the informal sector, with approximately 60 percent of these children working in agriculture.(11, 12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in the Philippines.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children, primarily girls, are trafficked domestically from rural communities as well as conflict- and disaster-affected areas to urban centers and tourist destinations for the purpose of domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(30, 42) An increasing number of Filipino children are coerced into performing sex acts for live Internet broadcast to paying foreigners.(36, 43)

Child soldiering remains a concern among non-government militias and terrorist organizations, predominately in the southern region of Mindanao.(10, 44) In 2015, there were reports that the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters, the New People’s Army, and the Abu Sayyaf Group recruited and used children as both combatants and noncombatants. During the reporting period there were no reports of the recruitment or use of children by security forces of the state.(42)

Many Filipino children work as domestic workers, or kasambahays, and are particularly vulnerable to forced labor.(1, 28, 45) Child domestic workers often live and work in the private homes of their employers, where they are expected to work long hours; have limited access to education; and may be subjected to sexual, verbal, and physical abuse.(9, 30, 36, 45)

Although the law mandates free public education, many children are unable to attend school due to the prohibitive cost of books, uniforms, meals, and transportation.(1, 18, 46) During the reporting period, the UN confirmed incidents of military use of schools, armed forces operating near schools, and attacks on schools and their personnel, all leading to the disruption of classes, primarily in indigenous, conflict-affected communities.(44)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Philippines has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In December 2015, pursuant to the Sugarcane Industry Development Act, the Sugar Regulatory Administration issued guidelines which stipulate that in order to participate in the Government's Block Farm program and receive resources, sugarcane farms must commit to implementing a farming system that is child labor free.(61, 62)

In 2015, the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE) continued stakeholder consultations on the draft of a revised and expanded list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children, which was adopted in February 2016.(63, 64)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), Bureau of Working Conditions	Enforce child labor laws; regularly train inspectors and regional personnel. Inspect establishments and monitor compliance with labor laws in all sectors, including in the informal sector and agricultural and mining operations.(3) Register DOLE enforcement activities using the Labor Law Compliance System Management Information System, a Web-based application that uses tablet computers for transmitting and processing real-time data collected from the field using an electronic checklist.(41)

Organization/Agency	Role
Rescue the Child Laborers Quick Action Teams (Sagip Batang Manggagawa – SBM QAT)	Lead the regional mechanism for rescuing children who work in exploitative situations.(29) Detect, monitor, and respond to incidents of child labor using a cooperative, interagency approach involving DOLE, the Philippine National Police (PNP), the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI), the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD), local representatives of government agencies, local NGOs, labor unions, and the business community.(3, 41)
Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD)	Rehabilitate and reintegrate child laborers.(19, 29) Coordinate regional Special Action Units, with at least one dedicated staff member per region to conduct rescue operations for child laborers and cooperate with social workers to manage ongoing cases. Maintain 16 Crisis Intervention Units and 30 residential facilities nationwide to address cases of child abuse and support child abuse victims, including children exploited in hazardous labor.(18)
Philippine National Police (PNP)	Investigate and prosecute cases related to the worst forms of child labor.(38, 65) The PNP's Women and Children's Protection Center leads the enforcement of laws on child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children as well as other tasks related to the protection of children.(3)
National Bureau of Investigation (NBI)	Investigate and prosecute child labor cases.(38, 65) Operate a national Trafficking in Persons Task Force, as well as a Task Force on the Protection of Children from Exploitation and Abuse.(36, 66)
Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency	Enforce the Comprehensive Dangerous Drugs Act. Maintain a national hotline for reporting cases of children used in illicit activities.(19) Coordinate with the DSWD to assist during rescue operations.(3)

In April 2015, the National Police Commission issued Resolution 2014–441 to strengthen and restructure the Women and Children's Protection Center as a specialized unit under the Philippines National Police (PNP-WCPC). The PNP-WCPC's new mandate includes responsibility for all investigations and operations relating to human trafficking.(42, 67)

† Data are from January 1, 2015 to November, 2015.

