publisher's note

We have been planning our editorial calendar for 1996 and I think it's shaping up to be a good one. The cover stories we're looking at include Gambling in Japan; Hit Products of 1995; Scandals, Japanese-style; Living with Earthquakes; TV News in Japan; Anatomy of a Japanese Restaurant; Modeling in Japan, and some others that are still in the formative stages. (I have to say that we do get tired of having the word "Japan" or "Japanese" in almost every cover story title, but given the nature of Mangajin, I guess it's unavoidable.)

Of course, there is a limit to the advance planning we can do. Some of the content—most notably, manga—has to be left open, and is finalized only at the very last minute.

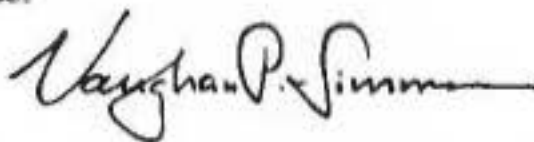

The meetings that we have to discuss cover story topics can get rather heated, and one of the issues that came up for debate this year was just what is included in the scope of "pop culture." (You'll note that our front cover carries the legend "Japanese Pop Culture and Language Learning.")

When I was developing the prototypes for Mangajin back in 1988, one of the goals I had in mind was to provide a counterbalance to the stereotypical image of Japan as a land of tea ceremony, Zen meditation, flower arranging, etc. Which is not to say that all those traditional cultural icons and activities are not an important part of Japanese society. Even going into the 21st century, they are still popular with a surprisingly wide range of the Japanese population, and knowing a little about them is important in understanding who the Japanese are.

In that traditional culture remains popular, it overlaps with pop culture. But the word "pop" includes the connotation of "modern" as well as "popular." Pop culture is contemporary, and is usually still evolving. A big part of the evolutionary force that shapes pop culture is economic pressure. In fact, one of the dictionary definitions of "pop" is "intended for the popular taste, esp. as exploited commercially." So in that sense, pop culture cuts through the clutter and lets you see what people find appealing enough to pay for.

In selecting manga, we limit our searches to the mainstream magazines that appeal to a wide enough range of Japanese readers to secure a place on the crowded newsstands. Likewise, in choosing topics for our cover stories, we try to look at phenomena that give insights into the mass psyche. We want to provide a kind of candid snapshot of what is happening on the streets in Japan.

Speaking of what is happening on the streets, I hope you'll find this issue's cover story on Japan's car culture to be an excellent example of the window on pop culture that Mangajin can provide.

Mangajin is a made-up word combining manga ("comics/cartoons") and jin ("person/people"). It sounds almost like the English word "magazine" as rendered in Japanese—magajin. All of the Japanese manga in Mangajin were created in Japan, by Japanese cartoonists, for Japanese readers.

THE KANJI REVO

WILD GUESS: You're studying Japanese, and you've found yourself somewhere near the base of Kanji Mountain looking up. No end in sight, and no clue how solid the ground below you is. Every step is a battle, and it seems like every time you stop to rest, you slip back to where you started.

WELL WE'VE BEEN THERE. Spectra Kanji was conceived, designed, and developed by people who have scaled Kanji Mountain the hard way, and then produced the dream product we would have killed for when we were starting out. So now you don't have to go through what we did. The days of brute-force mountain climbing are over forever.

2000+ KANJI
5000+ COMPOUNDS

KANJI

SLASH YOUR STUDY TIME
IN HALF!

1 YOU WANT POWER— SPECTRA KANJI DELIVERS

Kanji characters, though extremely diverse and seemingly random, are actually packed with valuable patterns. They are built from the same basic components ("elements"), and their structure is rich with clues as to how they're read.

You've probably noticed some of the more obvious patterns, but until you exploit all patterns fully, you're basically forced to approach every new kanji as a bunch of random pen-strokes with a bunch of random readings and meanings.

That's where Spectra Kanji comes in. With Spectra Kanji, you master kanji and their components in a systematic and comprehensive way.

You get exactly the information you need, exactly when you need it. You use what you already know to master what you don't, reinforcing both in the process. Mastering kanji actually gets progressively easier, not harder.

And make no mistake: Though it does provide powerful search capabilities, Spectra Kanji isn't just another software reference tool. It's a revolutionary new kanji-learning methodology that allows you to blaze past the study phase and move on to actually using kanji in real life—which is, after all, why you're studying them in the first place.

2 YOU WANT FLEXIBILITY— SPECTRA KANJI DELIVERS

Spectra Kanji makes it easy for you to take control of your own learning process. A key feature of the Spectra Kanji methodology is that it works equally well no matter which elements, kanji, and compounds you choose to group together. There's no rigid order to follow—you call the shots.

Let your curiosity be your guide. Want to study the kanji that contain a particular component? Or the 50 kanji appearing most frequently in newspapers? Or the 100 appearing least frequently? How about all the kanji which have between 4 and 7 strokes, are studied in grades 2 through 5 in Japan, and have index numbers between 55-1070 in Nelson's Japanese-English Character Dictionary? With Spectra Kanji, a few mouse clicks and a couple of key strokes will take you wherever you want to go.

And you'll be amazed at how naturally Spectra Kanji works in conjunction with any other Japanese study materials you're using. Working with textbooks? Following a curriculum? Just create kanji groups that parallel the kanji you cover, and use those as your springboard.

In fact, to give you a taste of the kind of synergy that's possible, we're even including groups containing the kanji from every issue of Mangajin ever published—including the one you're holding right now!

3 YOU WANT FOCUS— SPECTRA KANJI DELIVERS

Even with all the freedom Spectra Kanji gives you to explore, this isn't just a random romp in the wilderness. Spectra Kanji also monitors your progress and keeps you on track toward your ultimate goals of mastering the kanji universe.

Self testing is available in a variety of forms. When viewing a group in card view, for example, you can selectively hide and reveal sections of the cards for a quick, easy pop quiz. Or you can let Spectra Kanji grill you with questions on the keywords, readings, and structure of the items in any group.

When you feel comfortable with a kanji, element or compound, mark it as "familiar." Familiar items will always automatically be displayed in a different color from unfamiliar terms—in any group, in any view. So any time you study a group, you can instantly see how much you've already covered, and how far you still need to go.

And to tie it all together, Spectra Kanji can even give you comprehensive tests on all of your familiar kanji, elements, and compounds, so you can find out just how familiar with them you really are. With Spectra Kanji you have a concrete way to gauge both the quantity and the quality of your progress. And you'll always have a concrete answer when someone asks you how many kanji you know!

EVOLUTION HAS BEGUN!

WINDOWS
MACINTOSH

Welcome to the Brave New World of Kanji Study As It Should Be...

The foundation of the Spectra Kanji methodology is the ability to freely create and manipulate your own customized groups of elements, kanji, and compounds. Add, delete, or highlight items based on a wide variety of criteria: meaning, reading, components, stroke count, grade at which studied in Japan, relative frequency in Japanese newspapers, index in several popular kanji dictionaries, etc. Sort your groups into any order you like based on these same criteria. Effortlessly move or copy individual or multiple items from one group to another. You can even pull all of the kanji from your standard (Shift-JIS) Japanese text files!

CARD VIEW

Here's where the power of the methodology takes shape. The elements, kanji, or compounds in a group are transformed into a deck of turbo-charged flash cards. Flip back and forth through the cards in sequence, or jump around in random order. Quiz yourself by selectively hiding and revealing areas on the cards. When you master a card, pull it from the deck, and keep going until you've mastered them all. Switch between the four lists of additional information described below at the touch of a button.

When you see an element, kanji, or compound in card view, you have at your fingertips everything you need in order to tattoo its structure, readings, and meanings into your brain forever. It's just-in-time learning taken to its full potential.

The component building blocks, which comprise the target item, along with their keywords and primary readings, in the order in which they are written. Mentally create a vivid image (and corresponding phrase or story line) which ties together the keyword of the target item and the keywords of its respective components. Focus on that image for a few seconds, and the structure of the target kanji or element is yours forever. Sound crazy? Try it. It works like magic.

The kanji and elements which contain the target item, along with their keywords and readings. After you've mastered the target item and its components, learning any of the items in this list would be a natural next step.

The words which contain the target item, along with their readings and meanings. Useful, commonly occurring compounds have been chosen specifically to ease the process of memorizing the on-yomi readings of the kanji they contain.

Certain structural components of kanji actually provide clues as to the probable on-yomi reading of kanji which contain them. If the target kanji contains one of these components, then all other kanji containing that component are listed here. By providing you with this method of easily comparing and contrasting the readings of these kanji, Spectra Kanji places these powerful reading clues at your disposal. You'll not only boost your ability to recall the readings of kanji you've already studied, but also your ability to accurately guess the readings of kanji you encounter for the first time.

responding to reader requests, we have tried out a couple of new formats. Following are some of the responses to the current, no-romaji format.

[The romaji-free format] is a much better way to force lazy readers like me to actually work on hiragana, katakana, and kanji reading comprehension.

KYRA SCHLEIF
Las Vegas, Nev.

I don't believe [the romaji-free format] does any readers a service, not even those who are trying to master kana and kanji. I myself learned kana largely through your help, but I might have given up if I had had to squint at the tiny furigana to figure out where one word began and another ended.

STEVEN SOLOMON
Nashville, Tenn.

I find being able to quickly read the sentences with the romaji translation very useful. However it makes it much more difficult to learn specific kanji. This is especially true with kanji compounds. By displaying the kana over the kanji, it is clear what the pronunciation is for the kanji.

JAY O'DONNELL
Ottawa

I compare your use of romaji to daily newspapers' use of sensational headlines: it increases sales but at the expense of intelligent content. . . You use romaji to attract the attention of the rank beginner of Japanese language, but the time, energy, and magazine space could be better used for more in-depth discussion of

Travel warning

I found your recent "Extravelganza" issue [Mangajin No. 46] most helpful during my recent trip to Japan. The Tsukiji fish market was outstanding! As a technophile, I spent a lot of time in Akihabara. I found most electronics items much more expensive in Japan. However, the Canon Wordtank and Sharp Zaurus are much cheaper there.

Caveat Emptor! In Akihabara, stores will not accept returns, even with the receipt and the item in original packaging! I learned this the hard way trying to return my Wordtank just one day after I bought it to get a more advanced model. The Laox store was unwilling to consider a return.

ALAN T. LEFOR
Baltimore, Md.

Thanks for the tip.

Not down on Brown

Kent Brown [Mangajin No. 49] doesn't need to be criticized by anyone. He made an honest effort and did a fair job with limited abilities in Japanese. As I watch the Japanese news every morning, I simultaneously check the English subtitles to compare them with what the Japanese announcers are saying, and I can assure you the mistakes are numerous. That the translators are Japanese native speakers with limited knowledge of English is obvious.

I say, Good job, Mr. Brown.

Furigana fans—and foes

The manga series "Kono Hito ni Kakero" has been serving as Mangajin's guinea pig in the past several issues. Re-

Correction

It has been brought to our attention that in issue Nos. 43 and 45, an incorrect copyright notice was given for the manga "Crayon Shin-chan" (クレヨンしんちゃん). This manga is published by Futabasha (双葉社), and is reprinted in Mangajin through their permission. We apologize to Futabasha for this oversight on our part.

Don't get your hopes up

Kon'nyaku (a grey, gelatin-like matter) is possibly the most unappetizing Japanese dish that I have ever had the opportunity to turn down. My dislike for kon'nyaku might stem in part from an embarrassing experience I had last year.

Our company trip was to a hot spring resort on the Izu peninsula. Someone in the men's sleeping quarters had purchased a large quantity of kon'nyaku. Since we were unable to eat it all, I was instructed to offer it to any of our female coworkers whom I bumped into on my way to and from the hot spring. I asked each female coworker I met if she would be interested in some kon'nyaku, and to my surprise not a single person accepted my offer.

Later it was explained to me that, due to poor pronunciation on my part, many of the office ladies thought that I was saying konyoku (mixed and oftentimes promiscuous bathing), and one lady even thought that I was saying konyaku ("marriage proposal"). Apparently, both notions were found to be, pardon the expression, unappetizing.

Toilet trauma

A friend of mine went to Japan on a homestay program. One day early in his stay, he came home from school and went straight into the house without announcing himself, taking his host mother quite by surprise. She asked that in order to avoid startling her again, he say "Tadaima" when coming in.

A few days later, he was at the train station and went to use the restroom. He accidentally opened the door on someone who was using the toilet. The man looked quite startled, so my friend reached for his newly learned phrase, "Tadaima." The man looked even more alarmed. Only later did my friend learn that he had told the poor man, "I'm home!"

お湯取り物語 Oyutori Monogatari A Tale of Luxury

Californians, take note! As one way to conserve water, many Japanese have adopted the practice of using recycled bath water for the laundry (of course, Japanese bathwater stays relatively clean, since people wash before jumping into the tub). Albeit sensible, this means of conservation is also a bit of a pain, requiring the use of a bucket or pump to transfer the water from the bath to the washer.

Not that a Japanese housewife would ever complain, of course. Nonetheless, more than a few of them are probably tickled pink to learn about Hitachi's new fully automated washer, equipped with a pump and a yutori hose that filters and delivers the bathwater from the tub to the washer, so you don't have to.

Yutori written in hiragana (ゆとり) means "leeway/latitude/time to spare," often implying a feeling of comfort and ease in lifestyle. Here it is written with the kanji 湯 (yu, "hot water"; it usually gets the honorific prefix o—especially among female speakers) and 取り (tori, "taking," from toru, "take" → "pump") to form a compound that means "pumping the hot water." In other words, with the お湯取り washer, you get ゆとり. (Monogatari means "a tale of.")

My Car, My Castle

Japan's torrid, irrational love affair with the automobile

By Rick Kennedy

One of the first things that hits visitors to Japan is the eerie element of fanaticism with which many ordinary activities are performed. The woman manning the station kiosk arranges her racks of newspapers as though a drill sergeant might show up at any moment. At the end of every run, the train engineer goes through a series of checks on his train's brakes, pantographs, and windshield wipers that is only slightly less rigorous than the pre-launch checks on a Saturn rocket. The assembly of a platter of sushi is a surgical procedure.

But nowhere is this everyday fanaticism seen more clearly than in the treatment afforded private automobiles. In Japan, the family car may easily have more care lavished on it than the family dwelling. This is partly because few Japanese houses are built to standards anything like those used to build Japanese cars (which have the whole of Japanese production technology to draw on), and partly because in Japanese cities, which is where most of the population lives, a car is absolutely unnecessary, and is thus an absolute luxury, like a royal barge. A car is the agreed-upon totem of a better life, a glorious object to be displayed in the driveway like a piece of gilded sculpture.

• torrid = 熱烈な netsuretsu na • eerie = うす気味悪い usukimi warui • platter = 大皿 ōsara • lavish - on = 惜しみなく - を与える oshiminaku o ataru • lavish care on = 人念に手入れをする nyūnen ni teite o suru

The car also gives its owner a private space, with a multi-speaker stereo system far better than the system in the house, and adjustable seats of fabric silky to the touch—much more comfortable than the chairs in the house, if indeed there are chairs in the house at all. A private car is private space lit like a cabaret, a compact castle on wheels where one can do as one pleases. It follows that it does not much matter whether the car is ever actually used or not—and in fact, the average private car in Japan is driven 5,000 miles a year, about a third of the annual mileage of the average private vehicle in the United States.

The two great occasions for the use of the family car are during the summer holiday of Obon and during the New Year's holiday, when virtually all Japanese return to their respective family homesteads in the countryside. The family piles into the car, which has been properly buffed for the occasion, along with everything everybody needs to spend a few days away from home as well as an enormous pile of presents for family and friends. Since the whole country moves out at the same time, the traffic jams on the main highways can be horrific. (Indeed, as I write this in a villa in the mountains in Gunma Prefecture just north of Tokyo, halfway through the Obon holidays, my family and I are calculating the best time to leave for the 150-kilometer trip back to the city. We are not surprised to hear from television that there is a 180-kilometer-long traffic jam on the main expressway.

We are thinking of leaving at two in the morning, hoping—perhaps futilely—that not too many people have the same idea.)

Family trips notwithstanding, having a car in a city like Tokyo makes little sense. You certainly don't need a car to get around town. Tokyo has 61 railway lines and 12 subway lines, not to mention an intricate system of buses, so you never have to wait more than a minute or two before being whisked on your way.

And a car in Tokyo can play demolition derby with your budget. It costs more to buy a car in Japan, even a car made in Japan, than the same car abroad—sometimes far more. By law, you must have a certified parking space for a car before you can buy it, and to rent a parking space can easily cost as much as to rent your apartment. (Tokyo car salesmen spend much of their time tracking down parking spaces they can offer to potential car buyers. Even then, people sometimes have to take a taxi from where they live to where they park their car.) To add to the burden of ownership, gasoline costs $5.00 a gallon and expressway tolls can run to $1.00 a mile.

Akira's friends all know that when he invites them for a ride in his car they first have to take off their shoes and stow them in a box covered with blue felt under the dashboard. Shoe boxes for cars are for sale at big auto-accessory stores like Autobacs for around ¥4,000. They signal to anyone invited into the car that they are entering a homey environment.

The black limousines idling each morning outside the offices of the captains of Japanese industry, waiting to transport them in dignity to corporate headquarters, could take part in a concours d'elegance. While waiting, the chauffeur runs a huge leather duster as long as a sword all over the car to wipe off the slightest speck of dirt. When the chauffeur has finished, he slips the leather duster into a long plastic envelope and carefully puts his badge of office into the trunk.

An automotive parts store that could be found only in Japan

One of the costliest factors of owning a car in Japan, whether you live in Tokyo or not, is shaken (車検), the regular inspection required to keep a car on the road. Shaken sounds harmless enough and even a good idea—there are, after all, no broken-down jalopies on the road in Japan—but at a minimum of $1,000 per inspection, it isn't cheap.

• barge = 御座船 gozabune • concours d'elegance = 高級車コンテスト kōkyūsha kontesuto • buff = 磨き上げる migakiageru • futilely = 空しく munashiku • whisk = さっと運ぶ satto hakobu • be whisked on one's way = さっと連れ去られる satto tsuresarareru • demolition derby = ポンコツ車のぶつけ合い競争 ponkotsusha no butsukeai kyōsō • play demolition derby with ~ = ~をめちゃくちゃにする ~ o mechakucha ni suru • stow = しまい込む shimaikomu • homey = 家庭的な / 居心地の良い kateteiki na/igokochi no yoi

In the inspection, the car is run through an elaborate series of tests and any failure has to be remedied. If the turn signals do not blink the required number of times per minute, they will have to be replaced. A scratch on the headlight glass means a new headlight glass. Tires without the prescribed amount of tread must be replaced. New passenger cars must undergo shaken after three years and then every two years until they are ten years old. From then on it is an annual affair.

As can be imagined, shaken is a major concern for owners and buyers alike—classified ads offering used cars invariably state when the car is due for inspection.

Still, as a huge sign at a Tokyo used-car dealer has it, "Every Body Needs Wheels." Japanese youths are as car-crazy as their California contemporaries, whose low-riding, tangerine-flaked babies with tinted glass all around strike young Shibuya-ites (Shibuya is Tokyo's Dudesville, the place to hang out and be seen) as a magnificent personal statement. Enamored of the American cars they have seen documented in films like American Graffiti, the Shibuya cadre parade their versions—four-wheel-drive rain-forest-explorer vehicles with grill guards, bush bars, and saucer-eyed yellow fog lights; Monster Cars with tires as tall as a store front, which elevate the cab so far off the pavement motorscooters can whip underneath—up Dogenzaka (named after a Buddhist monk), the Shibuya runway for automotive promenades, then around through the dim back streets, and up Dogenzaka again, the bass on the CD player thumping like the heart of a deranged animal. Driving as theater.

If there is any doubt as to the pride of possession engendered by a gleaming new automobile, only observe the fuss if one car even touches the bumper of another while easing into a parking space.

Whereas an American is likely to shrug his shoulders in such a situation, in Japan the bumper will be scrupulously inspected by the parties involved, and if there is any discernable mark at all, the police will be called on to adjudicate. Often, the police will resolve the difficulty on the spot by asking the offended car owner how much it would cost to put the damage right, then asking the offending driver to hand that amount of cash over to the other driver. Result: no insurance claims, no call for lawyers.

In truth, however, cars rarely touch in Japan, which probably has something to do with the fact that getting a driver's license is an arduous rite of passage. Indeed, it is all but impossible to get a license without being certified by a driving school as having undergone a formal course of study. This may amount to taking upwards of thirty hours of instruction and may cost as much as $3,000.

During the New Year's holidays, cars are driven to the local temple to be blessed. A brocade amulet to guard against accidents in the coming year is purchased and hung from the rearview window—Japan's fuzzy dice.

runs through a checklist before moving off, including the tire pressure, the operation of the brake lights and direction signals, the battery charge, and the cleanliness of both the front and rear license plates. They learn how an internal combustion engine works in considerable detail. They learn to open their windows at railway crossings in order to listen for the coming of a train. And so on.