For the second year in a row, the DOLE Bureau of Working Conditions hired additional Labor Laws Compliance Officers (LLCOs), bringing the total number to 536.(18, 41) However, according to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, the Philippines should employ roughly 2,783 labor inspectors in order to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(72-74) The Government noted that DOLE had limited funding for transportation, fuel, and other necessities to carry out inspections, particularly in the informal sector.(18) In 2015, 150 recently hired LLCOs received instruction during a 10-day basic course for new labor inspectors, which included an orientation on child labor issues. The DOLE Human Resource Development Service also conducts an ongoing series of capacity-building sessions for LLCOs on a variety of topics.(18) However, only LLCOs specifically involved in Rescue the Child Laborers Quick Action Teams (SBM QAT) regularly receive training on the enforcement of laws related to child labor.(18)

During the reporting period, DOLE identified 102 establishments with deficiencies in child labor law compliance, including employing children under the minimum age for work and engaging children in hazardous work.(18) Although DOLE does not have the authority to levy financial penalties for child labor law violations, from January to September 2015 DOLE ensured that five establishments found to be engaging six minors in commercial sexual exploitation were permanently closed; one establishment engaging two minors in hazardous work was temporarily closed.(18) SBM QATs conducted 10 rescue operations from January to September 2015 and removed 28 children from child labor in hazardous activities, including work on sugar plantations and in karaoke bars.(18) While the SBM QATs are permitted to conduct unannounced compliance visits in video karaoke bars, massage parlors, sauna/bath houses, and farms, they are not authorized to conduct visits in private homes to search for underage child domestic workers.(41)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Philippines took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

† Data are from January 1, 2015 to November, 2015.

In 2015, the PNP-WCPC employed 4,316 personnel, assigned to 2,493 women and children’s desks throughout the country. In addition, the Anti-Trafficking Division of the National Bureau of Investigation maintained 16 agents responsible for the investigation of human trafficking cases, with five additional investigators assigned to monitor international airports.(18) However, the limited number of law enforcement agents dedicated expressly to child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children continued to hinder the Government’s ability to investigate and prosecute complaints and violations.(18, 41)

During the reporting period, the Government organized trainings to build the capacity of law enforcement officials to investigate and prosecute human trafficking cases, including child labor trafficking cases. The Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT) conducted 26 trainings with 1,056 government personnel, and the IACAT Task Forces conducted a total of 132 trainings for 2,637 government personnel and for 5,972 non-government participants.(18) The PNP-WCPC also provided training for 1,037 police officers on human trafficking and child labor laws.(18)

In 2015, the DSWD reported providing assistance to a total of 57 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, including for prostitution, pornography, and cyber-pornography, and 26 children who had been involved in armed conflict.(18, 68) IACAT also operated the 24/7 Action line against Human Trafficking to receive and respond to requests for assistance and referrals from trafficking victims, their families, and the public.(3) In 2015, the hotline received 28 reports involving minors.(18) As some enforcement agencies do not disaggregate data on the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor by age, there are some gaps in information in these areas.(18)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT)	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including child trafficking. Co-chaired by the Department of Justice and the DSWD, and work with other government agencies and two NGOs representing women and children.(3, 66) Composed of 24 anti-human trafficking task forces established in eight regions and seven interagency task forces in major seaports and airports.(3, 18, 41) In 2015, established five new anti-human trafficking task forces for a total of 24 nationwide.(18) Received a budget of $1.69 million in 2015, a decrease from the $2.3 million allocated in 2014.(18, 36)
Inter-Agency Council for the Welfare of Children (CWC)	Operate a monitoring and response system through its Subcommittee on Children Affected by Armed Conflict and Displacement to assist children engaged in armed conflict, including recruitment and use of child soldiers.(38)
Inter-Agency Committee on Children Involved in Armed Conflict	Advocate for protecting children and preventing the involvement of children in armed conflict. Composed of 14 government agencies and chaired by the CWC.(41) Coordinate and monitor the implementation of the Children in Armed Conflict Program Framework.(3) Convene on a bimonthly basis for reporting and monitoring.(41)
Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography	Monitor and implement the Anti-Child Pornography Act of 2009.(76) Chaired by the DSWD, with numerous members, including the Department of Justice, the Department of Labor and Employment, the NBI, and three NGO representatives.(68)

In 2015, several government agencies signed a Joint Memorandum Circular (JMC) on the Protocol on the Rescue and Rehabilitation of Abused Kasambahay (domestic workers). The JMC establishes guidelines for improved coordination between relevant agencies in the protection of abused or exploited domestic workers, including child domestic workers.(18, 77)

Although the National Child Labor Committee (NCLC) is responsible for coordinating government efforts to combat child labor, the committee does not have a clear legal mandate under Republic Act No. 9231 on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor and lacks a specific budgetary appropriation to fund its operations.(75) These factors limit the effectiveness of the NCLC in its role as the lead coordination mechanism on child labor policy and programming.(75)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Philippines has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 9).

Table 9. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Philippine Program Against Child Labor (PPACL) Strategic Framework (2007–2015)	Lays out a blueprint for reducing the prevalence of child labor by 75 percent.(29, 78, 79) Objectives include improving access for children and their families to appropriate services to help prevent incidences of child labor and to reintegrate former child laborers.(29, 80) Includes the Convergence Action Plan (HELP ME.: health, education, livelihood, prevention, protection and prosecution, monitoring, and evaluation), which aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor by 2016 and to remove 893,000 children from hazardous child labor across 15,568 target barangays (districts).(79, 81) Has been allocated $220 million for implementation over 4 years.(81, 82) In August 2015, the NCLC began updating the PPACL for the period of 2016–2020.(83) In addition, the Government finalized a Joint Memorandum Circular (JMC) to provide policy guidance in the implementation of the HELP ME program.(18) Specifically, the JMC clarifies the target beneficiaries and geographical coverage of the program, defines the roles and responsibilities of the government agencies involved, establishes a framework for interagency collaboration, and specifies the requirements for reporting, monitoring, and evaluation.(84)
National Strategic Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2012–2016)	Contains specific provisions on preventing trafficking of children, including raising awareness and creating local programs to prevent children from being lured by traffickers.(3, 19)
Inter-Agency Council Against Child Pornography Three-Year Strategic Plan†	Aims to eradicate child pornography in the Philippines by focusing efforts in five strategic areas: (1) advocacy and prevention; (2) law enforcement and prosecution; (3) protection, recovery, and reintegration; (4) research, monitoring, and management of information systems; and (5) partnerships and networking.(85)

Policy	Description
Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention Against Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (ACTIP) (2015)†	Establishes a regional anti-human trafficking framework among 10 ASEAN Member States, including the Philippines, to improve coordination on investigation and prosecution of trafficking in persons cases and to enhance assistance for victims. Unanimously adopted in June 2015, the Convention was signed by the relevant heads of state on November 21, 2015.(86, 87)
Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan (2011–2016)	Aims to strengthen monitoring mechanisms for child protection laws, develop strategies for responding to child trafficking and pornography concerns, and implement an enhanced program for preventing the engagement of children in armed conflict.(19)
Philippine Labor and Employment Plan (2011–2016)	Operates within the framework of the Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan and includes the goal of reducing exploitive child labor.(3, 19, 88)
National Strategic Framework for Plan Development for Children (Child 21) (2000–2025)	Sets out broad goals for national government agencies, local governments, and NGOs to achieve improved quality of life for Filipino children by 2025.(29, 66, 89) Addresses concerns related to the worst forms of child labor under the section on children in need of special protection.(18)
National Plan of Action for Children (2011–2016)	Serves as an agenda for implementation of Child 21.(66) Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are mainstreamed throughout the document, particularly in goal two on child protection, which specifies that children should be free from violence, abuse, neglect, and exploitation.(18)
UNDAF for the Pacific Region (2012–2018)	Identifies major development priorities, including reducing and eliminating child labor.(90)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2015, the Department of Education developed a draft policy on child labor, which establishes a system to identify and refer in-school child laborers to appropriate service providers through the Government's HELP ME Convergence Program. Currently, the draft policy is awaiting stakeholder validation and finalization.(83)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2015, the Government of the Philippines funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 10).