There was a time when young Japanese went to the United States for the summer for the express purpose of obtaining a US driver's license, which they could trade in for a Japanese license upon their return to Japan after passing a simple eye test. (Unfortunately, this loophole, originally designed to accommodate experienced foreign drivers, has been eliminated.) On the opposite end of the spectrum are young Japanese who don't own cars but who subject themselves to the tortuous procedure required to get a license just to prove themselves. They are proud to be called "paper drivers."

Whether it is due to all this training or not, the driving skills of the ordinary Japanese motorist are noticeably more refined than those of more happy-go-lucky drivers in other parts of the world.

This is a good thing, for Japanese roads are so narrow that if drivers don't point their car with absolute accuracy, they will run into something. The eight-lane highways of Los Angeles seem to a Tokyo driver, who is used to driving on roads where mothers push baby carriages scant millimeters away from his vehicle, and where he sometimes has to fold his side mirror in to pass another car, like a Cannonball race course.

Politeness is another noticeable feature of driving in Japan. There are fatheads on Japanese roads, of course, but for the most part road etiquette is elaborate and well observed. For instance, at night it is

Whereas American car buyers give a ritual kick to the tires and peer under the hood to check how big the engine is, Japanese buyers inspect the body paint for tiny imperfections, check that the bumpers are installed absolutely symmetrically, and use a steel measure to ensure that the defogging lines in the rear window are straight. If the gas cap doesn't fit snugly, the car is defective.

Names of models of Japanese cars are not quite real words—they suggest some specific automotive mythology. Some examples: Widen, Datsun, Sunny, Turbo, Cresta, Cima, Emina, Goldina, Fatima, Capella.

Japan's infamously eager-to-please gas station attendants, at work drives and what they think of it. He will advise younger members of the family who aspire to car ownership as to what is available. He will drop by on birthdays to say hello, perhaps leaving a little gift.

When a new model comes out that the salesman thinks the family might be interested in, he will take the family out for a spin in it. If the family should decide to buy a car made by his company he might take them out to dinner and present them with an accessory for the new car.

The salesman who has already sold a car to a particular family wants to be able to sell a new car to that same family a few years down the road. He encourages a family's identification of itself as a Honda family or a Toyota family by overseeing maintenance of their car. When it is time for a check-up, he will call them to arrange an appointment, then deliver a loaner car for them to use while their car is being serviced. After their car is serviced, he will bring it back washed and polished, spick-and-span inside and out. These special services cost money, of course, adding to the already considerable expense of owning a car in Japan.

All of the foregoing may give the impression that buying a car in Japan is an irrational act. It is, but the Japanese countryside is beautiful and best explored by car, and a car is undeniably handy when you want to pick up guests from the station or bring home several cases of good imported Belgian beer.

The sensible man's solution, provided he is not too tall or too wide, is the K-jidōsha (軽自動車), where K stands for kei (軽), meaning "light," and jidōsha means "car." With the exception of Nissan and Toyota (the two largest car makers), all Japanese auto manufacturers make versions of these serious small cars, which are ideal for pattering around town and for short trips on the weekend.

By law, the K-jidōsha engine can displace no more than 660 cc. Still, this gives these cars the

The newsstands overflow with car magazines. Some specialize in nostalgic commentary about the struggles of the Japanese auto industry to get back on its feet after the war, when vehicles were taxed by the number of wheels—it was the era of the three-wheel truck, and Japanese (though crude, had character. Car Graphic features glossy articles about foreign dream cars like the 1935 Bugatti and the 1928 Bentley, with photographs so loving they look airbrushed. These in the market for a used car pick up a bi-weekly called Car Sensor which has photographs of thousands of used vehicles, all described in nipping detail.

the light to change. This way, in the unlikely event that you are rear-ended, you won't be slammed into the car in front of you. There is also an agreed-upon set of signals used to give another driver permission to do something and to acknowledge the kind gesture of another driver—a driver flicks his high beams to suggest that you go ahead; you flick your emergency lights to thank him.

Between the exorbitant costs of car ownership and the high expectations placed on drivers, there is little about driving in Japan that isn't at least somewhat daunting. Consequently, whether or not to buy a car, and which car to buy, are major decisions. Japanese auto makers have recognized this fact by creating a sales force that spends years nurturing prospective customers, including both new drivers and those who have already bought from a rival company.

An automobile salesman is assigned to a territory of about 10,000 potential customers for his entire career. He visits each family in his territory at least once a year. Over the years, he will get to know what car a family

When you pull into a Japanese gas station for gas, a team of crisply uniformed attendants will descend on your car. They will wipe the windshield, mirrors, and headlights, empty the ashtray, and ask you if you would like your floor mats cleaned. Your gas tank filled, they will ask you which way you are going, then stop traffic to let you get back on the road, bowing and doffing their hats to wish you on your way.

oomph of a serious motorcycle, which is enough to carry four people 80 kph (about 50 mph) on an expressway, the speed limit for this category of vehicle. In most situations, particularly when there is a long traffic jam to be worked through, 80 kph is sufficient. Additional advantages of K-jidōsha are that you can fill the gas tank for a quarter of what it takes to fill the tank of a full-size car, and that highway tolls, parking, and insurance are significantly cheaper than for a full-size car. K-jidōsha can squeeze into parking spaces full-size cars wouldn't even look at.

A uniquely Japanese concept (with the exception, perhaps, of the Italian Fiat 500), K-jidōsha are more than miniaturized big cars. They are small cars built to the same standards as their full-size stablemates but whose design has been completely rethought. For example, the Honda Today, which sells for less than $10,000, has a single long windshield wiper, because its windshield is less than two-thirds the width of that of a conventional family car.

Incidentally, K-jidōsha cannot be imported to the United States, another car-loving country that clearly stands to benefit from driving small, low-cost, fuel-efficient cars, because they are "underpowered." Maybe it's not the Japanese who are the irrational ones after all. ❖

Bringing Home The Sushi

Japanese Business through Japanese Comics

An inside look at the trials, tribulations and triumphs of Japan's salarymen (and women)

The culture of the business world is so pervasive in Japan that it has become a popular topic for movies, TV programs, novels, and, of course, manga, the famous "comics" read by millions of Japanese daily.

Now Mangajin, publisher of Mangajin magazine, brings you Bringing Home the Sushi: Japanese Business Through Japanese Comics, a collection of business manga stories by some of the most popular artists and writers in Japan. You can learn about the human side of the Japanese business world simply by enjoying these fun-to-read yet richly informative manga.

Bringing Home the Sushi uses nine different "business manga" selections to take an in-depth look at various aspects of Japanese corporate life. They provide a unique peek behind the curtain that shields so much of the Japanese business world from foreign eyes.

The stories are presented with English translations in the "balloons." The original Japanese is shown at the bottom of the page for readers, Japanese as well as non-Japanese, who want to use the book as a language-learning aid. Introductory essays by leading Japanese business experts are also included.

From Section Chief Shima—Japan's most popular salaryman...

ALSO INCLUDES INTRODUCTORY ESSAYS BY TOP JAPAN EXPERTS...

Bringing Home the Sushi also gives you introductory essays by top Japanese business experts like Glen Fukushima of AT&T Japan; T.R. Reid of the Washington Post; Jeannie Lo, author of Office Ladies, Factory Women; Peter Duus, William H. Bonsall Professor of History at Stanford University and others.

MANGAJIN's

BASIC JAPANESE THROUGH COMICS

BASIC JAPANESE THROUGH COMICS is the ideal supplement to learning Japanese from textbooks. The book uses lifelike situations from real manga to explain linguistic and cultural points quickly and memorably.

In each chapter one specific concept of basic Japanese—a phrase, word, or hard-to-grasp idiom—is carefully examined and explained.

The lessons cover a wide array of Japanese expressions and illustrate usage and cultural context, providing insights into not only the language but the way the Japanese behave, think, and see the world as well.

Each chapter gives you about six pages of illustrations from manga covering:

KATSUSHIKA Q

葛飾 Q Katsushika Kyū

by とみさわ 千夏
Tomisawa Chinatsu

Katsushika Q was serialized in ビッグコミックスペリオール (Big Comic Superior) during 1991–1993. Katsushika is the name of a ward in Tokyo (葛飾区, Katsushika-ku) where the central character, Kyū-san, runs a coffee shop with his sidekick, Gorō.

The stories combine slapstick humor, visual gags, and parody, and take some strange twists. Kyū and Gorō usually appear as humans, but in one extended story line featured in Mangajin No. 28, Kyū turns into a penguin.

Incidentally, Kyū's name is sometimes written as the number nine in Japanese (九), sometimes with the English letter "Q," and sometimes phonetically in kana.

The author, Tomisawa Chinatsu, was born in 1959 in Aomori, a prefecture in northern Japan. He won a number of minor manga awards and was featured in the mainstream men's magazine Shōnen Jump, but didn't hit the jackpot until 1991, when "Katsushika Q" took off. Like Kyū and Gorō, Tomisawa lives in Tokyo's Katsushika district. He uses his daughter's name, Chinatsu, as part of his pen name.

Bōsōzoku Wannabes

In this episode, Kyū and Gorō get on a freeway outside of Tokyo during a long holiday and encounter a virtual parade of "Sunday drivers." While some of them are downright dangerous, others are simply annoying, but they all get under the skin of these sophisticated Tokyoites. Our heroes are particularly galled at those who have added gangster accessories to their vehicles in a pathetic attempt to look macho. Most of these affectations are well out of fashion, making the drivers seem even more ridiculous.

The fads Kyū and Gorō encounter are all in imitation of bōsōzoku ("speed tribes"), the Japanese variety of juvenile delinquent. Bōsōzoku can be dangerous, but they are mostly just irritating, largely because of one of their favorite activities: roaring around town late at night in souped-up cars and motorcycles that are outrageously loud.

The first bōsōzoku-style decoration the boys see is tail-lights covered in white tape. This practice was copied from race-car drivers, who did it to prevent pieces from scattering in an accident. Nowadays, the racers use clear plastic film to do the job, and the practice has all but disappeared among bōsōzoku, too.

Truck drivers in Japan are famous for their gaudy, hyper-decorated cabs, and the bōsōzoku are often inspired by their ideas. At one time, truckers attached straps, similar to those used by commuters on the subway, to the inside of the driver's side of their cabs, making it easier to get in and out. The bōsōzoku copied this idea because it made it easier for them to get into their cars through the window, another fad (called hakonori) of the time. But the straps (tsurikawa) banged against the window while the car was in motion, so the fad passed.

Truck drivers still decorate their vehicles with hotarudama—strings of colorful, blinking lights (hotaru means "firefly") that they place all over the cab. In the bōsōzoku adaptation, the lights are strung only along the back of the car, but this fad, too, has passed; the current trend is to illuminate the underside of the car with a non-flashing light.

Faced with all this foolishness, Kyū is inspired to employ a little gangland symbolism of his own: he instructs Gorō to hold out his hand with his little finger half-hidden. This mimics a tradition among members of the Japanese mafia, or the yakuza—much tougher customers than the bōsōzoku.

1 Noriko: 大変 なの、すぐ 来て!!
Taihen na no. Sugu kite!
 trouble (explan.) immediately [please] come
 "We've got a problem. Come right away!" (PL2)

- taihen refers to a "serious/terrible/troublesome situation." The feeling here is that she has some kind of an emergency.
- kite is the -te form of kuru ("come"), here being used as an abrupt request.

2 Q: 典子ちゃん!
Noriko-chan!
 (name-dim.)
 "Noriko!" (PL2-3)

- -chan is a diminutive version of -san ("Mr./Ms.") used with names (usually the given names) of close friends, children, and some animals.

3 Sound FX: カタン
Katan
 (sound of "closed" sign hitting the glass as he puts it in the window)

4 Title: 29日 の 日曜日
Nijūkunichi no Nichiyōbi
 29th day (=) Sunday
 Sunday the 29th

Q: よし、行くぞ、ゴロー!!
Yoshi, iku zo, Gorō!
 good/all right will go (emph.) (name)
 "All right, let's go, Gorō!" (PL2)

Gorō: ハ... ハイ!
Ha- hai!
 (stammer) yes/OK
 "Y-yeah!" (PL3)

- -nichi is the suffix used to name most of the days of the month beyond the 10th (the exceptions are the 14th, 20th, and the 24th); it's also used when counting the same number of days, so nijūkunichi can mean either "the 29th" or "29 days." Since the day of the week is also given, we know it means the former here.
- nichi = "sun," and -yōbi refers to "days of the week," so nichiyōbi = "Sunday."
- yoshi is the old dictionary form of the adjective ii/yoi ("good/fine/OK"). Its use in modern Japanese is mostly as an interjection—often, as here, when beginning an action. See Basic Japanese No. 49.
- zo is a rough, masculine particle for emphasis.

5 Gorō: 何か あった んですか?
Nanika atta n desu ka?
 something occurred (explan.-?)
 "Did something happen?"
 "Is something wrong?" (PL3)

Q: わからん!! とにかく、かの有名な
Wakaran! Tonikaku, kano yūmei na not know at any rate well known 遊園地 で 待ってる ことだ。
yūenchi de matteru te koto da.
 amusement park at is waiting (quote) thing is "I don't know. At any rate, she says she's waiting at that famous amusement park." (PL2)

- atta is the plain/abrupt past form of aru; it usually means "exist/be [in a place]" for inanimate things, but it can also be "occur/take place" when speaking of events (an event "exists" when it occurs/takes place). N desu ka asks for an explanation, so Nanika atta n desu ka? is literally "Is it that something occurred/happened?" The question is almost always asked when there are clear signs that something is not normal, so it usually means "Is something wrong?"
- wakaran is a contraction of wakaranai ("not know/understand"), negative of wakaru ("come to know/understand").
- kano is frequently used with yūmei na with the implication of "that famous ~ that everybody knows about."
- de marks the place where an action occurs.
- matteru is a contraction of matte iru ("is/are waiting"), from matsu ("wait").
- te here is a colloquial equivalent of the quotative to iu.
- koto is literally "thing," but here it's being used more abstractly to mean "situation"; ~ te koto da (or to iu koto da) literally means "the situation can be/has been described as ~" → "he/she says that ~."

6 Q: よしっ、道は すいてる ぞ!!
Yoshi!, michi wa suiteru zo!
 good/OK roads as for are uncrowded (emph.)
 "Good! Traffic is light!" (PL2)

Sound FX: ゴオオオ
Gō—
 Roar (sound of car taking off)

- here yoshi is an interjection expressing satisfaction.
- suiteru is a contraction of suite iru ("is empty/uncrowded"), from the verb suku ("become empty/less crowded").

7 Q: 待ってろ、典子ちゃん!
Mattero, Noriko-chan be waiting (name-dim.)
 "Wait right there, Noriko!" (PL2)

- mattero is a contraction of matte iro, the abrupt command form of matte iru ("is waiting"), from matsu.

1 FX: クイ〜
Kuii-
Swoooooop (effect of car cutting them off)

Gorō & Q: わあっ!
Wā!
 (exclam.)
“Yow!”

Sound FX: ギャギャク

 (exclam.)
Yi-yikes!

2 Gorō: 危ない なー。後ろ も 見ないで
Abunai nā. Ushiro mo minaide dangerous (colloq.) behind even without looking いきなり車線 変更 をしました よ。 ikinari shasen henkō o shimashita yo.
 suddenly lane change (obj.) did (emph.)
“That’s really dangerous. Without even looking behind them, they suddenly changed lanes.”
“Talk about reckless! They changed lanes without even looking.” (PL3)

Q: ああ。
Ā.
“No kidding.” (PL2)

Sound FX: ドクンドクン
Dokkun dokkun
Thump thump (effect of heart pounding)

- minaide is a negative -te form of miru (“look”). The negative -te form of a verb followed by another action implies the second action was done without doing the first.
- shasen henkō is a noun referring to a “lane change,” and shasen henkō o suru is its verb form (shimashita is the PL3 past form of suru) → “change lanes.”
- ā is an informal affirmation, either affirming that the speaker is listening or that he agrees.

3 Sound FX: ヒョオオオ
Hyōō
 (effect of car cutting across road)

Gorō & Q: わあっ!!
Wā!
 (exclam.)
“Yow!”

4 Gorō: なんだ? なにか 変 です よ、今日 は。
Nan da? Nanika hen desu yo, kyō wa.
 what is something strange is (emph.) today as for “What’s going on? Something’s weird today.” (PL3)

Q: ハッ
Ha!
 (catching his breath in sudden realization)

- nan is a contraction of nani (“what”).
- Gorō’s syntax is inverted; normal order would be Kyō wa nanika hen desu yo.

5 Q: 4月 29日
Shigatsu nijūkunichi
 4th month 29th day
“April 29th.”

Q: こ... これ は...
Ko, kore wa...
 (stammer) this as for
“I-it’s...”

- April 29th is the first in a series of closely spaced national holidays spanning from late April to early May. It originally celebrated Emperor Shōwa’s birthday, but was renamed Midori no Hi (“Greenery Day”) and retained as a national holiday even after his death in 1989. The national holiday celebrating the present emperor’s birthday, Tennō Tanjōbi, is on December 23rd.

6 Q: ゴールデンウィークの 初日 じゃないか!
Gōruden Uūku no shonichi ja nai ka!
 golden week of first day is it not?
“the first day of Golden Week!” (PL2)

- Gōruden Uūku, from the English “Golden Week,” is a term coined in Japan to refer to the above-mentioned holiday period running from April into May. Workers can get a vacation of as many as 10 days by combining weekends, 3 national holidays, and May Day, which many companies give employees off. The other two national holidays besides Midori no Hi are Kenpō Kinenbi (“Constitution Memorial Day”) on May 3rd, and Kodomo no Hi (“Children’s Day”) on May 5th.
- translating ja nai ka literally as “is it not?” makes it sound quite tentative, but the question is purely rhetorical, and is in fact a strong assertion.

7 Gorō: と いう こと は...
To iu koto wa...
 (quote) say thing as for
“Which is to say...” (PL2)

Sound FX: ギョク
Goka
Gulp (effect of swallowing hard)

Hyan hyan Hyān hyān
Arf arf! Arf arf! (dog yapping)

Q: わあ!!
Wā!
 (exclam.)
“Yikes!”

- wan wan is the standard dog’s bark in Japanese; hyān hyān here suggests a particularly shrill bark, of the kind typically heard from smaller dogs.

1 Q: 出た な、連休 名物、
Deta na, renkyū meibutsu, appeared (colloq.) long holiday specialty 犬の顔出し車!
inu no kacadashi-guruma,
 dog's sticking-out-face car

Sound FX: ヒャンヒャンヒャン
Hyan hyan hyan
Arf arf arf! (yapping)

Q: (thinking) ウチ置いてくりゃ いい じゃねえか。
Uchi oite kurya ii ja nē ka, home if leave behind is good/best is it not?
"Isn't it best to leave them at home?"
Why don't they just leave them at home?! (PL2)

- ren- means "consecutive," and -kyū means "holiday/day off," so renkyū refers to a "long holiday." Since Saturday has traditionally been a half-day of work in Japan (though this is changing), even two days off in a row qualifies, and Golden Week offers the ultimate in renkyū.
- oite kurya ii is a colloquial oite kureba ii, from oite kuru (lit., "leave and come" → "leave behind"). The -ba ii form (lit., "is good/best if ~") often implies that's what the person should do—especially when accompanied by an assertive ja nē ka (= ja nai ka; see above).

2 Gorō: ハイ。
Hai. "Here." (PL3)

- hai is used like "here" when handing a person something.

3 Q: 下はキケンだ。高速を使おう!!

"It's too dangerous down below. Let's take the toll road." (PL2)

Sound FX: ゴオオ
Gō
Roaaar (roar of cars speeding by)

Sound FX: ブロロロ
Burororo
Brubrubrum (low engine sound of car at slow speed or just starting up)

- kōsoku is short for kōsoku dōro (lit., "high-speed road"), the term for "expressway/limited access highway," all of which are toll roads in Japan.
- tsukaō is the volitional form of tsukau ("use") → "take."

4 Sound FX: ゴオオオ
Gōō

"Can't you even merge, you pinhead?!" (PL1-2)

Sound FX: カッチカッチ
Katchi katchi
Click click (turn signal)

Sound FX: ビー ビー
Bii, bibi!
Beep Be-beeeeep (sound of horns)

Sound FX: キイ キイ
Kii Kii
Screech Screech (squeal of brakes)

- dekinē = dekinai, negative of dekiru ("can do").
- omē = omae, a rough, masculine word for "you." The vowel combinations ai and ae often change to ē in rough, masculine speech. The rough tone makes this "you" feel more like an epithet: "you pinhead!" Putting omē wa at the end is inverted syntax.

8 Sound FX: グングン
Gun gun
 (effect of rapid/forceful progress—here of the cars stacking up behind them)

Q: 後ろの車もどんどん
Ushiro no kuruma mo don-don behind of cars also more & more

"The cars are really stacking up behind us, too." (PL2)

Q: くそったれ!

Gorō: あはは、テトリス 失敗した みたいだ。
A ha ha, Tetorisu shippai shita mitai da.
 (laugh) Tetris failed like is
"Ha ha ha, it's like a botched game of Tetris." (PL2)

- dan-don is an adverb meaning "rapidly/more and more."
- tomatchatteru is a contraction of tomatte shimatte iru, from tomaru ("stop/come to a halt"). A form of shimau after the -te form of a verb implies the action is regrettable/undesirable; in the form shimatte iru, it's like "have/has regrettably/unfortunately ~."
- shippai shita is the plain/abrupt past form of shippai suru ("fail/botch/make a mistake").
- mitai (da/desu) after nouns, adjectives, and verbs implies "that's the way it seems/that's what it's like."