Table 10. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Prevention and Elimination Program†	DOLE program that implements local awareness-raising campaigns, institutes child labor-monitoring mechanisms, and requires barangays to develop child labor elimination plans.(91)
Campaign for Child-Labor Free Barangays †	DOLE program to eliminate child labor in villages through community awareness-raising on child labor and anti-human trafficking laws, and through government livelihood programs and guidelines.(3, 31, 92) Between January and November 2015, DOLE declared 106 barangays child labor-free, bringing the total number to 159 since 2014.(93) DOLE regional offices awarded Child Labor-Free Establishment Certificates to 58 establishments, bringing the total number of certified establishments up to 163 nationwide.(93)
Livelihood for Parents of Child Laborers (Kasama Program)†	DOLE program that provides livelihood assistance to parents, guardians or other family members of child laborers. (65, 92, 93) In 2015, 5,084 parents received services. (94)
Project Angel Tree†	DOLE program that distributes donated shoes, school bags, and other supplies to children at risk of, or engaged in, child labor.(29, 65, 92) In 2015, a total of 2,905 child laborers or children at risk for child labor received supplies.(94)
Convening Stakeholders to Develop and Implement Strategies to Reduce Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Artisanal and Small-Scale Gold Mining (COSTREC-ASGM) (2015–2019)*	$5 million USDOL-funded, 3.5-year project implemented by the ILO that aims to support efforts to reduce child labor and improve working conditions in artisanal and small-scale gold mining (ASGM) in Ghana and the Philippines. The project supports efforts to (1) implement laws, policies, and action plans to address child labor and working conditions in ASGM; (2) increase access of ASGM communities to livelihood and social protection programs; and (3) develop tools to increase transparency and monitoring of child labor and working conditions in gold mining supply chains.(95)
Recovery and Reintegration Program for Trafficked Persons†	DSWD and IACAT program that provides recovery and reintegration services to victims of human trafficking and raises awareness in vulnerable communities.(42) Includes the National Referral System, which strengthens coordination among agencies providing services to human trafficking victims through the use of standard referral and reporting forms.(42) There are 149 referral networks established in 16 regions.(41) In 2015, received a budget of $483,662.(18)

Program	Description
Special Social Services for Children in Armed Conflict†	DSWD program that provides special services to protect and rehabilitate children after direct or indirect involvement in armed conflict.(96) Includes services such as emergency evacuation and rescue; family reunification; provision of food, clothing, and shelter; and psychosocial rehabilitation.(65)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research, and strengthen legal protections and social services delivery for child domestic workers in the Philippines.(97) In 2015, organized a workshop to discuss adoption of the Roadmap to Eliminate Child Labor in Domestic Work in the Philippines.(64, 98) The Roadmap has been submitted to the National Child Labor Committee for endorsement.(98, 99)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce (CLEAR) Child Labor	USDOL-funded capacity building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards, improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor, implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor, and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor in the Philippines.(83) In 2015, facilitated the finalization of the Case Flow Management Protocol, a comprehensive plan detailing the management process for dealing with child labor cases, from identification and reporting, to prosecution of criminal actions and imposition of administrative sanctions. Currently, the National Child Labor Committee has approved the Protocol and the official adoption process is underway.(76, 83)
Philippines ABK3 LEAP—Livelihoods, Education, Advocacy, and Protection to Reduce Child Labor in Sugarcane (2011–2016)	$16.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year and 11-month project implemented by World Vision to reduce child labor in sugar-producing areas in 11 provinces of the Philippines.(100) Seeks to provide education services to 54,000 children engaged in, or at risk of engaging in, the worst forms of child labor, and to provide livelihood assistance to 28,090 households of targeted children. Engages the sugar industry in raising awareness of child labor among sugar workers and their families.(100, 101) In 2015, supported 45 barangays to pass and approve policies aimed at reducing child labor.(97)
Social Amelioration Program (SAP)†	DOLE, National Tripartite Council, and Sugar Industry program that provides a cash bonus to sugar workers and funds social protection, livelihood, and education programs for sugar workers and their families through a tax imposed on refined sugar.(102, 103) In 2015, the Sugar Industry Foundation Incorporated conducted a study analyzing the implementation and replicability of SAP. Recommendations for policy makers and industry leaders include raising awareness about SAP in order to reach more beneficiaries and revisiting the legal mandate for the program to ensure that the amount of money distributed to sugar workers is sufficient to meet their present needs.(104)
Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino)†	DSWD and Local Government Unit social assistance and development program that provides conditional grants to poor families with children to improve their access to health care, adequate nutrition, and education.(91, 105, 106) Covers 1,627 cities and municipalities in 79 provinces and all 17 regions.(41) Targets households of child laborers and includes a condition prohibiting hazardous child labor as a program requirement.(82, 107) In 2015, more than 300,000 beneficiaries graduated from high school.(108) Program budget for 2015 was $1.31 billion, targeted to provide grants to 4.4 million households.(68)
Alternative Learning System Program†	Department of Education program that offers non-formal education to out-of-school children, including child laborers, as well as opportunities to attain a certificate of education equivalency.(46, 109) Has limited resources, represents approximately 1 percent of the Department of Education's budget, and has only 1 teacher for every 24 communities, so it cannot reach many out-of-school youth.(46, 68, 92)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Philippines.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Philippines (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties.	2015
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor and resources available in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014 – 2015