9 Q: 脱出!

Sound FX: キュキュキュ
Kyu kyu kyu

Q: いったい その 行為 に どういう
Ittai sono kōi ni dōiu
(emph.) that action in what kind of 意味 がある って ゆうんだ?
imi ga aru tte yū nda?
meaning (subj.) exists (quote) say (explan.)
“What meaning do you say could possibly exist in that action?”
“What’s the freakin’ point?!” (PL2)

Gorō: 九さん、 前、 前!!
Kyū-san, mae, mae!
(name-hon.) front/ahead front/ahead
“Q, watch out ahead, watch out ahead!” (PL2)

- megakete is the -te form of megakeru (“aim at”).
- aotte kun is a contraction of aotte kuru no, from aoru (“fan [a fire]/rev [an engine]”). Kuru (“come”) implies the action is being directed at the speaker. N ja nai can be used as a very forceful/abrupt negative command: “Don’t ~!/Stop ~ing!”

4 Q: ハッ、 危ない!
Ha!, abunai!
(interj.) is dangerous
(catching breath) “Oh no!” (PL2)

Sound FX: キュア
Kyua (effect of turning wheel sharply to avoid accident)

- abunai means “dangerous”; used as an exclamation it’s like “oops!/oh no!/yikes!” When directed at another person it serves as “Watch out!”

5 Gorō: どう した んです か?!
Dō shita n desu ka?!
how/what did (explan.) (?)
“What’s the matter?!” (PL3)

Q: 見ろ!!
Miro! “Look!” (PL2)

- dō is “how/what” and shita is the past form of suru (“do/make”), so dō shita can literally mean “what did [you/he] do?” But it’s most commonly used as an idiomatic expression meaning “what’s wrong?/what happened?”

8 Q: 聞いた こともない ナンバー に、
Kiita koto mo nai nanbā ni,

初心者 マーク。

6 (continued)
Q: おまけに 「わ」 ナンバー!!
Omake ni “wa” nanbā!
in addition wa number/plate
“And it’s a wa-plate to hoot!” (PL2)

- kiita is the past form of kiku (“hear”) and koto ga/wa/mo nai after a past verb means “have never ~.”
- nanbā, from the English “number,” is the term used for “license plate” in Japan. The unfamiliar plate (it’s from the Nagoya area) betrays an out-of-town driver.
- shoshinsha māku refers to the tag in the rear window, which newly licensed drivers are required to display for one year. The leaf-shaped tag is green and yellow.
- plates that have the prefix わ (wa) before the number are used for rental cars, so it all adds up to a novice driver from out of town driving a rental car.

7 Q: ついでに 連休 と きた 日 にゃ、 あんた、
Tsuide ni renkyū to kita hi nya, anta, at same time 1 holiday (pte) came day on you

“Yow! Taillights covered over with white tape!” (PL2)

Q: いまだ いる のか、 こういふ 奴?!
Imada iru no ka, kōiu yatsu?! still exist (explan.-?) this kind of guy/fellow
“Do guys like this still exist?” (PL2)

- for a time it was something of a fad among the bōsōzoku (teenage “speed tribes”) to tape over their taillights the way stock car racers used to do. (See introduction.)

9 Gorō: こっちの 車 は つり革、
Kotchi no kuruma wa tsurikawa,

ぶら下がってます よ。

Gorō: ホタル球 まで、 つけてやがる!
Hotarudama made tsukete-yagaru!
firefly light even have attached-(derog.)
“Sheesh! They’ve even got a hotarudama!” (PL1)

- tsurikawa refers to the straps with rings found in commuter trains for commuters to hang on to.
- burasagattemasu is the PL3 form of burasagatte iru (“is dangling/hanging”), from burasagaru (“hang/dangle”).
- hotarudama = the colorful flashing lights attached to the back of cars—an old fad among bōsōzoku. (See introduction.)

- tsukete-yagaru is a contraction of tsukete (the -te form of tsukeru, “stick/attach to”) plus iyagaru (iru plus the derogatory verb suffix -yagaru), so it’s simply a derogatory form of tsukete iru (“have stuck on/attached”).

10

Sign: 子供 が 乗っています。
Kodomo ga notte imasu.
 child/children (subj.) is/are riding
Child on Board

- notte imasu is the PL3 form of notte iru (“is/are riding”) from noru (“get on/ride”).

Q: んだから どうした よー!!
N da kara dō shita yō?!
 because is so what/how did (emph.)
“So what if there is?!” (PL1-2)

Gorō: 九さん、落ちついて...
Kyū-san, ochitsuite.
 (name-hon.) calm down/relax
“Calm down, Q.” (PL2)

- (n) da kara dō shita is commonly used in contentious situations like “So what?!/What difference does that make?!/Why should I care about that?”
- ochitsuite is the -te form of ochitsuku (“calm down/relax”). He’s using the -te form here as a relatively gentle command.

Sound FX: ヒャンヒャン ヒャンヒャン
Hyan hyan Hyan hyan
Arf arf! Arf arf! (yapping)

Q: わあー!!
Wā!
“Aack!”

Sound FX: キイ
Kii
Screech (effect of driver ahead hitting brakes and pulling over to shoulder)

Q: うおお!!
Uō!
“Yow!”

- cars in Japan drive on the left, so the shoulder is on that side of the road. Q’s car has the steering wheel on the left, meaning it’s an imported car. Note that all the other cars have the wheel on the right.

4

Sound FX: カッチカッチ
Katchi katchi
Click click (clicking of emergency flashers)

Q: どう した んだ、あいつ は!!
Dō shita n da, aitsu wa?! what/how did (explan.) that guy as for “What’s with that guy?!” (PL2)

Gorō: 地図 広げます!
Chizu hirogetemasu!
 map is spreading/has spread
“He has spread out a map!”
“He’s looking at a map!” (PL3)

- dō shita n da is the abrupt PL2 equivalent of dō shita n desu ka? seen above. Asking a question with da or n da is masculine, and often sounds quite rough.
- aitsu is an informal word for “that guy/fellow.” The syntax is inverted; normal order would be Aitsu wa dō shita n da?

- hirogetemasu is a contraction of hirogete imasu, PL3 form of hirogete iru, from hirogeru (“spread out”). O, to mark chizu as the direct object, has been omitted.

Q: あー、こんな ばっかし だー!!
Ā, konna n bakkashi dā!
 (interj.) this kind of one only is “They’re all the same!” (PL2)

Gorō: 九さん、前ー!!
Kyū-san, maē!
 (name-hon.) front/ahead
“Q, watch out ahead!” (PL2)

- konna n here is a contraction of konna no, “this kind of” (implying “bad/annoying driver”), plus no acting as the pronoun “one.”
- bakkashi is a colloquial variation of bakari (“only”), so konna no bakkashi da is literally “are only this kind of ones” → “are all like this.” Bakari da after a noun typically implies the objects in question are “all alike.”

Sound FX: グオオオオオ
Guoououou
Vrrrooooo (sound of van backing up)

Q: ヒイイ!!
Hii!
“Yikes!” (PL2)

Sound FX: キッ
Ki! Screech (very brief squeal of brakes)

Sound FX: キイ
Kii
Screeech (longer squeal as Q hits his brakes hard)

Sound FX: ブロロロオ
Burororoō
Brubrubrum (sound of van starting forward again)

10

Driver: あれ?
Are?
 (interj.)
“Huh?” (PL2)

Q: 意味ない こと やってんじゃないよ!!
Imi nai koto yatte n ja nai yo!
 meaningless thing/action don’t be doing (emph.)
“Don’t be doing such meaningless things.”
“Cripes! All that trouble for nothing!” (PL1-2)

- are, when spoken with rising intonation, is an interjection of surprise or bewilderment at something unexpected.
- imi = “meaning/significance,” and imi (ga/no) nai = “is meaningless/without significance.” This modifies koto (“thing,” here referring to an action).
- yatte n ja nai is a contraction of yatte iru no ja nai, where yatte iru is from yaru (informal word for “do”), no is the explanatory no, and ja nai = “is not.” This looks like it adds up to “it’s not the case that [he/you] is/are doing ~,” but here it’s being used as a negative command: “don’t do ~.” Following a non-past verb with a sharp n da can make an abrupt command; following it with a sharp n ja nai can make an abrupt negative command. Of course, in this case it’s not really a command but a ranting comment on what the other driver did.

1 Gorō: 九さん、この先 工事中 だ。
Kyū-san, kono saki kōji-chū da.
 (name-hon.) ahead of here construction-midst is “Q, there’s construction ahead.” (PL2)

右に寄って!
Migi ni yotte!
 right to merge
“Merge right!” (PL2)

Q: よし!!
Yoshi!
 good/OK
“All right!” (PL2)

- saki often refers to an area up ahead on the same road or path; kono saki is literally “ahead of here” → “ahead.”
- the suffix -chū means “during/in the midst of,” so kōji-chū = “in the midst of construction.”
- yotte is the -te form of yoru (“edge/move to the side”), which in traffic often means “merge.” He’s using the -te form as a gentle command.

2 Sound FX: カチ カチ
Kachi kachi
Click click (turning signal)

3 FX: ヌツ
Nu! (effect of car quickly closing gap with the car ahead)

- nu! is used for the effect of someone or something suddenly appearing before one’s eyes—especially when appearing in such a way as to block one’s path.

4 FX: ピタピタピタ
Pita pita pita
 (effect of cars sticking closely together)

Q: あ。
 A. “Geez.” (PL2)

- pita (or pita!) describes something sticking or remaining very close to something else.

5 Q: 入れてくれ よー!!
Irete kure yō!
 put/let in for me/us (emph.)
“Come on, let us in!” (PL2)

Q: サンデー ドライバーくん!
Sandē dorai-bū-kun!
 Sunday driver-(hon.)
“Mr. Sunday Driverrrr!” (PL2-3)

Gorō: ケチ だ なー。
Kechi da nā.
 stingy/mean is (colloq.)
“They’re so mean.” (PL2)

- irete is the -te form of ireru, “put/take/let in.” Kure after the -te form of a verb makes an informal/abrupt request or gentle command: “[do it], please/[do it], will you?” Adding an elongated yō gives it a pleading tone.
- -kun is like -san (“Mr./Ms.”) but is used mainly with male peers or by superiors when addressing or referring to their subordinates of either sex. It usually has a more familiar/casual feeling than -san—though, as in this example, that doesn’t necessarily mean that the speaker actually knows the person he’s addressing.
- kechi is a noun referring to “stinginess/meanness,” and kechi da = “is stingy/mean.”

6 Q: よし、ゴロー、こういう時は
Yoshi, Gorō, kō iu toki wa
 OK (name) this kind of time as for 小指を半分かくして、 koyubi o hanbun kakushite, little finger (obj.) half hide-and 手を上げてみ!
te o agete mi!
 hand (obj.) try raising
“All right then, Gorō, this is when you try putting out your hand with your pinky finger half hidden!” (PL2)

- kakushite is the -te form of kakusu (“hide”).
- agete is the -te form of ageru (“raise”), and mi here is short for miro, the abrupt command form of miru (“see/look at”). Miru after the -te form of a verb means “try [doing the action],” so te o agete mi = “try raising your hand” → “try waving/putting out your hand.”
- little fingers that have been severed at the joint are associated with yakuza—Japan’s organized crime groups.

7 Gorō: どうしてですか?
Dōshite desu ka?
“Why?” (PL3)

Q: いい から!
Ii kara! is good/OK because/so
“Never mind why!” (PL2)

- dōshite is a less formal naze (“why”); adding desu ka to either of these makes it more polite.
- ii, literally “good/fine/OK,” is often used idiomatically to mean “that’s OK” in the sense of “no/never mind.” See Basic Japanese No. 12. Ii kara in response to “why?” is an idiomatic “Don’t ask why/Never mind why/Just do it!”

8 FX: サッ
Sa!
 (effect of quick, deft movement—here of sticking his hand out)

Q: いい よ、もオ!!
Ii yo, mō!
 is good/OK (emph.) already “Forget it!” (PL2)

- mō ii is literally “already good/fine,” meaning “that’s enough.” The syntax is often reversed as we see here.
- Gorō is holding his hand out in a way that reveals his finger isn’t missing after all, which defeats the purpose.

9 Q: くそー、もオ日 が 落ちてきた。
Kusō, mō hi ga ochite kita.
 (expletive) already sun (subj.) is falling/setting
“Cripes, the sun’s setting already!” (PL1-2)

Q: ああ、典子ちゃん!
A, Noriko-chan!
 (interj.) (name-dim.)
“Ahh, Noriko!” (PL2-3)

- ochite is the -te form of ochiru (“fall/drop”), and kita is the plain/abrupt past form of kuru (“come”), so ochite kita is literally “came falling.” With actions that take a certain length of time to complete, -te kuru implies the action has begun and/or is proceeding, so when speaking of the sun, ochite kita becomes “has started setting/is setting.”

1 Q: ギク... 夜。
Giku... yoru.
(fear FX) night
"Gulp... it's night." (PL2)

Gorō: なんですかー?!
Nan desu kā?!
what is it?
"What's that mean?" (PL3)

- giku is a word for the effect of stiffening in fright. It's usually used descriptively, but here it appears he actually says the word, something like an English speaker saying "gulp" to express anxiety instead of simply swallowing hard.
- nan desu ka simply asks "what?" but here Gorō is reacting to Q's expression of fear, so it feels more like "What's wrong?/What're you scared of?"

2 Q: 来るぞ、来るぞ。
Kuru zo, kuru zo.
will come (emph.) will come (emph.)
"They're coming. They're coming." (PL2)

Gorō: 恐ろしいことが...?
Osoroshii koto ga...? fearful thing (subj.)
"Something scary?" (PL2)

- zo is a rough, masculine particle for emphasis.

3 FX: カッ
Ka!
(effect of blinding light)

4 FX: パア!
Pa!
(effect of bright light)

- pa! is the standard FX word for a light coming on, while pā represents a light continuing to shine.

5 Sound FX: カアッ
Kā!
(blinding light)

Q: 来たー!! / ハイビーム!
Kita! Hai biimu! came high beams
"They've come! / The high beams!"
"They're here! / The high beams!" (PL2)

Gorō: まぶしいー!!
Mabushii!
dazzling/blinding
"They're blinding!"
"I can't see!!" (PL2)

- Ka! and kā suggest a particularly intense light, as from the sun, suddenly flaring up or blinding the viewer—i.e., the focus is more on how the light affects the viewer than on whether the light just came on or continues to shine.
- kita is the plain/abrupt past form of kuru ("come").
- strictly speaking, mabushii describes the brightness of the object in question, but as an exclamation it's often like "I can't see!/I'm blinded!"

6 Q: どうして サンデードライバー は
Dōshite sandē doraibā wa
why Sunday driver(s) as for ハイビームで走るんだー?!
hai biimu de hashiru n dā?!
high beams with drive (explan.)
"Why do Sunday drivers drive with their high beams on?!" (PL2)

Q: そんなに目が悪いのか?!
Sonna ni me ga warui no ka?!
that much eyes 's are bad (explan.-?)
"Are their eyes that bad?!" (PL2)

Q: うわー、前が見えない!
Uwā, mae ga mienai!
(exclam.) front/ahead (subj.) can't see
"Aaack, I can't see ahead!" (PL2)

- de indicates manner or means, so hai biimu de means "using high beams" → "with high beams on."
- hashiru is literally "run" but when applied to cars means "drive/move along/travel."

7 Q: ハイビームで走ってて、
Hai biimu de hashittete high beams with are driving-and 前の車がみんなよけていく mae no kuruma ga minna yokete iku ahead that are cars (subj.) all move aside のを不思議だと感じないのか、
no o fushigi da to kanjinai no ka, (nom.)(obj.) is mysterious (qte.) not feel (expl.-?)
キミたちは?
kimi-tachi wa?!
you-(plur.) as for
"When you're driving along with your high beams on, don't you find it a little strange that all the cars in front of you get out of your way?!" (PL2)

- hashittete is a contraction of hashitte ite, the -te form of hashitte iru ("is running/driving"), from hashiru ("run/drive").
- yokete is the -te form of yokeru ("move aside/get out of the way"). Iku ("go") after the -te form of a verb can imply the action of the verb moves away from the subject (here the high-beam drivers).
- no is a nominalizer that makes the complete thought/sentence mae no kuruma ga minna yokete iku ("all the cars ahead move aside") act as a single noun, and o marks it as the object of fushigi da ("is mysterious/strange").
- kanjinai is the negative form of kanjiru ("feel"); the quotative to before it marks the content/nature of what is felt: ~ o fushigi da to kanjiru/kanjinai = "feel/not feel it strange that ~."
- kimi is an informal word for "you," generally used only by males when addressing equals or subordinates. -Tachi makes words referring to people into plurals.
- the syntax is inverted; kimi-tachi wa would normally come at the beginning.

6 Q: うおお、今度は大渋滞だー!!
Uō, kondo wa dai-jūtai dā!
(exclam.) this time/now as for great traffic jam is "Arggh, now we've got a huge traffic jam!" (PL2)

- kondo is literally "this time/occasion," often meaning "now."

9 Sound FX: キッ
Ki!
Screech (sudden braking)

1 FX: パッパッパッパッ
Pa! pa! pa! pa!
Blink blink blink blink (effect of tail lights flashing on and off)

2 FX: パッ
Pa!
Blink

3 Q: て、点滅式 ブレーキランプ。
Te- tenmetsu-shiki burēki ranpu.
 (stammer) blinking-type brake lights
"B-blinking brake lights."

Q: 渋滞 で こいつ の後ろに つくと、 Jūtai de koitsu no ushiro ni tsuku to, traffic jam in this guy in back of if get stuck うっとうしい ぞー!!
uttōshii zō!
 depressing (emph.)

"It's so depressing to get stuck behind one of these guys in a traffic jam!" (PL2)

Q: いったい どこ で 買って くる んだ、
Itai doko de katte kuru nda,
 (emph.) where at buy-and-come (explan.)

その リレー!!
sono rirē!!
 of/for that relay

"Where on earth do they buy the relays for them, anyway?" (PL2)

- koitsu is a contraction of kono yatsu ("this guy/fellow/thing"), a rather rough way of referring to another person.
- tsuku = "stick/adhere/attach"; ushiro ni tsuku can be just "get/line up behind," but here the feeling is like "get stuck behind." To after a non-past verb can make a conditional "if/when" meaning.
- katte is the -te form of kau ("buy"); kuru ("come") is often used after the -te form of a verb to imply the action is/was/will be done before coming to the present location.
- rirē is from English "relay," here referring to the electrical relay that makes the tail lights flash on and off. Sono rirē = "the relay for that." The syntax is inverted again; normal order would put sono rirē (which is the direct object even though the particle o has been omitted) somewhere before the verb.

4 Sound FX: カアッ
Kā!
 (blinding light)

Q: くっ!!
Ku!
"Urk!"

5 Sound FX: ヒャンヒャン ヒャンヒャン
Hyan hyan Hyān hyān
Arf arf! Arf arf! (yapping)

Q: ヒイ!!
Hii!
 (exclam.)
"Good grief!"

6 Q: 恐ろしい! これは 13日 の
Osoroshii! Kore wa jūsan-nichi no terrifying/scary this as for 13th day (=) 金曜日 以上に 恐ろしい。
kin'yōbi ijō ni osoroshii.
 Friday more than is terrifying
"It's terrifying. It's worse than Friday the 13th." (PL2)

Q: 4月 29日 の 日曜日 だー!!
Shigatsu nijūkunichi no nichiyōbi dā!
 4th month 29th day (=) Sunday is
"It's Sunday the 29th of April!" (PL2)

FX: カッ
Ka!
 (effect of rage)

- no makes jūsan-nichi ("the 13th") into a modifier for kin'yōbi ("Friday"), linking them as essentially the same thing: "Friday that is the 13th." The same pattern is repeated with "Sunday the 29th."
- ~ ijō ni means "more than ~."
- the FX word ka! can be used for a blinding light, a fire flaring up, or for a person's anger "flaring."

7 Girl 1: おそい じゃん、典子ちゃん のアッシー!
Osoi jan, Noriko-chan no usshii!
 slow/late is he not? (name-dim.) 's legs
"Your ride sure is late, Noriko." (PL2)

Girl 2: もう バス で 帰ろう よ!
Mō basu de kaerō yo!
 now bus by let's go home (emph.)
"Let's just take the bus!" (PL2)

Noriko: あの バカ、
Ano baka, that fool/idiot
"That jerk!" (PL2)

後で 思いっきり いじめてやる!!
Ato de omoikkiri ijimete yaru!
 later forcefully will bully/torment him
"I'm really going to give it to him later!" (PL2)

- jan is a very informal contraction of ja nai (no/ka), literally, "isn't it?/is it not?" Usually the question is purely rhetorical: "it is ~, is it not? [Yes, it is.]"
- asshi comes from ashi ("legs/feet"), here meaning "transportation/ride." In recent years, Asshi-kun ("Mr. Legs") has become slang for a car-owning boyfriend on whom a girl relies for transportation.
- kaerō is the volitional ("let's/I shall") form of kaeru ("go/come/return home").
- omoikiri is an adverb meaning "decisively/forcefully/with gusto"; colloquially, saying omoikiri (with a small tsu) makes it more emphatic.
- ijimete is the -te form of ijimeru ("tease/bully/torment"), and yaru after the -te form of a verb implies the action will be done for or to someone else.