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Authorize SBM QATs to conduct compliance visits in private homes to search for underage child domestic workers.	2014 – 2015
	Make information publicly available on the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites, the number conducted by desk review, and the number of child labor law violations found; and ensure that the total number of criminal investigations, violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor are disaggregated by age.	2015
	Dedicate law enforcement agents to child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children issues so they may effectively investigate and prosecute those issues.	2013 – 2015
Coordination	Ensure that the National Child Labor Committee has the legal mandate and resources necessary to effectively coordinate national efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2015
Social Programs	Ensure that all children are able to safely access and attend school and do not face prohibitive costs for education-related expenses.	2010 – 2015
	Provide necessary resources to help more out-of-school youth access the Alternative Learning System program so they can complete their basic education.	2011 – 2015

Data provided is the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary school. This measure is a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades.

Geneva, Committee on Employment and Social Policy; November 2006. <http://www.ilo.org/public/english/standards/relm/gb/docs/gb297/pdf/esp-3.pdf>. Article 10 of ILO Convention No. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. As each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a "sufficient" number of inspectors. Amongst the factors that need to be taken into account are the number and size of establishments and the total size of the workforce. No single measure

- is sufficient but in many countries the available data sources are weak. The number of inspectors per worker is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach: 1/10,000 in industrial market economies; 1/15,000 in industrializing economies; 1/20,000 in transition economies; and 1/40,000 in less developed countries.
74. UN. World Economic Situation and Prospects 2012 Statistical Annex. New York; 2012. http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/policy/wesp/wesp-current/2012country_class.pdf. For analytical purposes, the Development Policy and Analysis Division (DPAD) of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of three broad categories: developed economies, economies in transition, and developing countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries (in particular the economies in transition) have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for purposes of analysis, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. The list of the least developed countries is decided upon by the United Nations Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly, on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met with regard to per capita GNI, a human assets index and an economic vulnerability index. For the purposes of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies; “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing countries” to “industrializing economies, and “the least developed countries” equates to “less developed countries.” For countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists, they will be considered “least developed countries” for the purpose of calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors.

Rwanda

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2015, Rwanda made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the Ministry of Public Service and Labor officials developed district-level regulations that identify priority sectors in which children are at-risk of child labor and provided guidelines to help labor inspectors carry out their work in enforcing child labor laws. The district-level child labor committees implemented the National Steering Committee on Child Labor policies that outlined strategies to address child labor. In addition, the Ministry of Public Service and Labor revised its interpretation of Labor Law No 13/2009 to permit labor inspectors to conduct inspections outside of normal business hours. However, children in Rwanda are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Gaps exist in the Government's enforcement of laws on child labor, and there are no social programs specifically targeting children engaged in domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Rwanda are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Rwanda.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.4 (118,385)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	85.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Integrated Households Living Conditions Survey, 2010.(4)

Data on working children, school attendance, and children combining work and school are not comparable with data published in the previous version of this report because of differences between surveys used to collect the data.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including carrying heavy loads, applying pesticides and fertilizers (5, 6)
	Production of sugarcane,* bananas,* and tea (5, 7-9)
	Planting and harvesting cabbage,* coffee,* manioc,* peas,* pineapple,* potatoes,* sweet potatoes,* corn,* beans,* sorghum,* pyrethrum,* and rice* (5, 6, 10)
	Herding cattle* and caring for sheep,* goats,* rabbit,* chicken,* and pigs* (6, 11)
	Producing charcoal* (12)
	Fishing,*†activities unknown(13)

	Agricultural labor and domestic work sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 17, 24, 25)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked internally in Rwanda for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 17) Rwandan children in East Africa, South Africa, the United Arab Emirates (UAE), Malaysia, China, the United States, and Europe are exploited in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced labor in the agricultural and industrial sectors.(2)

Education is free and compulsory; but, in practice, the costs of uniforms, school supplies, and unofficial school fees may preclude some families from sending their children to school.(1, 19, 26-28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Rwanda has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Children working in non-contractual employment do not have the same protections under child labor laws and regulations as children working in contractual employment.(29, 36, 37) During the year, the Ministry of Justice led the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Child Labor and the Ministry of Public Service and Labor (MIFOTRA) in a review of the child labor provisions in Rwanda's 2012 Penal Code with the aim of strengthening penalties for exploitative child labor and trafficking in persons. The penalties are expected to be presented to Parliament in 2016.(1) MIFOTRA also reported developing district-level regulations for labor inspectors that specifically identified priority sectors where children are at risk of engaging in child labor. These draft regulations were not made publicly available.(1) The Kigali City Security Council likewise developed guidelines on child labor.(31) These guidelines prohibit the employment of children in Kigali City as domestic servants, street beggars, porters, bar attendants, hairdressers, and dancers in clubs. It also prohibits using children in pornographic productions, to sell drugs, and to replace their parents in paid employment.(31) These guidelines also require local authorities to raise awareness of child labor and calls for a census at the local cell administrative level to estimate the prevalence of child domestic workers.(31)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service and Labor (MIFOTRA)	Enforce labor laws, including laws on child labor.(10, 38-40)
Rwandan National Police (RNP)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor and operate a free hotline to report incidents of gender-based violence and child abuse, including child labor.(10, 13, 41) The RNP also operates an Anti-Trafficking Unit to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as child trafficking.(1)
Child Protection Unit	Investigate cases of child abuse, including the use of children in commercial sexual exploitation. Operates under the Commission for Criminal Investigations of the RNP.(10, 42, 43)
National Public Prosecution Authority (NPPA)	Prosecute violations of labor laws, including laws on child labor.(10, 38-40)
Directorate for Anti-Gender-Based Violence	Assist victims of the worst forms of child labor through anti-gender-based violence officers. Operates under the RNP, at each of the 78 police stations in Rwanda.(8)
Directorate General of Immigration and Emigration	Receive referrals for trafficking cases and employ an anti-trafficking specialist.(13) Verify that children transported across the border are traveling with the permission of their parents or guardians. Train border and immigration officials to identify potential trafficking victims. (10, 44)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2015, labor law enforcement agencies in Rwanda took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

† Data are from January 1, 2014 to December 31, 2014

‡ Data are from January 1, 2015 to December 31, 2015

In 2015, MIFOTRA revised its interpretation of Labor Law No 13/2009 to comply with ILO. C. 81 by permitting labor inspectors to conduct inspections outside of normal business hours. The new interpretation of this law allowed labor inspectors to conduct inspections by pre-notification to employers, or by conducting surprise unannounced visits, or by calling employers into the district offices.(1) According to MIFOTRA, the number of labor inspectors was inadequate to monitor and enforce child labor laws, but MIFOTRA had adequate transportation to carry out labor inspections During the year, the MIFOTRA received training by the ILO that focused on the laws of Rwanda and its commitment to international conventions such as ILO. C. 138 on child labor and ILO. C. 182 on the worst forms of child labor. (1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2015, criminal law enforcement agencies in Rwanda took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7).

The Rwandan National Police (RNP) operates an anti-trafficking unit within the force's Interpol directorate in the RNP. The unit is staffed with 15 full-time officers.(8, 17, 19, 45). The RNP has expanded police training on child sexual exploitation, gender based violence, and trafficking in the past year. With support from Interpol, the RNP has placed officers at the Kigali International Airport and 13 land border crossings who are trained in identifying and combatting trafficking in persons.(8, 46)