UNLOCKING THE JAPANESE BUSINESS MIND

UNLOCKING THE JAPANESE BUSINESS MIND is a critically acclaimed book that provides in-depth analysis of the complex cultural dynamics Japanese and Americans must confront when they come together to do business.

Based on the assumption that cultural fluency is the key to success, Unlocking the Japanese Business Mind provides both a concrete framework by which to understand, analyze and interpret cultural differences, as well as practical instruction in the communication, presentation and logic, persuasion, conflict resolution, meeting management, and negotiation skills necessary to conducting successful business with the Japanese.

The book avoids the typical approach of giving simplistic recipes of "dos" and "don'ts" so popular in many "how to do business with the Japanese" books on the market today. Careful analysis and explanation of the building blocks of Japanese culture give the reader a comprehensive understanding of the Japanese business world, rather than a grab-bag of tricks and secret handshake-type gimmicks for operating in Japan. The book focuses not only on how differently Americans and Japanese behave, think and see the world, but, more importantly, on why these differences exist.

Gregory R. Tenhover spent eight years as a management consultant in Japan and the U.S. designing and implementing cross-cultural training programs. A specialist in training Americans and Japanese to work and conduct business together more effectively, he has consulted with such major corporations as Intel, General Electric, Arthur Andersen, Kenwood, and Nomura Securities.

UNLOCKING THE JAPANESE BUSINESS MIND

Gregory R. Tenhover

You Can Judge a Book By Its Testimonials...

*"Tenhover makes the case that cultural literacy matters that to remain ignorant of the historical, political, linguistic, geographic, and other cultural parameters of the Japanese psyche is sure to spell failure for the novice business person approaching Japan. Unlocking the Japanese Business Mind is a tremendous advance over virtually all the 'how to approach Japan' material on the market today."*

— Chalmers Johnson, President, Japan Policy Research Institute; author of MITI and the Japanese Miracle

"Unlocking the Japanese Business Mind avoids the typical approach of giving simplistic recipes of 'dos and don'ts,' Tenhover provides practical insights into the very different ways Japanese and Americans behave, think and see the world, and the problems that can arise when Japanese and Americans interact."

— Dr. Gary Weaver, Professor of International Communication, The American University, Washington, D.C.

"Adeptly combining cross-cultural theory with practical business experience, Tenhover writes insightfully from the perspective of an American who has indeed been in the corporate trenches training Japanese and Americans to more effectively work and conduct business together."

— Dr. George Graen, President, Association of Japanese Business Studies; Professor of Management, University of Cincinnati

"Tenhover's emphasis on the differences between how business is conducted in the United States and Japan and the critical importance of cultural fluency constitute an important contribution to U.S. management literature. This book should be required reading for anyone who contemplates doing business with Japan."

— Glen S. Fukushima, Vice President, American Chamber of Commerce in Japan; Former Deputy Assistant USTR for Japan and China

"... a broad compilation of expert observations about Japan. ... a textbook for Americans about to take up assignment in Japan."

— Sam Jameson, Los Angeles Times Tokyo Bureau Chief

"Unlocking the Japanese Business Mind sets a new standard for cultural literacy. ... This book will become a major force in more effective and substantial cross-cultural communication and awareness. Worry less about how to hold your chopsticks and read this book!"

— Steve Clemons, Director, Japan Policy Research Institute; former Director, Japan-America Society of Southern California

"Cultural differences are real. Tenhover spells out the reasons for these differences. ... an invaluable asset for anyone involved in cross-cultural training."

— Dr. Toshi Kii, Professor of Sociology, Georgia State University; former consultant, Clarke Consulting Group, Dupont Japan, K.K.

Obatarians carry on for all they're worth, and...

Sound FX: キヤッキヤッ ワイワイ ギャーギャー
Kyā! kyā! Wai wai Gyā gyā
 (screaming, gabbing, shouting noises)

- sawagu = "make noise/make merry/be boisterous."
- sawaide is the -te form of sawagu; the -te form acts as a connector (like "and") to the next clause.
- dake here means "as much as," so sawagu dake sawaide means "make merry as much as [they] want/care to" → "carry on for all they're worth."

2 Narration: 船酔いする。
Funa-yoi suru.

- suita is the plain past of suku (空く, "become empty"). Onaka ga suita is a typical way of saying "I'm hungry."
- hara no mushi, from hara no mushi ga naku (lit., "bug in the belly cries" → "stomach growls") indicates hunger. It can also indicate vexation or another emotion.

Sumimasen, uchi, shinai n desu ga.
 (apology) I/we/this business not do (explan.) but "I'm sorry, we don't make change here." (PL3)

On bill: 千円
Sen-en.
¥1,000

- doko demo = "anywhere"; inserting the particle de (for place of action) makes it feel a little like "at just any old place."
- ryōgae is a noun referring to the breaking of larger denominations of money into smaller, or to "currency exchange," as from dollars to yen. Ryōgae shite is the -te form of the verb ryōgae suru ("make change/exchange money")—the -te form here being used as an abrupt request.
- uchi literally means "inside/within" but is used frequently to refer to one's own house/family, company/business, or other group. Here it refers to the woman's small sales stand.
- shinai here is short for ryōgae shinai, negative of ryōgae suru.
- ga literally means "but"; here it just softens the end of the sentence.

2 Obat.: なによーっ!! そこに 小銭 あるじゃないのーっ!!
Nani yō! Soko ni kozeni aru ja nai nō!
 what (emph.) there at coins/small change have do you not?
"What do you mean?! You've got plenty of change right there!" (PL2)

Vendor: こ、これは おつり用 で...
Ko-kore wa otsuri-yō de...
 (stammer) this as for for giving change is
"Th-this is for giving change for purchases." (PL3)

- nani yo (feminine) and nan da yo (masculine) can be used in a challenging tone to protest or express offense at what the other person has said or done.
- kozeni is a noun for "small change"—i.e., the coins used in making change—while otsuri is a noun for the "change" (including bills) that is returned when someone pays more than the exact amount for a purchase.
- -yō is a suffix meaning "for/for the purpose of."
- de here indicates a reason—why she can't use those coins to break Obatarian's ¥1,000 bill.

3 Vendor: あ、すぐ 近くの コンビニエンスストアで
A!, sugu chikaku no konbiniensu sutōa de (interj.) immediately nearby that is convenience store at やってくれますよ。 yatte kuremasu yo.
 will do-(for you) (emph.)
"Oh! They'll do it at that convenience store right over there." (PL2)

Obat.: えっ? "Huh?" (PL2)

- chikaku is a noun form of the adjective chikai ("close/nearby").
- yatte is the -te form of yaru (informal word for "do"), and kuremasu is the PL3 form of kureru, which after the -te form of a verb implies the action is/will be done for the benefit of the subject.

4 Obat.: じゃあ、あとであんたが行ける わね。ハイ。
Jā, ato de anta ga ikeru wa ne. Hai.
 then/in that case later you (subj.) can go (fem. colloq.) here
"Then you can go later, right? Here." (PL2)

- ikeru is the potential ("can/be able to") form of iku ("go").
- hai is often used when holding something out for someone to take or look at, like "here."

1 In Notebook: 1月 20日 たくさん 買った。
Ichigatsu hatsuka: Takusan katta.
January 20th lots bought January 20: Bought a lot. (PL2)

- the counters for days of the month are irregular. The 1st is tsuitachi; the 2nd through the 10th, the 14th, 20th, and 24th get the counter suffix -ka, in several cases with special readings for the numbers (e.g., 2nd = futsuka, 8th = yōka, 20th = hatsuka); the rest get the counter suffix -nichi.
- katta* is the plain/abrupt past form of kau ("buy/purchase").

2 In Notebook: 1月 21日 計算 あわず。
Ichigatsu nijūchinichi: Keisan awazu.
January 21st calculation not match/balance
January 21: Doesn't balance. (PL2)

- awazu* is equivalent to awanai, the negative form of au ("match/fit/come out even"); keisan (ga) awanai means "the calculation does not give the expected/logical/necessary result" → "doesn't compute/balance."

3 In Notebook: 1月 22日
Ichigatsu nijūnichi:
January 22nd
もう 何が何だか分からない。
Mō nani ga nan da ka wakaranai.
[not] anymore what (subj.) what is (?) can't grasp January 22: Can't figure out what's what anymore. (PL2)

- mō* (lit., "already") followed by a negative becomes "no longer ~ /not ~ anymore."
- nani ga nan da* is literally "what is what." A question word followed by -ka wakaranai makes an expression for "don't/can't understand what/who/how ~." Wakaranai is the negative form of wakaru ("come to understand" or "can know/understand").

4 Mom-in-Law: これ が 家計簿 かしら?
Kore ga kakeibo ka?
this (subj.) family account book (?)
"These are your accounts?" (PL2)

Kuriko: あらすじ だけでも と 思いまして。
Arasuji dake de mo to omoimashite.
rough outline/synopsis only even if (quote) think/thought
"I thought, 'Even if it's only a rough outline, [I should put something down].'"
"I thought I should at least give a rough summary." (PL2)

- kakei* = "family/household finances," and -bo is a suffix meaning "ledger/register" → kakeibo = "family/household account book." The task of keeping up with the family's financial affairs is often taken very seriously by Japanese housewives, and these books are generally filled out in great detail.
- arasuji* most typically refers to a rough "outline/synopsis/summary" of a thesis or story.
- dake* = "just/only" and ~ dake de mo = "even if it is only ~" → "at least."
- omoimashite* is the PL3 -te form of omou ("think"; -te forms have no tense of their own so the tense is determined by context). Here the -te form indicates she's stating a reason—i.e., why her account books are as observed. A -te form is often used to state the cause of or reason for what comes next in the sentence, but in this case the context is clear enough that she doesn't need to state what her explanation is about.

Husband: 朝メシ まだ?
Asumeshi mada?
morning rice/meal not yet
"Is breakfast ready yet?" (PL2)

Kuriko: もう すぐ。 あっ、見ちゃダメ よっ。
Mō sugu. Ai, micha dame yo!
soon/almost immediately (interj.) mustn't look (emph.)
"Almost. Oh, don't look!" (PL2)

- meshi is an informal word for "(cooked) rice/meal," used more by men than women.
- depending on the tone of voice, mada by itself spoken as a question can be either "is it ready/time yet?" or "isn't it ready/time yet?"
- mō sugu = "soon/almost right away."
- micha is a contraction of mite wa, "if you look," and dame = "won't do/no good," so micha dame (literally, "it won't do if you look") makes a negative command: "you mustn't look/don't look."

Husband: 何 や、タマゴに オレ の 顔 かいてる の?
Nan ya, tamago ni ore no kao kaiteru no?
what is egg on I/me 's face are drawing (explan.)
"What's this? You're drawing my face on the egg?" (PL2-K)

Kuriko: 見られちゃった。 Mirarechatta.
was seen-regret
"I've been seen/found out."
"Caught in the act." (PL2)

- nan ya is Kansai dialect for nan da ("what" + "is/are" → "what is it?").
- ore is a rough, masculine word for "I/me," and no makes it possessive, so ore no = "my/mine."
- kaiteru is a contraction of kaite iru ("is/are drawing"), from kaku ("draw"). The particle o, to mark kao as the direct object of kaite iru, has been omitted, as is often done in informal conversation. Asking a question with the explanatory no is also common in informal speech.
- mirarechatta is a contraction of mirarete shimatta, the -te form of mirareru ("be seen/observed," passive of miru, "see/look at") plus the plain/abrupt past form of shimau ("end/finish/put away"), which after the -te form of another verb can imply the action is/was regrettable or undesirable.

Kuriko: やっ。
Ya!
"Ha-yaa!"

Sound FX: ガッ
Ga! (sound of cracking egg on side of pan)

- ya is a shout uttered to focus one's strength for a quick, powerful action such as a karate kick or the thrust of a sword. Her use of it for the mere cracking of an egg is humorous.

Sound FX: じゅ じゅ じゅ
Ju ju ju
Sizzle sizzle sizzle (sound of egg frying)

Kuriko: すぐ 目玉焼き できる から ね。
Sugu medama-yaki dekiru kara ne.
right away fried egg will be ready because (colloq.)
"Your fried egg'll be ready in a minute." (PL2)

- medama-yaki is the Japanese word for a fried egg, sunny side up (fried eggs are almost never flipped over in Japan). The name could literally be translated as "eyeball fried" or "cooked eyeball-style." The particle ga to mark this as the subject of dekiru has been omitted.
- dekiru means "be finished/become ready" when referring to something that is in the process of being made or prepared.
- something like chotto matte ("wait a little") is implied after kara ("because") → "[wait a minute] because your fried egg will be ready soon."
- Kuriko's husband is offering a prayer to the departed spirit of his egg-self.

Results of the 1995 Mangajin Survey

Approaching our fifth anniversary, we were curious to see just who is reading Mangajin, what you like and dislike about us, and what you want in the future. So we compiled a survey, which was sent out with all the American copies of Mangajin No. 43. (Our readers in Japan will be polled separately at a later date.) We received 1,221 responses—about eight percent of the total US circulation. Respondents gave us valuable information including feedback on Mangajin's progress, information on other aspects of their interest in Japan, and demographic details, allowing us to shape Mangajin's content and focus.

Much of the demographic information we gleaned from you appeared in the Publisher's Note of Mangajin No. 49. In short, our average reader is male, between the ages of 30 and 50, and has a college degree. Following are some of your opinions about the content of the magazine. The numbers following each response indicate how many "votes" it received. Survey respondents were allowed to choose more than one in each category.

500万 都市 を 救える か?
Gohyakuman toshi o sukueru ka?
 5 million city (obj.) can save (?)
Can you save a city of 5 million?

- toshi = "city/cities," and dai-toshi = "large city/cities." Gohyakuman toshi means "city of 5 million residents."
- chokka-gata jishin is literally "a directly below-type earthquake," referring to quakes that occur directly below populated areas as opposed to those that occur out at sea.
- daishinsai (literally, "great quake disaster") is the name given to quakes that cause especially great damage and loss of life. The Great Tokyo Earthquake of 1923 is officially known as Kantō Daishinsai, and this year's Kobe quake has been dubbed Hanshin Daishinsai (Kantō is the area around Tokyo, and Hanshin refers to the Osaka-Kobe area).
- the more common katakana rendering of "simulation" is shimurēshon.
- in refers to someone officially appointed as a "representative/official/person in charge," and -chō indicates "head/ chief," so iinchō = "director."
- sukueru is the potential ("can/be able to") form of sukuu (救う), "save/rescue."

Cult Religion: World Conquest Game

- karuto is a katakana rendering of the English word "cult."
- kyōdan literally means "religious group/organization," so it can be translated variously as "church/sect/cult/order/fraternity/sorority."
- the title of this game is a take-off on mounting evidence that the Aum Shinrikyō sect charged with the poison gas attack on the Tokyo subway system earlier this year was amassing an arsenal of weapons with possible revolutionary intent.

"Don't you have anything more cheerful to propose?" (PL2)

- shinsaku, written with kanji meaning "new" and "make/create," can refer either to products being planned for introduction, as is the case here, or to products just recently introduced.
- kikaku can refer either to a "plan" or to the act of "planning," and kaigi = "meeting," so kikaku kaigi = "planning meeting/session."
- datō ("overthrow/toppling") is an action noun that can be made into a verb by adding suru. As a verb, it would normally come at the end, but it's also often used like this in slogans, placed before the object the sloganeers wish to overthrow or topple.
- Dorakue is the abbreviated form of the name of the immensely popular video game Doragon Kuesuto (from the English "Dragon Quest").

Developers: ないっ!! です。

Kōnai ijime / Eborakin within school bullying ebola virus
Bullied at School / The Ebola Virus
 リストラ / サラリーマン
Risutora / Sarariiman
Corporate Downsizing / Salaryman

- the unusual lettering here implies that they all blurt out nai! very sharply in something of a panic, and then add desu as a kind of afterthought upon realizing that they need to be more polite to their boss. The more "proper" PL3 response in a case like this would be arimasen, but if you find nai slipping off your tongue instead, since it functions as an adjective, you can raise it to PL3 by adding desu.
- ijime is the noun form of ijimeru ("harass/bully"). Bullying, especially among middle-school students, has been a persistent problem in recent years, with more than a few cases leading to suicide.
- risutora is shortened from risutorakucharingu, the cumbersome katakana rendering of the English "restructuring."

Reader Comments

We compiled all the reader comments into one file, and the print-out of that file was twenty pages long! We have read every one, however, and appreciate your thoughtful replies. Following are some of your comments.

- I'd like to see more on the manga industry itself. I particularly enjoyed interviews with manga creators in Japanese, which improve Japanese skills in a more literary way and give insight into the manga creation process.
- Please reduce the number of ads and Japan-related articles and print a great deal more manga.
- Mangajin is a fun way to develop some language skills, but I've been finding the manga content too business-related and boring.
- Put the samurai back on the cover.
- Don't become a "computer magazine." Pop culture/manga is what attracted the readers I'm acquainted with.
- You print ads in color, so why limit the manga to black-and-white?
- How about a column of Japanese newsclips from papers and magazines? Picking top news items would help students of Japanese learn the current topic vocabulary.
- Do not use "Obatarian." It's so derogatory to middle-aged women, like many Japanese language teachers. It's humiliating to me when high school students [make comments] about it.
- Is there any way you can mail the issues for subscriptions in a more protected package? I collect them but most are torn and thrashed when I get them in my mailbox.
- Mainly, I wish the mag were bigger—I wouldn't mind paying more for another 25 pages of feature manga. Also, I think you should aim your English articles at a slightly more sophisticated reader.
- I want to receive Mangajin more often, even if it is smaller.
- Please continue to concentrate on manga, no matter what else is added. We can't get that from any other source.
- Less soap-opera stuff like "Naniwa Kin'yudō" and that awful "Ningen Kōsaten." Here's my annual hopeless plea: get rid of English-language comics like "Calvin and Hobbes."
- I would like to see more pen pals.
- You should allow no personal ads at all (paid or not).
- Please review anime.
- I'd like to see an article or monthly list or something (anything) on Japanese companies that are willing to sponsor foreigners for working visas.
- The English features are too wimpy and shallow. Don't be so even-handed and equivocal. Take a stand!
- I am often intrigued by sample panels from various manga that are used in Basic Japanese and sometimes wish they would become features.
- I'd like to see more female characters in manga.
- The explanation blocks could dispense with the most basic level: "Hayaku is the adverbial form of hayai."
- It might be helpful to explain why certain cartoons are funny/interesting. For example, the "OL Shinkerōn" giri-choco cartoons—they didn't seem to make a point.
- Please keep the historical manga at a minimum (0) unless of course they use modern language.
- More sci-fi and romance. Let's see some more sex and violence; its absence limits you.
- A computer-based program that could load monthly modules with exercises to study based on the manga and feature story would be an invaluable tool for language learning.
- I wish the translations provided some indication as to where to put the proper accents.
- What about having translations of modern short stories next to the original Japanese, in the same kind of format as the Taiyaku column?
- Readers can find taiyaku [format] in the Nihongo Journal and the Hiragana Times as well as in many textbooks and readers. Don't waste space by including taiyaku in Mangajin.
- I would like to see some manga or illustrated stories where the language is less colloquial/slangy—for instance, an illustrated story of Osamu Dazai or Soseki Natsume—to help learn the standard language or literary language. ♦

- te ni ireta is the past form of te ni ireru ("obtain/acquire"; literally "put/take into [one's] hand"). O marks sanzen-en as the direct object of this verb.

- joshikōsei is short for joshi kōkōsei, "female" + "high school student."
- こゝ is a non-standard spelling of こう (kō, "this way/like this"), and miete mo is a conditional ("even if") form of mieru ("can be seen/appear/look like"); kō miete mo (literally, "even if I look/appear to you like this") is an idiomatic expression for "I may not look like it, but ~, you'd never guess just from looking at me, but ~," typically followed by a proud statement about one's accomplishments/capabilities/status, etc.
- chūgaku is short for chūgakkō (literally, "middle school," which in Japan always means grades 7 through 9).
- debiyū is a katakana rendering of "debut," here meaning sexual debut.
- yankii (from "Yankee") are rebellious youths who distinguish themselves in a variety of ways, including peculiar dress and dyed hair, and who have something of a "bad girl/bad boy" image.
- nanpa suru is a slang expression for "hit on" or "try to pick up." See Basic Japanese No. 37.
- kakomarete is the -te form of kakomareru ("be surrounded"), passive of kakomu ("surround"); shimatta implies the action was undesirable/regrettable.
- torareta is the past form of torareru ("have [something] taken away"), the passive form of toru ("take") → "was relieved of/lost."

"Well, perhaps we could call it 'edutainment.'" (PL2)

- sofuto is short for sofuto uea, the katakana rendering of "software."
- na no shows he is seeking an explanation. Explanatory no becomes na no when it follows a noun.
- asking questions with ka ne is mostly reserved for superiors speaking to subordinates. Using only the abrupt ka would sound quite rough, so ne softens the question.
- mā is a soft/gentle/agreeable-sounding interjection that adapts to fit its context: "well/you know/really/I mean/let's see."
- kankaku = "feeling/touch/sensibility."
- tte is a colloquial quotative form, here equivalent to to iu ("that is called/termed").
- yatsu is an informal/slang word for "fellow/guy," but it's used idiomatically to refer to "thing(s)/situation(s)/case(s)" → ~ tte yatsu = "a case that would be termed ~."

Story • Shū Ryōka

Thirty-year-old Harashima Hiromi represents a new type of woman in the Japanese business world: the strong-willed, career-oriented professional. Until recently, women in large Japanese companies were either O.L.s doing mundane clerical work or low-level managers. For the most part, they were expected to quit after a few years to marry and raise a family rather than pursue career-track promotions.

Branch Manager

In events preceding this episode, Harashima is transferred from the head office of the Yotsuba Bank to a failing branch office. The move is highly unusual, as her new position as a commercial services representative—essentially a door-to-door “salesperson” for the bank—would normally have been offered only to a man.

Although she is expected to be actively pursuing new accounts, Harashima spends a rather casual first month at the Taitō branch. Most of the time she can be found walking around the neighborhood getting a feel for the local community.

Section Chief

Harashima's coworkers are stunned when she unabashedly states at a meeting that she doesn't have any new contacts, and then goes on to openly contradict Mr. Katō, the leader in landing new accounts. But her arguments are reasonable, if somewhat arrogant, and she gets the section chief's ear. Before long, she accepts a major challenge: to land the account for Shinwa Enterprises, which Katō has been pursuing unsuccessfully for two years. She is so confident that she declares she'll walk around the building on her hands if she fails. Hearing of her cocky attitude, the branch manager gives her only two months to complete this seemingly impossible task.

The humiliated Katō is made to give Harashima his personal notes on Shinwa. When she coolly responds, “I'll look them over later,” he storms out of her office in a fury. All eyes are now on Harashima as she prepares to meet for the first time alone with Mr. Kawahara, the man in charge of accounting for Shinwa Enterprises.

KANA QUICK REFERENCE

When a small circle is added to the upper right corner of the H-syllables, the first letter changes to a P-sound (e.g. は → ぱ = ha → pa).

When the "voicing mark" (two lines that look like a double-quote mark) is added to the same position on K-, S-, and T-syllables, the following sound changes occur: K → G, S → Z, and T → D (e.g. こ → こゝ = ko → go).

The irregular consonants in shi, chi, and tsu make their voiced equivalents irregular as well: し → じ = shi → ji, ち → ぢ = chi → ji, and つ → づ = tsu → zu.

1 Kawahara:

また来ましたね。

“You’ve come again, have you?” (PL3)

今日はあまりおかまいもできませんよ。

“I’m afraid I can’t give you much time today.” (PL4)

- また = “again.”
- 来ました is the PL3 past form of 来る (“come”).
- ね is like a tag question that assumes an affirmative answer: “isn’t it so?/right?” → “have you?”
- あまり followed by a negative later in the sentence means “not very.”
- おかまいもできません is a polite phrase that hosts use to apologize for their inadequate hospitality. It’s a PL4 humble form of the verb かまう, which means “be attentive to/look after” → おかまいする (PL4 humble) → おかまいできる (“can attend to/look after”) → おかまいできません (“cannot attend to/look after”). も adds emphasis.
- よ is often used to emphasize information the speaker thinks the listener particularly needs to know. Here it gives Kawahara’s statement the feeling of a disclaimer or warning.

2 Harashima:

今度から私が訪問することになりました。よろしくお願ひいたします。

“It has been arranged that I am the one who will visit you from now on. I humbly request your favorable consideration.”

“I’m looking forward to working with you. I’ll be the one calling on you from now on.” (PL4)

Kawahara:

私があんまりいじめたから加東さんはサジを投げましたかな。

“I wonder if Mr. Katō quit in despair because I gave him such a hard time.” (PL3)

- 今度 = “this time/now,” and から = “from,” so 今度から = “from now on/henceforth.”
- specifying 私が gives the feeling of “I’ll be the one who visits [instead of Mr. Katō]; if she had omitted 私が, the feeling would be simply “I’ll be visiting.”
- ことになりました is the PL3 past form of ことになる (lit., “it becomes the situation that”), an idiomatic expression for “it is decided/arranged that.”
- よろしくお願ひいたします means roughly “I humbly request your favorable consideration/treatment” (いたします is a PL4 humble equivalent of する, “do/make”). It is used when requesting favors/cooperation as well as in first-time introductions. It can be shortened to よろしくお願ひします or even just よろしく.
- あんまり is a colloquial あまり, which modifies affirmative verbs and adjectives to mean “so much/too much/excessively.”
- サジを投げました is the PL3 past form of サジを投げる (lit., “throw the spoon”), an idiomatic expression for “give up in despair/abandon hope.”

3 Harashima:

こちらはずっと丸菱銀行がメインだそうですね。

“I understand Marubishi has been your main bank for many years.” (PL3)

- こちら means “this side/direction/place,” here referring to the company she is visiting: “this company/your company” → “you.”
- when not speaking of a specific period of time, ずっと means “for a long time/all along” → “for many years.”
- メイン is a katakana rendering of the English “main”; メインだ = “is the main/principal [bank].”
- ~そうですね following either だ (the PL2 form of です, “is/are”) or the plain forms of adjectives and verbs implies that the speaker has heard about the fact, event, or condition from someone else.

1 Kawahara:

社長が固いんですわ。

“The president won't budge.” (PL3)

二股をかけるような不義理なことはしたくないと言いましたね。

“He said he doesn't want to do anything so faithless as to play a double game.”

“He says he doesn't want to do anything to betray their trust, such as sharing our business with a second bank.” (PL3)

- 固い (lit., “hard”) can mean “stubborn/rigid/unmoving” in a negative sense, but here it has a more positive sense through association with the expression 義理堅い (“have a strong sense of obligation/duty/gratitude”), from the word 義理, which refers to a debt of gratitude and the feelings of obligation or duty that go with it.
- わ with falling intonation at the end of a sentence is used by both sexes for light emphasis. With rising intonation it is distinctly feminine.
- 二股をかける is an expression implying one is “sitting on the fence/trying to have it both ways/playing a double game.” Here it implies playing two banks off each other.
- 不義理 can range in meaning from “ingratitude” to “dishonesty/betrayal.”

2 Harashima:

ずっと一行取引なんですか。

“Is it single-bank dealings all along?”

“So you've always dealt with only one bank?” (PL3)

Kawahara:

オイルショックでうちが苦しかった時、救ってくれたのは丸菱だけでしたからね。

“When we were hurting from the oil crisis, Marubishi was the only bank willing to help us out.” (PL3)

今じゃキブアンドテイクの関係ですよ。

“Today, our relationship is one of mutual give and take.” (PL3)

- 行 here is an abbreviation of 銀行, so 一行 = “one bank.” 取引 refers to “business dealings.”
- 苦しかった is the plain/abrupt past form of 苦しい, an adjective ranging in meaning from “painful/distressing” to “arduous/tough” to “straitened/needy.” 時 (“time”) makes it “when we were hurting.”
- 救ってくれた = “rescued/saved us,” from 救う (“rescue/save”). の is a nominalizer that makes what comes before it act as a single noun, and は makes that noun the topic of the sentence.
- 今じゃ is a contraction of 今では, which means “now” in the sense of “now as opposed to before.”

3 Kawahara:

よつばさんと違って、丸菱さんは支店長はじめ副頭取まで足を運んで下さいますんでね。

3 (continued)

“Unlike you folks at Yotsuba, at Marubishi the branch manager and even the vice president call on us, you know.” (PL3)

社長も日頃から鼻高々です。

“Our president has long taken special pride in that.” (PL3)

- さん can be used as a polite suffix for names of groups as well as individuals.
- 足を運んで is the -te form of 足を運ぶ (lit., “carry one's feet/steps”), an idiom for “go/come to” or “pay a call on.” 下さいます is a more polite くれる, which after a -te form implies the action is done for the benefit of the speaker or subject.

4 Kawahara:

たまたまに金利が少々高いんじゃないかと思うこともありますがね。

“Though I do sometimes wonder if their interest rates aren't a tad high.” (PL3)

- ーんじゃないかと思う is literally “[I/we] think, is it not ~?” → “[I/we] wonder if it isn't ~.”
- ーこともあります is the PL3 form of ーこともある, which literally means “[the described] situation also exists/occurs” → “sometimes occurs.”

1 Kawahara:

ま...取引はあきらめた方がいいですな。

"Well... it'd be better if you gave up on doing business with us."

"Anyway... you might as well forget about doing business with us." (PL3)

加東さんにもずっとそう言ってきたんだ。

"I've been saying the same thing to Mr. Katō all along." (PL2)

社長の目の黒いうちはだめですよ。

"It's no use as long as the president's eyes are black."

"It won't happen as long as the president is living." (PL3)

- ま or まあ is a "warm-up" or pause word that adapts to its context: "I mean/you know/really/anyway."
- 言っ is the -te form of 言う ("say"), and きた is the past form of くる ("come"), here implying the action has proceeded or been repeated from the past up to the present.
- ~うちは after a non-past adjective means "during the time [that state/condition continues]" → "so long as ~."

2 Harashima:

副社長はどんな方ですか?

"What sort of person is the vice president?" (PL3)

- 方 is a word for "person" (more polite than 人), どんな方 = "what kind of person."

3 Kawahara:

ああ...社長の長男です。

"Ahh... he's the president's eldest son." (PL3)

- ああ is an informal "yes"; here it is mostly just an acknowledgement of the question.

4 Harashima:

どういったセクションを担当されているんでしょう?

"Which section is he in charge of?" (PL4)

Kawahara:

社長が全権を握っていますので、あくまでその補佐というか...まあ...そんなところです。

"The president holds complete control, so the vice president is basically his aide, you could say... or... well... I suppose that's the way to put it." (PL3)

- どういった = どのような (literally, "what kind of"); here it's essentially a less direct, and so more polite, way of saying どの ("which").
- 担当されている is a PL4 honorific form of 担当している, from 担当する ("handle/be in charge of").
- でしょう? (or でしょうか) makes a conjectural question, but using a conjectural form often just adds a touch of politeness; it sounds a little less direct, and so more polite, than ですか ("is it?")

4 (continued)

- 握っています is the PL3 form of 握っている ("have a hold on"), from 握る ("grasp/clasp").
- ~というか implies the speaker isn't entirely satisfied with the word or phrase he has chosen and is trying to find another.
- そんなところです is an expression for "that's roughly the situation/that's about the size of it/that's about right," here implying "that's about as good a way to put it as any."

5 Harashima:

常務も社長のご子息とうかがいましたが...

"I've been told that the managing director is also the president's son." (PL4)

- 常務 is short for 常務取締役 ("managing director" or "general manager").
- ご子息 is a very polite word for "son"; ご is an honorific prefix.
- うかがいました is the polite past form of the PL4 humble verb うかがう, meaning "hear/be told."
- が = "but," essentially implying "but is it true?" By leaving this unsaid, it "softens" the ending and adds to the feeling of politeness.

1 Kawahara:

なに
“What?” (PL2)

2 Harashima:

東大を卒業されて三友商事にお勤めだったのを無理矢理引き抜かれたとか。

“I heard something about his working for Mitsutomo Corporation after graduating from Tokyo University, and then his father forcibly hiring him away.” (PL4)

- 卒業されて is a PL4 honorific -te form of the verb 卒業する (“graduate”): here the -te form indicates a chronological sequence.
- お is an honorific prefix, and 勤め is the noun form of 勤める, which means “work for/at” or “be employed by”; お勤め is a polite term for referring to another person’s employment. お勤めだった here works essentially like a PL4 honorific verb for “was/were working.”
- の is a nominalizer that makes the preceding complete thought/sentence act as a single noun, and を marks it as the object of the rest of the sentence.
- 引き抜かれた is the passive past form of 引き抜く, which literally means “extract,” but is used idiomatically for “hire away [from another company].”
- とか is a quotative form that implies some imprecision in the quote → “said/heard/thought something like ~.”

3 Kawahara:

姓が違うので知っている人は少ないんだが、いわゆる内縁の... というやつです。

“Very few people know about it because they have different surnames, but [he was the product of] what you would call a common-law marriage.” (PL3)

- いわゆる = “what is called/so-called.”
- 内縁 = “common-law/unregistered marriage.”
- というやつです literally means “is a thing called.”

4 Kawahara:

ハッ
(catching his breath—here from the sudden realization that he has been too open)

5 Kawahara:

あんた...!! どこでそれを?
“Now just a minute! Where did you hear about that?” (PL2)

- when あんた (a less formal あなた, “you”) is spoken sharply like this it typically has a disapproving/rebuking tone; it can sometimes be translated “hey you!,” but here it is more like “Hold it!/Wait a minute!/Now look here!”

6 Harashima:

優秀なご子息がふたりもいらして社長もさぞ心強く思っておられることでしょうね。

[6] (continued)

“The president must find it very reassuring to have two such fine sons.” (PL4)

- も after a number implies that the number is large for the given context, so here it feels a little like “not just one but two [fine sons].”
- いらして is a -te form of いらっしゃる, a PL4 honorific equivalent of いる (“exist/have”).
- さぞ works together with a conjunctive form later in the sentence to mean “surely/certainly/must.”
- 心強く is the adverb form of 心強い, literally “heart-strong”; when the subject is a person, it means “feel reassured/secure.”
- 思っておられる is a PL4 form of 思っている (“think/feel”), from 思う (“think/feel”). Though both forms of this verb can be translated as “think” or “feel,” 思う refers to having a thought or feeling at a particular point in time, while 思っている refers to a continuing view/impression/feeling.
- こと = “thing,” but here has the more abstract meaning of “situation,” and でしょう makes a conjecture, so ことでしょう = “it is surely the situation that ~” → “The president must ~.”

1 Kawahara:

あなたは本店から来たばかりだそうですね。世の中、そうそう理屈通りにはいかんのですよ。

"I hear you have just come from the main branch. The world does not go that much according to theory, you know."

"I understand you've just transferred here from the main office. In this world, things don't always go the way you think they should, you know." (PL3)

- 来た is the plain/abrupt past form of 来る ("come") and ばかり after a past verb implies the action occurred just now/recently.
- そうそう = "that much/that often."
- 理屈 means "theory/reason/logic," and 通り as a suffix means "in accordance with."
- いかん is a contraction of いかない, negative of いく ("go"). 理屈通りにはいかない = "does not go according to theory/logic" → "does not go the way you think it should."

2 Harashima:

当行とおつきあいいただければ丸菱とは違ったメリットを必ずお約束できると思います。社長に会わせていただけませんか？

"If you would be willing to do business with us, I feel quite certain we could offer benefits you are not getting from Marubishi. I wonder if I might be given a chance to meet with the president?" (PL4)

- 当 is used in compounds to mean "the one in question," and 行 once again stands for 銀行 ("bank"), so in this case 当行 refers to Harashima's bank → "we/us."
- つきあい refers to a "relationship/association" of some kind—here of doing business. いただければ is a conditional form of いただける ("can/be able to receive [a gift/favor]"), so おつきあいいただければ means "if we could receive the favor of doing business with you."
- 会わせて is the -te form of 合わせる ("let/allow to meet"), and いただけませんか is a very polite request—literally, "couldn't I perhaps receive the favor of [being permitted to meet]?"

3 Kawahara:

今日はこれで引き取ってもらおう。

"As far as today is concerned, I must ask you to leave."

"I must ask you to leave now." (PL2)

Sound FX:

ガタッ (sound of chair as he stands up)

- 引き取って is the -te form of 引き取る ("withdraw/leave"), and もらおう is the volitional ("I shall") form of もらう, which after the -te form of a verb implies having someone else do the action: "I shall have you leave" → "I must ask you to leave."

4 Kawahara:

頭取でも来れば話は別だがね！

"If your president were to come, that'd be a different story!" (PL2)

- 来れば is a conditional "if" form of 来る ("come").
- 話は別だ is literally "the story is different" → "that'd be a different story."

5 Harashima:

はい、検討させていただきます。

"Indeed, sir, I will look into it." (PL4)

- 検討 = "investigation/study/consideration," and させていただきます is a very polite way of saying する ("will do/make"), so 検討させていただきます means "I will investigate/look into the matter."

The Secrets of Mariko:

A Year in the Life of a Japanese Woman and Her Family

Elisabeth Bumiller
Times Books, 1995

by Terra Brockman

It could be argued that the kind of knowledge women acquire during their lives, in Japan as in the rest of the world, is more important and more nearly correct than the knowledge gained by men. Women's knowledge, by and large, is not based on theoretical propositions, but is practical knowledge derived from social interaction with families, children, and neighbors. Such knowledge makes women aware of their essential role in maintaining life, family, and community—the bases of a nation.

It is perhaps for reasons such as these that Elisabeth Bumiller decided to write a book about Japan that uses as its core and central framework an examination of a year in the life of one average Japanese woman, Mariko. Every week for over a year Bumiller interviewed Mariko, a stout 40-something woman married for 18 years to a hard-drinking, unfulfilled salaryman. She is a part-time water-meter reader, a full-time mother of three children, and caretaker for her husband, children, and two elderly parents. All seven family members live under the same roof but live very separate lives. By the end of Bumiller's book we get to know them all—Mariko, her depressed husband, Takeshi, her 16-year-old son, Shunsuke, 15-year-old daughter, Chiaki, 9-year-old son, Ken-chan, and her elderly parents, Saburo and Ito.

Bumiller brings a translator along to all of her interviews with Mariko, but the book still has some awkward translations of words and phrases. One of the most irritating things is Bumiller's placing of the honorific o before words that seldom if ever take it (kotatsu, for example), while leaving it off of words that are seldom if ever spoken without it (o-hanami and o-bon, for example). This is one of the dangers of being a non-Japanese speaker living in Japan for only a short time. The other danger is that you tend to view the Japanese as somewhat alien—and indeed, the reader feels this at various times during the book.

Bumiller sees her book as different from all other Japan books we have seen in the last decade or so. She divides these into two categories: those that make an argument and then marshal facts to support a thesis on how outsiders should think about Japan, and those in which the author focuses on his or her (generally his) own adventures in Japan. The best representative of the former is perhaps Karel van Wolferen's

Enigma of Japanese Power; examples of the latter might include Jay MacInerney's Ransom and Brad Leithauser's Equal Distance. Bumiller says she is doing something quite different in writing "a book about the Japanese as individuals—a book about a few Japanese rather than 'the Japanese.'"

This is a bit of a false distinction. If you've read van Wolferen, Jared Taylor (Shadows of the Rising Sun), or any other book on Japan, you will not find much new or different in The Secrets of Mariko. True, Bumiller has focused on individuals, but the individuals are merely an entry point, a way into those perennial favorite topics of Japan writers: the family, the salaryman, the educational system, the political system, the health care system, the yakuza.

The book is worth reading, however. Bumiller is a keen observer of detail and a lucid prose writer; she gives us a full portrait of Mariko and in the process reveals many other things about daily life in Japan and about the bigger picture of Japan as a nation and a culture.

Bumiller begins with the family itself. She explains, "It always made particular sense to me to explore Japanese society through the experience of one family. More than most countries, Japan likes to think of itself as one large family, united by some kind of unique, inscrutable Japaneseness." But of course the Japanese are not one big, happy family. The question of whether a family is happy or not is not even much of a question in Japan. While statistics show that nearly all Japanese are part of a stable two-parent household, one does not need to scratch the surface very hard to discover that the family generally includes an overworked, hard-drinking father who is gone from 7 AM until midnight, leaving his wife to head the de facto single-parent household.

• stout = ずんぐりした zunguri shita • unfulfilled = 満たされない mitasarenai • alien = 異質の ishitsu no • marshal = 「事実・議論などを」まとめる・並べたてる (jijitsu, giron nado o matomeru/naraberateru) • perennial = 変わらぬ kawarazu • lucid = 分かりやすい wakariyasui • inscrutable = 不可解な fukakai na

Mariko and her husband had few romantic illusions before or after their marriage. Mariko recalls that in high school Takeshi (the man who would become her husband) was "so weak that he really brought out my maternal instincts." So when she was 24 and Takeshi proposed marriage, she accepted. Takeshi explains, "I'd known her since junior high and I didn't have to pose with her. I could talk to her very casually, as a friend rather than as a woman."

Men in general and Takeshi in particular are objects of repeated casual yet brutal dismissals from Mariko and the other women in the book. For example, when Bumiller asks a female university lecturer, Suzuki Namiko, how she deals with a husband she sees only on weekends, she replies: "After we got married, I felt lonely for a few years, but after ten years, I feel my life is much easier without him. When we stop expecting things from our husbands, we become liberated."

One might think it would be more liberating simply to not marry, or to be divorced. When Bumiller asks Mariko if she made a mistake in marrying Takeshi, she bursts out "Yes!" before the question is even translated for her. And yet she cannot countenance the idea of divorce. She is a practical woman and knows what marriage is for—children, security, and settling into a proper niche in society. Mariko says, "I'm more interested in being a mother than a wife. A husband is just the person who brings the money home." By the end of her year of interviews, Bumiller concludes, "Motherhood brought a powerful sense of purpose to Mariko's life, and conferred on her a degree of status unfamiliar to most mothers in the US. . . . By middle-class American standards she was trapped. By her standards she may have been trapped, but she was trapped in a cozy, comfortable place that had other rewards—order, cleanliness, predictability, civility, and safety."

A second large topic for Bumiller is Japan's educational system, to which she gains access via Mariko's children. Her conclusions are biting: "Certainly no Americans I know would want their children educated in the restrictive and mind-numbing atmosphere that I observed in Japanese secondary schools. . . . Even the best Japanese high school education is still an exercise in memorization, standardization, and correctness."

Bumiller discovers that the making of a malleable society—docile salarymen, office ladies, and housewives—begins early. In her investigation of the juku, or cram school, phenomenon, Bumiller goes to a cram school for four- and five-year-olds who will be taking exams to enter exclusive kindergartens. The kindergarten juku teacher admits she has heard of some children getting bald spots and nervous tics because of cram school at the age of five. But she hastens to add that such things do not occur at her school. Bumiller watches as her students perform tasks such as stringing beads in the order of color that the teacher directs and knotting rubber bands in a correct order. When Bumiller asks the teacher if such tasks determine real intelligence, the teacher answers brightly, "The schools are not concerned with intelligence. They're concerned with how the children can concentrate on the teacher's instructions."

Such an admission is startling in its guilelessness—and yet, who would know better than a juku teacher what Japanese schools are concerned with? The juku are big business in Japan. The latest estimate is that 4.4 million schoolchildren are enrolled in some 60,000 cram schools. Although Mariko does not like the juku system, she does not see a way she can avoid it and still do the best for her children.

Bumiller touches upon many other aspects of Japan in this book: its health care system, its religions, its humor. The Secrets of Mariko seems to be a natural outgrowth of Bumiller's 1990 book, May You Be the Mother of a Hundred Sons: A Journey among the Women of India. There she explored India and its myriad problems and contradictions through interviews with women about their life experiences. The message that emerges from both books is similar: people in different cultures around the world are all different, yet, in the important, basic ways, we are all the same.

Given Bumiller's awareness of this simple truth, I was surprised at how surprised she was to learn of Mariko's only real "secret." During one of the very last interviews, Bumiller and Mariko are looking at old high school yearbooks. Suddenly, Mariko points to one boy and says, "I loved him but he loved somebody else." Then she pauses. "I also loved someone after I got married." A shocked Bumiller asks, "Why are you telling me this now?" Mariko replies, "You never asked."

Much earlier in the book Bumiller had given us information from surveys showing that most Japanese men and women do not regard sexual fidelity as crucial to a good marriage, and that one in six Japanese wives has had extramarital sex. The figure for wives born after 1945 is one in four. Mariko had told Bumiller then that she and her husband had sex once a month. "It's based on my cycle, like an animal. It has nothing to do with love."

So why was Bumiller so surprised? She explains: "Never had it occurred to me that Mariko, my typical Japanese housewife, would have been so daring, so irresponsible, so enterprising, really, as to have an affair. She seemed far too grounded in her family for that." But Bumiller finally comes to the obvious conclusion: "As I thought about Mariko on the way home I realized I had started out trying to learn what it is like to be a Japanese housewife and ended up seeing how kindred people really are, and how every life, no matter how plain its surface, is a symphony of roiling emotion underneath. People fall in love, marriages fail or run into rough patches, loved ones get sick and die, babies arrive like little gifts to make it all more bearable." ♦

The Hundred Poems from the Manyōshū

translated by Takashi Kojima

Although written over thirteen hundred years ago, the poems of the Manyōshū retain a rare freshness and an originality that fascinates even today. Part of the collection's originality is due to its variety of authors, from members of the aristocracy to commoners from the lowest ranks. The poems cover a wide range of content and expression, from the court poet's highly polished verses to anonymous poems that read like folk songs. What the various Manyō poems do have in common is emotional fire, amazing candor, and eloquent expression of feeling not found in later Japanese poetry.

Using multimedia to tackle kanji

by Douglas Horn

Kanji are the often complex ideographic characters that make up the bulk of written Japanese. A vocabulary of two thousand is considered necessary to be "literate" in Japanese, and in Japan they are learned mostly by rote.

The two multimedia programs reviewed here take a different approach to kanji learning. Rather than forcing students to write each character endlessly, these programs take advantage of computer multimedia and newer teaching methods to facilitate quick memorization. While Kantaro and Kanji Moments both use multimedia and cover roughly the same number of characters, each teaches kanji writing and recognition in a unique way.

Kantaro

Kantaro Volume 1 Learning "to walk" with Kantaro relies heavily on mnemonics to help students learn and remember kanji characters. A mnemonic is any system or device used to improve memory, such as the famous "Thirty days hath September . . ." Kantaro's mnemonics are taken into the visual realm with the help of multimedia animation.

In short, a visual mnemonic is associated with each kanji character. The character meaning "sun" is paired with a picture of the sun; the character meaning "walk" is paired with a picture of a person walking; and so on. Kantaro helps students remember the link by morphing the picture into the character. Students can play these mini morphin' kanji movies over and over again until the link is embedded in their memories. And while it takes a stretch of the imagination to see the link between some kanji and their pictures, the majority work quite well.

In addition, Kantaro animates each stroke of the kanji being drawn rather than presenting them whole, which helps students remember not only stroke order, but also the starting point of each pen stroke. These animations draw the character at the right speed for students to follow as they write it themselves.

Kantaro also provides examples of words in which the kanji characters appear; when students click on these words, the program "says" them, allowing students to learn the proper pronunciation and to gain an ear for spoken Japanese.

Kantaro Volume 1 covers 200 kanji through ten lessons of twenty characters each. The program begins with the most basic characters, assuming no previous exposure to kanji or even Japanese. This makes Kantaro a good supplement to any language-learning program, computer-based or not.

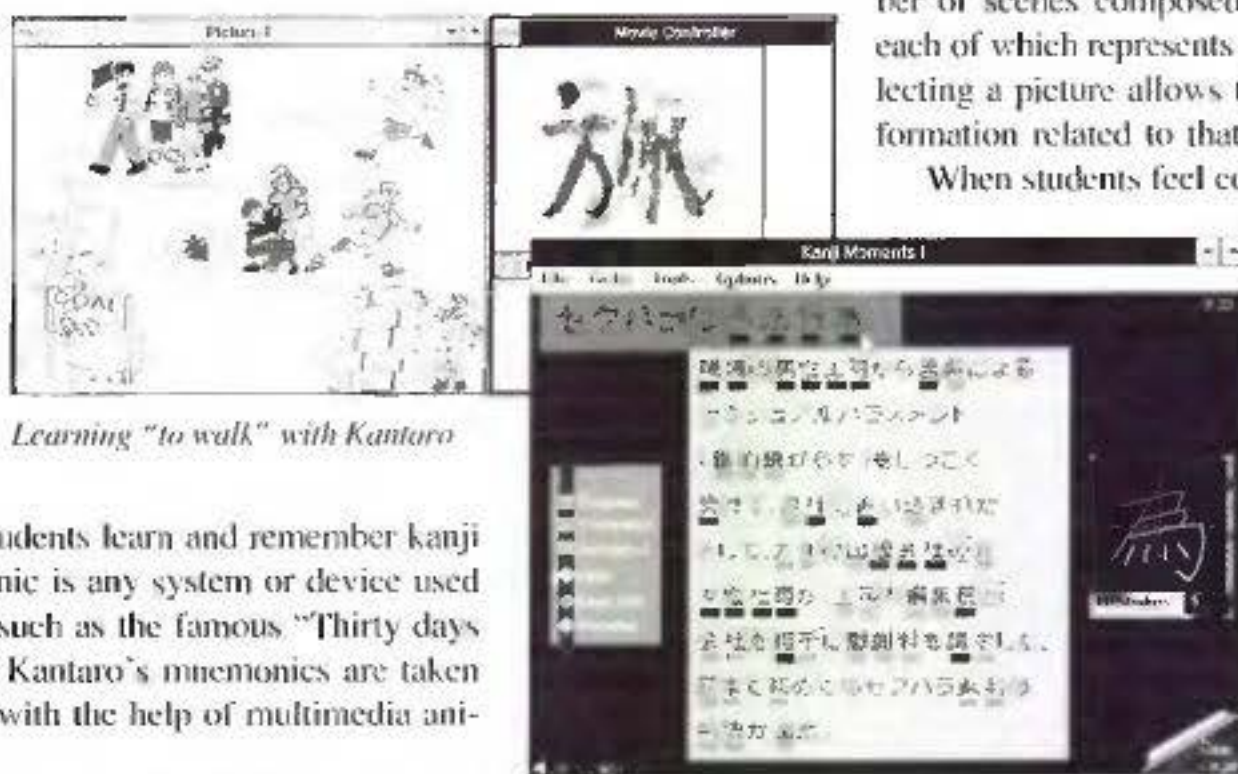

At the beginning of each lesson, Kantaro presents a number of scenes composed of several pictures, each of which represents a kanji character. Selecting a picture allows the student to see information related to that particular kanji.

When students feel confident that they understand the characters presented in a lesson, they can move on to other games and drills, such as the Match drill, in which they must link kanji characters with their meanings and mnemonics. Other drills test students' ability to read the kanji characters alone and in sentences. While these drills are effective, noticeably missing is one that asks students to recognize kanji from their sound alone.

Kantaro installs easily and includes a very thorough manual. The program runs slowly on anything less than a Pentium, but this is not a serious concern. More troublesome are some small program peculiarities. One such quirk is the need for users to log in. This is understandable, especially in an educational setting, where several students might share the program on a school computer; but Kantaro provides no way for users to add new names, other than exiting the program and editing a program file with a text editor. This is less than user-friendly.

Overall, however, Kantaro is a useful program for teaching kanji. Australia's Macquarie University, one of the original developers of Kantaro, found that they could teach students 200 kanji in ten weeks by using the program, as opposed to only 115 with traditional methods. Arguably, any multimedia system could accelerate learning compared to traditional methods. But Kantaro does offer several useful and innovative features not available in other programs, and it is fair to assume that these help students learn even faster.

Learning "to walk" with Kantaro

A Kanji Moment on a hot topic

Kanji Moments

Kanji Moments Volume I is developed by BayWare, Inc., the company that created Power Japanese. The two programs are very closely related. Like Power Japanese, Kanji Moments could really be called a multimedia slide show. The graphics are attractive, and there are numerous buttons for students to press for information about various kanji characters.

Rather than present a new character by itself, Kanji Moments introduces it in one of five short articles. Through these articles (with titles ranging from "Why You're Always One Year Older in Japan" to "Sexual Harassment in Japan"), the program has students reading new characters in a real sentence from the very start. This is a productive way to teach, but it can also be a frustrating way to learn. Fortunately, Kanji Moments provides clues to meaning, pronunciation, and parts of speech throughout.

Like Kantaro, Kanji Moments uses games and drills to increase student comprehension and kanji retention. Unlike Kantaro, these drills are quite structured. The sequence is predetermined, so by and large, it's the program—not the student—that determines the direction of study. Those who prefer a structured learning environment will feel right at home with Kanji Moments.

Kanji Moments' drills are well suited to language learning. They cover not only kanji, but also Japanese grammar, vocabulary, and even some cultural notes. The best part about Kanji Moments' approach is that it forces students to use kanji characters in a realistic, written context from the very start. Moreover, when users click the mouse at the end of any sentence, Kanji Moments "says" the entire sentence. This audio capability allows students to learn the sound of not only individual words but whole sentences, spoken at a realistic pace by a native Japanese speaker.

But along with Kanji Moments' many good points come some faults. First, the interface has a few too many bells and whistles. The numerous controls distract the student from the kanji to be learned. Also distracting is the low-resolution font that the program uses. Though the writing drills do offer larger versions of characters, in general the characters look like the computerized kanji fonts of ten years ago. Not only does this make the kanji difficult to read, it makes them difficult to learn and difficult to recognize in their non-computer form. Compared to Kantaro, the fonts used in Kanji Moments look prehistoric. There is no excuse for this in a program whose sole function is to teach kanji.

Prospective users should also know that Kanji Moments is much more a companion product to Power Japanese than a

My Observations of Japanese Culture

Alejandro in Japan with a friend.

Alejandro Basañez, 20, is a sophomore studying chemistry at the National Autonomous University of Mexico. In October 1994, he won the 12th National Oratory Contest in Japanese, held in Mexico City. He participated in the Eurocentre Kanazawa Japanese program in 1992.

In the first place, I must apologize if this text is not as easy to read and elegant as I would like. The reason is that my mother tongue is Spanish, not English. I have been to Japan three times, and writing this article is an opportunity for me to think over and share my points of view about this country, for my nearly 10 years of contact with it have rewarded me with insight into Japan's social and cultural richness.

It all began when I was 10. I played for the junior soccer team of the city of Toluca (near Mexico City), and we were sent on a cultural exchange trip to Toluca's sister city, Urawa (in Saitama prefecture). We were a bunch of kids who knew nothing about Japan, staying with host families, communicating in signs, and trying all kinds of new food that we didn't quite like. It was a nice experience and I was particularly touched by the way people treated me. But it was, above all, great fun. So deep inside, I guess, the essence of my love toward Japan was always that: FUN.

It was for fun that I eventually entered the Japanese school in Mexico City, where I completed junior and senior high school. It was also for the fun of it that I took a six-month trip to Japan after high school. During that time I attended Eurocentre Kanazawa and then lived alone for three months in Tokyo, working and studying. I wanted to know Japan. I never actually chose to take the path that would lead me there—it was more a matter of destiny. It was plain fun.

This June I went back to Kanazawa for two months and stayed with the same lady who had been my host mother there three years before. We had become excellent friends and had traveled together in Mexico as well. So now I was back there, riding my bike across the bridges and canals, singing Japanese pop music through every street, enjoying once again the magnificent and mysterious city of Kanazawa.

Talking with the heart, not the tongue

Comparing my last trip to Japan, three years ago, with this most recent one only three months ago, I realized some interesting points. First, I discovered that—incredible as it sounds—not being able to speak Japanese can be more of a help than a problem. In my experience, when I couldn't talk to the Japanese people, they tended to interpret all my gestures and actions as noble and respectful ones. On the other hand, when I learnt how to speak and reached the point where I could truly express a feeling (instead of distorting my own feelings to suit the existing words in my vocabulary), I offended people unintentionally every single day. As long as you don't say or do anything, you enjoy full respect and trust. So be careful! Once you get rejected, there's no cure. You must abandon the country at once! For the Japanese don't accept words as an apology. Words are never enough for mending ties in Japan. Actions are. But that, naturally, takes longer. No wonder many impatient people resort to suicide.

It takes more than learning the language

It is certainly difficult to master a language (especially Japanese, with all the kanji), but it is ten or twenty times more difficult once you have "cracked the code" to learn how to deal with it. Japanese society is, from the very start, different in many aspects.

They have different religious values (which means that they give little or no importance to what you may consider crucial, and vice versa) and different educational, social, and moral backgrounds. It takes much more time to understand the way the society works (which is more complex than the hairiest kanji) than it does to learn the language.

Therefore, knowing Japan takes much more than learning the language and traveling around for a short while. It is interesting that when you stay for a long while, all the little things that once made you think of Japan as Wonderland start falling apart, and you realize you had been missing something all along. This means that you have become much closer to the Japanese mentality, and you may suddenly feel uncomfortable. Being a foreigner means having different values and mentality. It is never easy to give up your own for someone else's. Therefore it can be a difficult experience, although it provides so many other greatly rewarding pleasures.

Furthermore, it is true that the Japanese are in most cases kind and friendly with foreigners, but when it comes to living in society, they demand that you follow their social system. And that means you are no longer the owner of yourself. Society owns you. As submissively as salarymen abandon themselves to their firms, normal people abandon themselves to society. Responding to social pressures and at the same time living a private fulfilling life in Japan is an extremely difficult task—achievable only by very few successful gaijin ("foreigners"), I would say.

Living in Japan for a longer period and getting into deeper conversation with the people made me understand better the balance of advantages and disadvantages in their society. Japan does in fact contain a marvellous internal order, and a beauty that is only very scarcely appreciated by the finest gaijin who have the courage to master it. This transitional step may take many years. But it may be worth a try. Besides, by that time you'll have probably mastered all 5,000 kanji and can read the papers!

One person can affect a country's impression

When I was working briefly in a Japanese company, I found that it was fun to tell my mates about Mexico, and they proved to be quite interested, too. It has always amazed me how one single person can make a strong difference in the way people think about a country. When you are living in another country, it is especially important that the impression people get from you is positive. When you meet a friend from a place you don't know, what he or she tells you is all the information you've got. So your opinion about the whole country becomes more or less the reflection of your friend's description. Honesty and respect are remarkably important to convey. Far more important than language. In fact, I believe that the rise and fall of economic and political powers in the near future will be greatly determined by the social links each country has developed with the rest of the world. And given the extremely fast progress of communications through the world, friendships will soon become a determining factor in the way these social links emerge.

I hope we all join international interchange programs, such as Eurocentres, not only for the fun of it (like me) nor in the sheer interest of learning another language, but with the purpose of helping to improve international understanding. I consider that one of the biggest priorities of the world.

NABEMONO

One-pot dishes to warm the soul

Winter blasts across the Japanese islands, riding Siberian gales from the steppes of Asia and burying the mountainous “snow country” of northern Honshu and Hokkaido under a thick blanket of white. These days people in both city and country are well equipped to handle the big freeze. But the situation was very different in former times, before central heating, double-glazed windows, and electric carpets. With no way to insulate houses that were built of wood and paper, the Japanese had to adopt a pragmatic approach that is actually no less apposite in today’s age of energy insecurity.

“Heat the person, not the house.” Thus thick hanten (半纏) jackets to protect the upper body; charcoal kotatsu (こたつ) heaters to toast your legs; and, to boost your inner furnaces, hearty winter sustenance. The ultimate cold-weather food is the nabe (鍋) stewpot. Since these dishes are cooked at the dining table—or, in the old days, around the irori (凹火鉢, “sunken hearth”)—they are doubly effective as winter fuel: they heat you first while they’re cooking, and then once again as you’re eating them.

The term nabe means “cooking pot,” usually a simple earthenware casserole known as donabe (土鍋), or the rounded cast-iron Nambu-tetsu nabe (南部鉄鍋) from the Tohoku (Northeast) region. As a genre, foods prepared in these pots are known as nabemono (鍋物, “things cooked in a nabe”). Seated around the communal pot, everyone does his or her own cooking, sliding the piles of raw ingredients into the steaming hot broth. As soon as they are ready, you pick out your favorite foods using chopsticks or ladles, or fish out tidbits to give to the others at the table.

The best thing about making nabe stews is that there are no hard and fast rules. Just about anything can go into the pot: chicken, meat, fish or other seafood, tofu, vegetables, mushrooms, and noodles. Recipes will vary according to seasonal availability and personal preference. In Japan, there are major regional variations in both recipes and seasonings used. The only basic requirement is that the ingredients be fresh.

The form of nabe that is probably the best known internationally is shabu-shabu (しゃぶしゃぶ), in which diners dip into the cooking pot paper-thin slices of well-marbled Kobe beef. By tradition, only meat from the famously pampered, beer-fed wa-gyū (和牛, “Japanese cattle”) should be used in this dish, although in recent years cheaper imported beef has become more readily accepted. As for the unusual name, shabu-shabu is an onomatopoeic representation of the sound made as the beef is swished around to cook in the hot broth.

by Robbie
Swinnerton

There are many forms of the genre: mizutaki (水炊き, “cooked in water”) is a chicken hotpot; chiri-nabe (ちり鍋, “fish stew nabe”) is based, obviously, around fish, usually sea bream or some other delicate white-flesh fish; generic one-pot dishes featuring a variety of ingredients, including fish, chicken, tofu, and vegetables, are known as yose-nabe (寄せ鍋, “everything-thrown-together nabe”). Other dishes range from the austere simple yu-dōfu (湯豆腐, “simmered tofu”), derived from vegetarian Zen temple cuisine, through to the Rabelaisian delights of chanko-nabe (ちゃんこ鍋), the staple food of sumo wrestlers. (Be reassured; nabe stews are not in themselves fattening, unless consumed in the kind of gargantuan proportions that a sumo wrestler manages to put away, while also quaffing massive volumes of beer and sake.)

Because this kind of eating is so informal, it is just as popular for family meals at home as it is in restaurants. Some people prefer to do all the cooking in the kitchen, and then bring the nabe to the table bubbling hot. But to do so is to miss most of the fun. All you need is a portable gas or electric burner set in the middle of the table, or even an electric hotplate. Any large, wide-brimmed pot will serve the purpose, but it is probably worth the modest investment in a specialized donabe: these attractive, folksy earthenware pots are perfect for holding and distributing the heat evenly, imbuing the stew with incomparable flavor.

Nabe meals are always convivial affairs, as much a source of entertainment as nourishment. Conversation flows naturally as you sip your warm sake and wait for the food to cook. The room fills with tempting aromas. Sitting around the simmering stewpot, you begin to realize how life might even have been fun before television was invented. And you start to grasp that simple but profound truth: the family that plays (and eats and talks) together, stays together. ♡

Yose-Nabe • 寄せ鍋

(serves four to six)

Ingredients

4 fresh fillets of white-meat fish (bream, flounder, or cod are most commonly used), cut into 1-inch pieces

1 lb chicken breast, cut into small chunks

8 oz. fresh medium-sized shrimp, shelled but with tail left in place

8 oz. fresh shucked oysters (rinsed carefully)

1 block momen tōfu (firm tofu) or yaki-dōfu (grilled tofu), cut into 1-inch cubes

1/2 small head of nappa (Chinese cabbage), cleaned, trimmed, with the leaves separated and cut into 2-inch strips

1 bunch (10 oz.) shungiku (edible chrysanthemum leaves), washed and with the leaves separated; if unavailable use fresh spinach

8 fresh shiitake mushrooms; if using dried shiitake, soak in water for 4-5 hours to reconstitute

1 package enoki mushrooms (if available)

1 naga-negi (long, thick green onion) or several thick scallions, cut on the diagonal into 1-inch lengths

1 medium carrot, sliced on the diagonal into 1/4-inch thick ovals

4-inch strip of kombu (kelp seaweed), wiped clean and scored a few times

3 oz. harusame or shirataki (cellophane noodles), briefly soaked to reconstitute

1 qt. dashi (Japanese soup stock prepared from water, bonito flakes and kombu); water or chicken broth may be substituted

1 lb fresh udon wheat noodles (if using dried udon, pre-cook until al dente)

Ponzu dipping sauce

(prepare as far ahead of time as possible)

1 cup lemon juice

1/2 cup rice vinegar (may substitute cider vinegar)

1 1/2 cup dark shōyu (Japanese-style soy sauce); do not substitute with Chinese-style soy sauce

1/4 cup mirin (sweet cooking sake) or 4 tsp sugar

1 cup soup stock

2 tbsp yellow sesame seeds, roasted and lightly crushed
Shichimi (seven-spice powder) to taste

Preparation

1. Prepare all ingredients: clean, cut, and arrange everything on one or two large platters, to be placed on the dining table beside the nabe.
2. Pour the ponzu sauce into individual dipping saucers for each person.
3. Pour the dashi cooking stock into the casserole. Place the kombu in the dashi.
4. Bring to a gentle boil. Reduce heat to a lively simmer, then start putting ingredients into the nabe, a little at a time.
5. Cook about half of the chicken and seafood first, together with a few vegetables. Make sure they do not overcook.
6. Each diner scoops out whatever foods he or she fancies, lightly dipping it into the ponzu sauce before eating.
7. Add more ingredients, the tofu and the rest of the vegetables, a little at a time.
8. Toward the end, when most other ingredients have been eaten, add the udon noodles and simmer for 3-4 minutes. (As an alternative to udon, add cooked rice, cover, and simmer until it forms a thick rice porridge, known as zo-sui).

stand-alone kanji-learning program. While it covers about two hundred characters, it starts with much more complicated kanji than Kantaro, excluding simpler characters taught in Power Japanese. Occasionally, Kanji Moments advises students to refer to Power Japanese if they do not understand a particular grammatical point.

Recommendation

These two programs illustrate the variety of methods that students can use to accelerate their learning of Japanese kanji characters. Japanese students who have worked through and enjoyed Power Japanese will do well with the familiar interface and approach of Kanji Moments. All other students should choose Kantaro for its unique approach, useful manual, and coverage of basic kanji characters.

The aim of this event is to promote international friendship between Japanese and foreign families living in Tokyo despite the differences in language and culture. The first event was a cruise to Miyake Island and the sixth cruise was held this year.

This year's event was jointly sponsored by the Tokyo International Foundation and the Tokyo Youth Hostel Association. Three hundred Japanese and 210 foreigners from more than 20 countries gathered on Kōzu Island (one of the Izu islands), and had a happy time with the islanders.

The participants boarded the large ship Camellia-maru at 9:00 PM on August 24th, leaving from Takeshiba Pier in Tokyo. They enjoyed a sea trip for eight hours, and reached Kōzu Island at 6:30 AM the next morning. According to legend, this island, surrounded by the beautiful emerald-green sea, was a place in which the gods gathered for a meeting. The name "Kōzu-shima" (神津島) literally means "Island of the Assembly of the Gods."

After reaching the island, the participants had good times circling the island in a boat, playing volleyball and other games on the beach, going hiking, and teaching each other how to cook their countries' food.

In the evening, an outdoor exchange party was held at the Kōzu Elementary School with islanders. A lot of food was served, and people made long lines in front of stalls serving yakitori, takoyaki, cotton candy, and so on. After they sang, danced and beat Japanese traditional drums, the barrier over language and culture was gone. There was happy talk and laughter everywhere. The participants had the wonderful experience of exchange from the very first day.

The second day, there were also numerous events—a children's camp, a historical tour of the island, tennis, Hawaiian dance, recreation on the beach, and so on. All participants opened their hearts, and some of them exchanged addresses.

There was not only recreation but also serious events such as a symposium about cross-cultural communication with a lecturer and a study meeting with a photographer who promotes environmental protection. Mr. Li Zhi Wong, a trainee from Beijing, joined the symposium and said, "The most important point of good cultural exchange is to make a good friend in play with smile. Nobody should use his own measure to understand a different culture."

The International Friendship Exchange is getting more popular year by year, and some foreign families become regular members. One family even participated three times. This event is regarded as a good opportunity to understand different countries and people through international exchange.

Reggie Foster, a long-time star hitter for the Richmond Flags baseball team, suffers a dry spell and is released by his team. Still confident in his abilities, Reggie tries shopping around for another team with the help of his manager, Frank; but they learn to their dismay that a 35-year-old slugger in a slump isn't hot property in Major League Baseball. Finally Frank finds a solution: Japan.

At first Reggie is resistant: "Can you really imagine me playing in a place like Japan?" But as his beautiful girlfriend Laura points out, "By playing in Japan, you can prove that you're still good enough to play over here." So Reggie gives in, and goes with Frank to a meeting with the manager of the Tokyo Gentlemen baseball team.

The manager, Hirayama, is unimpressed by Reggie—"Lots of Major Leaguers have come to Japan in the past, but most of them were ready for the junk heap," he grouses. Moreover, he strongly disapproves of Reggie's beloved mustache. It's our hero's first inkling of the troubles he may face in Japan. Before leaving the US, Reggie visits another American who had played for a Japanese team to get some advice.

 "What? You say you signed with the Tokyo Gentlemen?" (PL2)

Former Player: 冗談 だろ?

 "You're kidding, right?" (PL2)

- da tte and tte are both colloquial quotative forms. When exclaimed with the intonation of a question, they express surprise at what the speaker has heard. Both da tte and tte are used to quote the other person's words back at him, but da tte can also be used after question words to express surprise, like "You say what?/where?/when?"
- keiyaku = "contract," and keiyaku shichimatta is a contraction of keiyaku shite shimatta, where keiyaku shite is the -te form of keiyaku suru ("enter into a contract/sign") and shimatta implies the action is regrettable/undesirable. To marks the party with whom the contract is signed.
- darō (colloquially shortened from darō) generally makes a conjecture ("is probably/surely"), but it's also used idiomatically as a tag question, like "right?"

2 Reggie: いや、本当 だ。1年 契約 で 250万 ドル。

 "In that case you'd better think that you had a year-long bad dream or something and resign yourself to it."
 "Well, then you may as well think of it as a bad dream for a year and just deal with it." (PL2)

- mita is the plain/abrupt past form of miru ("see," or when speaking of a dream, "have").
- omotte is the -te form of omou ("think"); ~ to omotte plus a verb expresses the frame of mind with which the action is/was/should be done.

4 Reggie: 悪い 夢? / いったい 何 の 事 だ?
Warui yume? / Ittai nan no koto da?
 bad dream (emph.) what of thing is "A bad dream? / What the hell are you talking about?!" (PL2)

- ittai strongly emphasizes questions, but it has none of the rough qualities of many of the words used in English to emphasize questions.
- nan is a contraction of nani ("what"), and nan no koto (lit., "thing of what") is an idiomatic expression for "about what."

5 Former Player: ああ、つまり / 日本にはベースボールなんてスポーツはないのさ。
Ā, tsumari, / Nihon ni wa bēsubōru nante supōtsu wa nai no sa.
 (Interj.) that is to say/I mean Japan in as for baseball (quote) sport as for not exist (explan.) (emph.)
 "Well, what I mean is, the sport of baseball doesn't really exist in Japan." (PL2)

- tsumari is used when explaining, restating, or clarifying what has just been said, like "that is to say/in other words/what I mean is ~."
- nante here is a colloquial equivalent of nado to iu (lit., "called such a thing as"), so bēsubōru nante supōtsu = "a sport called such a thing as baseball," in this case implying "a sport that can be called baseball" → "the sport of baseball."
- sa is used in informal speech after no mostly by males for authoritative or assertive emphasis. It often takes the place of da/desu ("is"), as here.

 "No, as for that, rather than calling it a sport..."
 "Actually, you really can't even call it a sport..." (PL2)

- yatsu is an informal/rough word for “fellow/guy,” and -ra makes it plural → yatsu-ra = “they/them.” The word often, as here, carries a tone of derision.
- ore is a rough, masculine word for “I/me,” and -tachi makes it plural → ore-tachi = “we/us.”
- yatteru is a contraction of yatte iru, from yaru (“do,” or when speaking of sports, “play”). Ore-tachi ga yatteru is a complete thought/sentence (“we are playing”) modifying bēsubōru (“baseball”).
- omotte iru (“think/are thinking”) is from omou (“think”).
- tondemonē is a masculine, slang version of tondemonai, an adjective meaning “preposterous/outrageous.”
- jitsu ni yoku nite mattaku chigau is a complete thought/sentence (“[it] truly closely resembles and yet is completely different”) modifying supōtsu (“sport”). Ga marks supōtsu as the subject of aru (“exists”).
- dake = “only,” and ~ ga aru dake da (lit., “it is only that ~ exists”) is an idiom for “all that exists/all they have is ~.”
- *yor*i follows the lesser of two things being compared, so ~ yori = “more/better than ~”; supōtsu to iu yori is literally “better/rather than calling it a sport”—i.e., he’s implying Japanese baseball is not a sport at all, and is about to give what he considers a better term for describing it.

- Japanese dates are given with the year first, followed by the month, and then the date. -Nen serves both as a counter suffix for years (ichinen = “1 year,” ninen = “2 years,” sannen = “3 years,” etc.) and as a suffix for designating the year within an era (“year 1/2/3 of ~,” or “first/second/third year of ~”).
- -gatsu after a number 1 through 12 designates the months of the year, while -kagetsu after a number counts a duration of months, so ichigatsu = “month 1” = “January,” nigatsu = “month 2” = “February,” etc.; and ikkagetsu = “one month,” nikagetsu = “two months,” etc.
- gen'eki refers to actively working in an occupation, and baribari is an FX word suggesting energetic, vigorous activity. Here it refers to the fact that Reggie, although in a slump, was playing in the Major Leagues in the prior season, so the feeling of gen'eki baribari no dai-riigā is something like “major leaguer fresh from tearing up the big leagues.”
- 来 (rai-) means “come” and 日 (-nichi) is the first kanji of 日本 (Nihon, “Japan”) making a word that means “visit/come to/arrive in Japan.”

It became the situation that Reggie and Laura would live in a luxury apartment just for foreigners granted to them by the team.

The team had arranged for Reggie and Laura to live in a luxurious apartment building custom-made for foreigners. (PL.2)

The rent was ¥3 million. Needless to say, this was a benefit that he alone was granted. (PL.2)

- to between two nouns means “and,” but note that it cannot be used to link two clauses the way “and” can in English.
- mansion (from the English “mansion”) in Japanese refers to a luxury apartment building or condominium.
- ataerareta is the plain/abrupt past form of ataerareru, passive form of ataeru (“give/grant/bestow upon”). Kyūdan kara ataerareta is a complete thought/sentence (“[it] was granted [him/them] by the team”) modifying gaijin senyō mansion (“foreigner” + “exclusive use” + “luxury apartment”).
- ~ koto ni natta is the past form of ~ koto ni naru (literally, “becomes the case/situation that ~”). This is an idiomatic expression for “it was decided/arranged that ~.”
- yachin refers specifically to “the rent” for a home or apartment. ¥3 million is about $30,000 at current rates.
- kare ni dake ataerareta is a complete thought/sentence (“[it] was granted to him alone”) modifying tokuten (“special privilege/benefit”).
- de aru is a more formal/literary equivalent of da/desu (“is/are”).

Laura: ちょっと 何 よ、 この 部屋 は?!
Chotto, nani yo, kono heya wa?
 (interj.) what (emph.) this/these room(s) as for “Hey, what is this place?” (PL2)

- chotto (lit., “a little”) is here being used as an interjection, like “hey.”
- heya is literally “room(s),” here referring to the entire apartment.
- her syntax is inverted; normal order would be kono heya wa nani ya (“as for this place, what is it?”).

 “But this is Tokyo, so I guess that can't be helped. I'll bear with it.”
 “But this is Tokyo, I suppose . . . I'll learn to live with it.” (PL2)

- shumi = “aesthetic taste,” and shumi (ga) warui implies that something or someone shows “poor aesthetic taste/sense.”
- wa is a colloquial particle that adds light emphasis. When the intonation rises slightly, as it would here, it has a distinctly feminine ring.
- when speaking of a room or an entire house, semai means “small/cramped”; it's the opposite of hiro (“roomy”).
- n is a contraction of explanatory no, so n ja nai spoken with the intonation of a question is “Isn't it [the case that] ~?”—often implying “Don't you think it's [the case that] ~?”
- shikata nai (or shikata ga nai) = “it can't be helped/it's unavoidable.”
- The particle ending ka is often used like this when observing or figuring out something for oneself, with the feeling of “So it's ~, is it?”
- gaman is a noun meaning “fortbearance/fortitude,” and gaman suru is its verb form: “forbear/put up with/show fortitude [in the face of adversity].”

Laura: ねえ レジー、ここに 変な顔した 男の 写真がある けど、誰なの?

 "Hey, Reggie, there's a picture here of a funny-looking man, but who is it?"

- hen na kao = "strange/funny face," and shita is the plain/abrupt past form of suru ("do," or in idiomatic use, "make/have"); hen na kao shita is like "strange-faced." A wide variety of idioms based on ~ kao (o) suru are used to describe people's facial appearances—whether in reference to their congenital "looks" or to their expression of the moment.
- the explanatory no and na no are often used at the end of sentences to ask questions, especially among female speakers.

"I'm beat. I heard the Japanese media were crazy, but man, that was unreal!" (PL2) Marude Rōma Hōō ni demo natta kibun da yo.

 just/almost Rome/Roman Pope (result) or something became feeling is (emph.)
 "I felt like I was the Pope or something." (PL2)

- sore-dokoro ja nai implies one simply can't deal with the matter in question at the moment due to fatigue, etc.: "This is hardly the time for ~." → "Forget that!"
- kutakuta is an FX word for fatigue or exhaustion; kutakuta da = "am/is/are exhausted." Mō here mainly provides emphasis.
- masukomi is abbreviated from masu komyunikēshon, the katakana rendering of "mass communication"; it's the Japanese word for "the media." Kureijii is from the English "crazy."
- kiite ita is the past form of kiite iru ("have heard"), from kiku ("hear"). The quotative to marks the complete thought/sentence Nihon no masukomi wa kureijii da ("The Japanese media are crazy") as the content of what he has heard.
- masaka emphasizes statements of incredulity. Something like omowanakatta ("didn't think") is implied after the quotative to wa → are hodo to wa = "[didn't think/expect it was] to that extent." With masaka this becomes "hardly expected it was to that extent/was anything like that."
- marude is used to emphasize likeness in a comparison and is often followed by forms that mean "is like," such as mitai da/desu (see next panel) or yō da/desu. The emphatic meaning ranges from "just/exactly like" to "much/almost/practically like." In this case the comparison is implicit rather than explicit.
- ni natta is the past form of ni naru ("become"; ni marks the result of the becoming); inserting demo makes it like "become ~ or something." Rōma Hōō ni demo natta is a complete thought/sentence ("[I] have become the Pope or something") modifying kibun ("feeling").

 you like wonderful player saw/have seen have never because can't blame (fem. colloq.)
 "It's just that they've never seen a player as great as you—you can't blame them." (PL2)

- kitai shiteru is a contraction of kitai shite iru, the progressive ("is/are ~ing") form of kitai suru, which means "await with eager anticipation" or "expect/hope/count on [a helping hand/good performance/favorable outcome/bright future]."
- ending a sentence with the explanatory no plus yo is mostly feminine; males would usually say n da yo.
- ueta is the plain/abrupt past form of ueru ("starve"); ueta koji = "starving orphan."
- ja nai in this case is a colloquial short form of ja nai ka or ja nai no, "isn't it so?"—here used rhetorically.
- anata no yō na ("[who is] like you") modifies subarashii pureiyā ("wonderful/great player").
- mita is the plain/abrupt past form of miru ("see"), and koto mo (or ga or wa) nai after a past verb means "have never [done the action]" → "have never seen." O, to mark pureiyā as the direct object, has been omitted.
- muri = "impossible/unreasonable"; muri ja nai means "is not impossible," but muri nai is an idiomatic expression for "It's understandable" or "You can't blame him/her/they."

 yes matter of course is autumn by Major League of group even will have woken up (emph.)
 “Oh, yeah, absolutely! By fall I’m sure even the Major League people will have come to their senses.” (PL2)

- itsu made mo (lit., “even until when”) is an idiomatic expression for “on and on/indefinitely/forever.”
- konna (“this kind of”) is often used to belittle, so konna tokoro has the feeling of “a stupid place like this.”
- konna tokoro ni iru is a complete thought/sentence (“be in a place like this”) modifying tsumori, a noun meaning “intent/intention.” Wa to mark tsumori as the topic has been omitted.
- ā is an informal interjection implying “oh, yeah/oh, right.”
- mochiron can be used either as an adverb (“of course/naturally/without question”—see panel 9) or as a noun (“a matter of course”): mochiron da = “It’s a matter of course/It goes without saying” → “Absolutely.”
- ni marks the time when something will take place, so aki ni wa is literally “as for in the fall”; it becomes “by fall” because in this case the verb means “will have [done the action].” The -te iru form of a verb can mean either “is/are/will be ~ing” or “has/have/will have ~” depending on the context and the nature of the verb.
- renchū is an informal word for referring to a group of people.
- datte is a colloquial equivalent of mo, meaning “too/also” or “even.”
- samashite iru is from samasu, which basically refers to returning to one’s senses. The expression me o samasu means “awaken” (from sleep, a dream, or an illusion), and voi o samasu means “sober up” (voi = drunkenness).
- sa gives authoritative emphasis at the end of a sentence in informal speech; this use is mostly masculine.

Laura: ん . . . ん
N . . . n
 “Mmm . . . mmm.”

Uchida: あのー . . .
Anō . . .

- anō is a hesitation word similar to “uhh/um.” It’s often used to get someone’s attention, essentially like “Excuse me.”

 “What [is going on] all of a sudden? It’s rude, isn’t it—coming in without even getting permission?”
 “Where’d you come from, all of a sudden? How rude can you get?—marching right in without even asking permission!” (PL2)

Laura: どうして 通訳 の あなた が ここ に いる わけ?!
Dōshite tsūyoku no anata ga koko ni iru wake?
 why interpreter who are you (subj.) here/this place in exist/be situation
 “Why should you, the interpreter, be here?”
 “What business do you have being here?” (PL2)

- the emphatic yo after a question word makes a relatively sharp question in colloquial speech: “What?/Why?/Who?,” etc. Male speakers are more likely to use da yo in such cases: nani yo? → nan da yo?
- shitsurei refers to “rudeness”; shitsurei ja nai looks like “is not rude,” but is a colloquial shorthand for the mostly rhetorical question shitsurei ja nai desu ka (“Is it not rude?”).
- kotowari is a noun referring to “prior notice/warning” or “seeking of permission”; nashi ni is equivalent to the adverb form naku (see next panel), from the adjective nai (“not exist”), so it means “without” → kotowari mo nashi ni = kotowari mo naku = “without seeking permission/without asking.”
- haitte is the -te form of hairu (“enter”), and kite is the -te form of kuru (“come”); since hairu can mean either “go into” or “come into,” following it with a form of kuru clarifies the direction.
- the syntax is inverted; normal order would be kotowari mo nashi ni haitte kite shitsurei ja nai. In this pattern, the -te form ending the first clause often indicates the cause of or reason for what follows. Here she’s stating why she’s accusing him of rudeness.
- the no between tsūyoku (“interpreter”) and anata (“you”) essentially implies they are the same thing: “you who are the interpreter.”
- wake literally means “reason/circumstance,” but in colloquial speech it can be used like explanatory no to ask for an explanation (intonation of a question) or make one (regular intonation).

Uchida: 断りもなくと言われても、私はあなた達をここへ案内してずっといるわけでした。

 "After you have finished that, we will have you depart immediately for Miyazaki, the camp location."

"Immediately afterwards, you will depart for the training camp in Miyazaki." (PL3)

- de marks kyūdan jimusho ("team office") as the place where an action occurs, but with the following no, it functions like an adjective modifying gōdō kisha kaiken ("joint press conference" → "joint press conference that is at ~") rather than directly expressing the place of the action arimasu (PL3 form of aru, here meaning "occur/be held"). The difference in this case is insignificant, but that's not always true.
- mukatte is the -te form of mukau ("face/head toward/depart for"), and itadakimasu is the PL3 form of itadaku, which after the -te form of a verb implies having someone else do the action. Sometimes, as here, -te itadakimasu forms are used as a polite way of saying "you will/must [do the action]."

"We just got here, and we're tired." (PL2)

- yasumasete is the -te form of yasumaseru, the causative ("make/let [do]") form of yasumu ("rest"). Kure after the -te form of a verb makes an informal/abrupt request or gentle command.
- tsuita is the plain/abrupt past form of tsuku ("arrive [at]"), and bakari after the past form of a verb implies the action occurred just now or very recently.
- tsukarete iru ("be tired") is from tsukareru ("grow tired").

Uchida: 先程渡したスケジュール表にはそう書いてあります。
Sakihodo watashita sukejūru-hyō ni wa sō kaite arimasu.

"On the schedule I gave you a while ago, it says that."

"I understand. Everytime you say something, you mention that schedule. / Laura, let's prepare to leave."

"OK, we'll go. You're always harping on that damn schedule! / Let's get our stuff together, Laura." (PL3)

- kaite is the -te form of kaku ("write") and arimasu is the PL3 form of aru, which after the -te form of a verb implies the action was done and the result remains in place → "is written."
- nanika to ieba is an idiomatic expression meaning "[do/say the same thing] every chance you get/whenever you open your mouth."

Uchida: いえ、必要なものは全部揃っています。そのままでも結構です。
Ie, hitsuyō na mono wa zenbu sorotte imasu. Sono mama de kekkō desu.

"Also, as for [going] to the joint news conference site and training camp, all companions are forbidden."

"Also, no escorts are permitted at either the joint press conference or the training camp." (PL3)

- sorotte imasu is the PL3 form of sorotte iru (from sorou, "be arranged/ready") which implies all the necessary/relevant items are in place and ready.
- mama means "as is/unchanged," so sono mama = "unchanged from that/in that same state"; de marks this as a condition: "in a condition unchanged from that" → "as you are."
- oyobi is a formal "and/as well as/together with," not generally used in conversation.
- kinshi = "prohibition"; kinshi sarete imasu is the PL3 form of kinshi sarete iru ("is prohibited"), from kinshi suru ("prohibit").
- kara ("because/so") here is merely to "soften" the sentence ending.

"As it happens, it has long been Reggie's fervent desire to play in front of this country's pro baseball fans, and now that dream is most happily becoming a reality." (PL3-4)

- kanri means "administration/management," bu refers to a "division/department," and -chō = "head/chief," so Kanri-buchō is "head of the administration department" → "principal administrative officer," or for a ball club, "general manager."
- katsuyaku is a noun referring to a person's activity in a particular arena (occupation/field of interest), generally implying an impressive performance in that activity. Its verb form is katsuyaku (o) suru, which for sports means "play well/rack up a worthy record." Here, sarete is the -te form of sareru, PL4 honorific form of suru, and kimashita is the PL3 past form of kuru ("come"); kuru after the -te form of a verb often indicates that the action of the verb moves toward the speaker—in this case, moving toward the speaker in time, from farther in the past until last year.
- purei is from the English "play," and purei shite is the -te form of the Japanese verb purei suru. English verbs become action nouns when borrowed into Japanese, and suru must be appended to make them verbs again.
- ~ koto ni narimashita is the PL3 form of ~ koto ni natta, seen in panel 9, above.
- kore ni tsukimashite wa is the PL3 form of kore ni tsuite wa, a conjunctive phrase that means "in regard to this/in this connection"; it is used in formal speech as an all-purpose connector or filler phrase.
- honnin = "the person himself/herself"; netsubō sarete ori is a PL4 form of netsubō shite iru, from netsubō suru ("wish fervently/eagerly aspire to"); honnin ga ~ netsubō shite iru = "Reggie himself has fervently wished ~."

"And, at the same time, he has promised us that he will personally capture the triple crown as well as lead the team to victory in both the pennant race and the Japan Series!" (PL3)

Reporters: おーっ

 (exclam.)
"Wu-ohhh!" (exclamation of amazement/wonder/awe)

- yakusoku is a noun for "promise," and yakusoku shite is the -te form of the verb yakusoku suru ("promise"); kureta is the past form of kureru, which after a -te form implies the action is/was done for the benefit of the speaker.

Lesson 50 • The verb of knowledge: shiru

In English, to know is to know. But in Japanese, there are two verbs for “know” (shiru and wakaru), and they are not interchangeable.

Strictly speaking, shiru refers to the action of acquiring information or knowledge. Since it means “come to know/learn/find out,” it’s the -te iru form that is usually used for the meaning of “know,” essentially implying “I have come to know and continue to know.”

Wakatte iru (“understand”) is also often translated as “know.” The difference is in how you came to know. As a general rule, shitte iru implies a knowledge acquired through experience or from some outside source, while wakatte iru implies an understanding or discernment arrived at through an internal realization or exercise of the mind. We look at shiru below and will cover wakaru in Basic Japanese No. 51.

Shitte iru = “know”

The Kakegawa High School Soccer Club has just wrapped up a welcome party for new members. Everyone wants to continue the festivities at another location, but they are having trouble deciding where to go.

Kazumi: あたし いい ところ 知ってる よオ!
Atashi ii toko shitteru yō!
 I/me good place know (emph.)
“I know a good place!” (PL2)

Off panel: おー! さすが 一美ちゃん! / よっ、 あそび人!
O-! Sasuga Kazumi-chan! / Yo, asobinin!
 (exclam.) befitting (name-dimin.) (interj.) play/playing person
“All right! That’s Kazumi for you! Hey hey, party animal!” (PL2)

- atashi is a mostly feminine colloquial variation of watashi (“I/me”).
- toko is a contraction of tokoro (“place”).
- shitteru is a contraction of shitte iru (“know”).
- sasuga implies the action is what you would expect of Kazumi.
- asobi is the stem of asobu (“play”), and asobinin refers to a “carouser/partier,” most commonly male.

© Oshima Tsukasa / Shoot!, Kodansha

Shiritai = "want to know/learn"

While their husbands are out fishing, Michiko and Kate whip up dinner at Michiko's house.

© Yamasaki & Kitami / Tsuru Baka Nisshi, Shogakukan

Michiko: 手伝っていただいて ありがとう!!
Tetsudatte itadaite arigatō!! helped/aided me-(reason) thank you
"Thank you for helping." (PL2)

Kate: いいえ、作り方を 知りたかったのよ!!
ie, tsukurikata o shiritakatta no yo!!
 no method of making (obj.) wanted to learn (expln.) (emph.)
"Not at all, I wanted to learn how to make it." (PL2)

- tetsudatte is the -te form of tetsudau ("help/assist"), and itadaite is the -te form of itadaku, which implies the action benefited the speaker. The latter -te form shows this is her reason for thanking Kate.
- shiritakatta is the past form of shiritai ("want to know/learn/find out").

Shiranai = "not know"

Shōta's family was in Tokyo for a wedding. His mother and sister are now on their way home, unaware that Shōta's father, something of a wild man, has ditched them and gone off to visit Shōta at his company dorm near Tokyo.

Mother: あら? 父さんは?
Ara? Tōsan wa?
 (interj.) father as for
"Oh! Where's Dad?" (PL2)

Sister: 知らない!!
Shiranai!! not know
"I don't know." (PL2)

- shiranai means "not know," so it's the negative of shitte iru ("know") rather than shiru ("come to know/learn").

© Kubonouchi Eisaku / Tsurunoku Dokushin Ryō, Shogakukan

Shirimasen = "not know"

Hamasaki was due back at work in the morning, but called at the last minute to say he needed additional vacation time. The truth is, he was unable to leave his vacation spot because he'd been arrested, but the section chief didn't give him a chance to explain and now finds himself at a loss for words as he tries to explain Hamasaki's absence to the company president.

© Yamasaki & Kitami / Tsuru Baka Nisshi, Shogakukan

Section Chief: 理由? 知りませんよ!!
Riyū? Shirimasen yo!! reason not know (emph.)
"The reason? I don't know!"
"The reason? I have no idea!" (PL3)

- shirimasen is the PL3 form of shiranai, which essentially implies "I don't know because I wasn't informed," or "I don't know because I don't have access to the relevant information."

Shiranai as denial

Hiroshi put some frogs in his sister's backpack after she teased him about getting a low score on a math test. Now he is denying the whole thing.

© Saigan Ryōhei / Yūyake no Uta, Shogakukan

Mother: ひろし! いたずら しちゃだめ よ。いけない子 ね。
Hiroshi! Itazura shicha dame yo. Ikenai ko ne.
 (name) trick/prank mustn't do/play (emph.) no good child (colloq.)
"Hiroshi, you naughty boy! Don't tease your sister."
 (PL2)

Hiroshi: フーン、ぼく しらない もん。
Fūn, boku shiranai mon.
 (snort) I/me not know (emph.)
"Humph, I don't know a thing about it." (PL2)

- shicha dame is a contraction of shite wa dame, literally, "it is not permissible to do."
- ikenai expresses disapproval: "that's no good/that won't do/you shouldn't." When modifying a person it typically implies he or she is guilty of bad behavior: "naughty/ill-behaved."
- mon is a contraction of mono, here used for strong colloquial emphasis.

Shiranai as a warning

Hamasaki mistakenly invited two company presidents who hate each other on a deep-sea fishing trip. Another member of the fishing trip, Section Chief Sasayama, is famous for getting obnoxious after drinking. Sasayama, who works for one of the presidents, has just emerged from the cabin, totally plastered and unaware that the two presidents are on board and that tensions are running high. Hamasaki does his best to warn him and then decides to concentrate on fishing instead.

© Yamasaki & Kitami / Tsuri Baka Nisshi, Shogakukan

Hamasaki: もう、 どう なんて も
Mō dō nante mo
 (exasp.) what/how when becomes/occurs

知りませんよっ て の!
shirimasen yo tte no!
 not know (emph.) (quote) (explan.)
 "Well, no matter what happens, I won't know about it."

"Well, whatever happens, don't say I didn't warn you!" (PL2)

- dō nante mo is an expression for "whatever the situation becomes/no matter what happens."
- when speaking of an action someone else is about to do, shiranai/shirimasen implies the speaker expects a bad outcome and wants to dissociate himself from the action. It has the feeling of English expressions like "I wash my hands of it/Don't say I didn't warn you/Don't come crying to me afterwards." yo is often included because it's the particle used to emphasize warnings and other types of information the speaker thinks the listener particularly needs to know.
- yo tte no (a colloquial contraction of yo to iu no) can be thought of as adding emphasis in this case.

Shiranai as an adjective

This man dated Junnosuke's mother long ago when he was wealthy and successful. Then he had to serve several years in jail for black market activities, and now she wants nothing to do with him—much to Junnosuke's distress.

Man: ローズ! 俺 だよーっ!!
Rōzu! Ore da yō!!
(name) I/me is (emph.)
"Rose! It's me!" (PL2)

Man: 淳之介ーっ!
Junnosuke!
(name)
"Junnosuke!" (PL2)

Junnosuke: お母ちゃん!
Okāchan!
"Mo-o-om!" (PL2-3)

Mother: 行きましょ! 知らない 人 だ わ。
Ikimasho! Shiranai hito da wa.
let's go don't know person is (fem. colloq.)
"Let's go. It's a person whom I don't know."
"Come on, Junnosuke! I've never seen that man before." (PL2)

- ore is a rough, masculine word for "I/me."
- ikimasho is a shortened ikimashō, PL3 volitional ("let's/I shall") form of iku ("go").
- shiranai is in effect a complete thought/sentence ("I don't know [him]") modifying hito ("person").

© Saigan Ryōhei / Yūyake no Uta, Shogakukan

Shiranai uchi ni = "before one knows it"

Shima discovered that someone in the Mizuno faction was embezzling money, and has just told his boss Fukuda about it. Fukuda supports the opposing Usami faction, and is delighted that this will give Director Usami the upper hand and allow all of those in his faction to be promoted, including, he explains, Shima himself. Shima contemplates the significance of what is happening.

© Hirokane Kenshi / Kachō Shima Kōsaku, Kodansha

Shima: 知らないうちに 俺 が 宇佐美派 に
Shiranai uchi ni ore ga Usami-ha ni not know within/while I/me (subj.) (name)-faction into 組みこまれようとしている...
kumikomareyō to shite iru...
be joined am about to be
"I am already being drawn into the Usami faction before I even know it."
"Without realizing it, I've become part of the Usami faction." (PL2)

- kumikomareyō is from kumikomareru, passive form of kumikomu ("incorporate/integrate/join into"). ~ yō to shite iru can mean either "be about to/on the verge of ~" or "be in the process of ~."

Uchi ni after a verb implies "within the time of that action/while that action takes place," so shiranai uchi ni is literally "while [I/he/they] didn't know" → "before one knows/knew."

Kamo shirenai = "might"

Ken'ichi's father kept disappearing on him and his mother when he was a child. Now that Ken'ichi's wife is about to give birth to their first-born, he is plagued by the thought that he will do no better.

© Yajima & Hirokane / Ningen Kōsaten, Shogakukan

僕もあの父親の 血を受け継いでいる
……
あんな父親のようになる
かもしれないんだ!!

~ kamo shirenai is literally "cannot know/tell if ~," which is the standard way to say "maybe/perhaps/might possibly ~." Note that the form of shiru is the negative potential (shirenai) rather than the plain negative (shiranai).

Man: 僕もあの父親の血を受け継いでいる...
Boku mo ano chichioya no chi o uketsuide iru...
I too that father 's blood (obj.) have inherited
"I, too, have inherited that father's blood..."

あんな 父親のようになる かもしれない んだ!!
Anna chichioya no yō ni naru kamo shirenai nda!!
that kind of father like become might possibly (expln.)
"I might possibly become like that kind of father!"
"It's possible I could turn out like him!" (PL2)

- uketsuide iru is from uketsugu ("inherit").
- anna ("that kind of") has a disapproving tone here.

Shiraseru = "inform"

Shima has just discovered, to his chagrin, that Igarashi cheated to win a company-related golf tournament. As part of the post-tournament party, they are having a naming contest for a line of color TVs. Igarashi is soon to announce Shima's suggestion, and Shima succumbs to the temptation to write something incriminating.

© Hirokane Kershi / Kachō Shima Kōsaku, Kodansha

Shima: 知らせる つもり は なかったが、
Shiraseru tsumori wa nakatta ga, inform intent/plan as for didn't have but 書かずには いられなかった!
kakazu ni wa irarenakatta!
without writing could not be
"I did not intend to inform them, but I could not help but write it."
"I hadn't planned to tell anyone, but I couldn't help myself." (PL2)

- tsumori means "intent/intention," often implying one has made concrete plans to do something.
- kakazu is a negative form of kaku ("write"), and ~ず ni wa irarenakatta is the past form of the pattern ~ず ni wa irarenai, which makes an expression for "can't help but [do the action]."

Shiraseru is the causative form of shiru, so it literally means "make/let know" → "tell/inform."

Shiru ka = "How should I know?!"

In a high school soccer scrimmage between the freshmen and sophomores, these two sophomores are left trying to figure out what has hit them after two freshmen executed a spectacular play.

© Oshima Tsukasa / Shoot!, Kodansha

Shiru ka is essentially a rhetorical question that implies a negative answer: "Would I know? Of course not!" → "How would/should I know?"

Player 1: なんだよ、あいつら?
Nan da yo, aitsura?
 what is/are (emph.) that guy-(plur.)
 "What are those guys?"
 "Where'd those guys come from?" (PL2)

Player 2: し、知るかよ。
Shi, shiru ka yo.
 (stammer) know (?) (emph.)
 "H-how should I know?!" (PL2)

On shirt: 掛川
Kakegawa
 (name of high school)
Kakegawa

FX: あわわ / あわわ
Awawa / Awawa
 (effect of dismay/consternation)

- aitsu is a contraction of ano yatsu (informal/slang for "that guy"), and the suffix -ra makes it plural → "those guys."

Haji o shiru = knowing shame

Ataru has been having trouble getting to school on time, and his mother is at the end of her rope.

© Takahashi Rumiko / Urusei Yatsura, Shogakukan

Mother: おまえ 四日 つづけて 遅刻してる んでしょ。
Omae yokka tsuzukete chikoku shiteru n desho.
 you 4 days consecutively have been late (explan.) probably "You've been late four days in a row!" (PL2-3)

恥 を 知りなさい、恥 を!!
Haji o shirinasai, haji o!!
 shame (obj.) know-(command) shame (obj.)
 "You should be ashamed of yourself!" (PL2)

Sound FX: ドドド
Do do do
Boom boom boom (sound of stomping down the stairs)

- tsuzukete is the -te form of tsuzukeru ("continue"); the -te form is here being used like an adverb to indicate manner, so it means "continuously/consecutively."
- chikoku shiteru is a contraction of chikoku shite iru ("have been late"), from chikoku suru ("be late [for school/work]").
- desho (or deshō) makes a conjecture, but here it's a very assertive one, having more the effect of strong emphasis.
- repeating haji o a second time adds emphasis.

Shirinasai is a command form of shiru, so haji o shirinasai is literally a command to "know shame." It's an expression for "You should be ashamed of yourself."

When speaking of place in English, it doesn't matter whether it's a place where something is or a place where something occurs—you can use all the same prepositions in either case. But in Japanese you have to make a distinction: the particle ni is used to mark location when speaking of existence, while the particle de is used when speaking of where an action takes place.

Since I've written about ni before, this time I want to focus mainly on de, but for comparison purposes it's worth noting that this issue contains quite a few examples of ni used to indicate where something or someone is. See the examples using iru or aru ("exist/be in a place" for animate and inanimate things, respectively) on pp. 51, 86, 92, and 94. Sumu ("live/reside"), one of several other verbs that take ni because they imply remaining in a place for a period of time, is also represented, on p. 88. In addition, we have a case where ni marks a more abstract place: sono kōi ni dō iu imi ga aru ("What meaning exists in that action?" p. 38). The "place" of existence in this case is an action; at other times, it is a characteristic, a situation, an event, an idea, an occupational or other specialized field, a social milieu, and so forth.

Now, when you're speaking of where an action occurs, has occurred, or will occur, you must use de to mark the place, as in the following example:

Vendor: A! Sugu chikaku no konbiniensu sutoa de yatte kuremasu yo. (PL3)
Obatarian: E!? (PL2-3)

The action is yatte kuremasu ("will do [it] for you," with "it" referring to breaking a ¥1,000 bill), and the place it will occur is the konbiniensu sutoa ("convenience store"). (p. 53)

With actions as well, the place can be abstract:

Q: Tenmetsu shiki burēki ranpu. / Jūtai de koitsu no ushiro ni tsuku to uttōshii zō! / Itai doko de katte kuru n da, sono rirē? (PL2)

The action is tsuku ("stick/become stuck"); ni marks ushiro ("behind") as the target/destination of the sticking, and de marks jūtai ("traffic jam") as the place where it happens. Koitsu ("this thing") refers back to tenmetsu-shiki burēki ranpu ("blinking-type brake lights"). Doko de, the question word "where" plus de, asks where an action took place/takes place/will take place. (p. 46)

You'll find other examples of de marking the spot on pp. 32, 51, 63, and 98.

The expression ato de is unusual in that de marks ato as the point in time when an action will take place. Mae de, by contrast, means "before/in front of" in space—i.e., as in the above examples, it refers to where an action takes place (see p. 98). To say "before" in a temporal sense, you must use mae ni. This follows the general rule that ni is used to mark the time when an action occurs. But ato ni means "after" only when speaking of the order in a sequence; ato de is used for "after/later" in time, and the corresponding word for speaking of relative location in space is ushiro de (action) or ushiro ni (existence), both meaning "behind."

Friend: Mō basu de kaerō yo. (PL2)
Noriko: Ano baka! Ato de omoikkiri ijimete yaru. (PL1; PL2)

De marks basu ("bus") as the means for accomplishing the action of the verb. Kaerō is the volitional "let's" form of kaeru ("go home"). Ato de indicates a general point in time ("after/later") rather than the place where an action takes place. (p. 46)

Some other uses of de seen in this issue are to mark the manner or means of an action (above, p. 57, and twice on p. 44), and to indicate range or scope (p. 86). ♦

WHAT'S TOYOTA DOING IN WITTMANN, ARIZONA?

Research
Development

It's the middle of the desert, miles from the nearest outpost of civilization. Nothing but cactus, coyotes, the occasional rattlesnake, and Toyota's Arizona Proving Ground. This is where Richard Woodroffe and two dozen coworkers did much of the development work on our new Avalon. Richard's job is to optimize ride comfort and handling stability, driving our newest models on wet and slippery roads, through tight corners and sudden stops, then fine-tuning the steering and suspension and testing them again. He tells us "The best part of the job is driving the first prototype of a new model—you can't wait to find out what it's like. It's an exciting time."

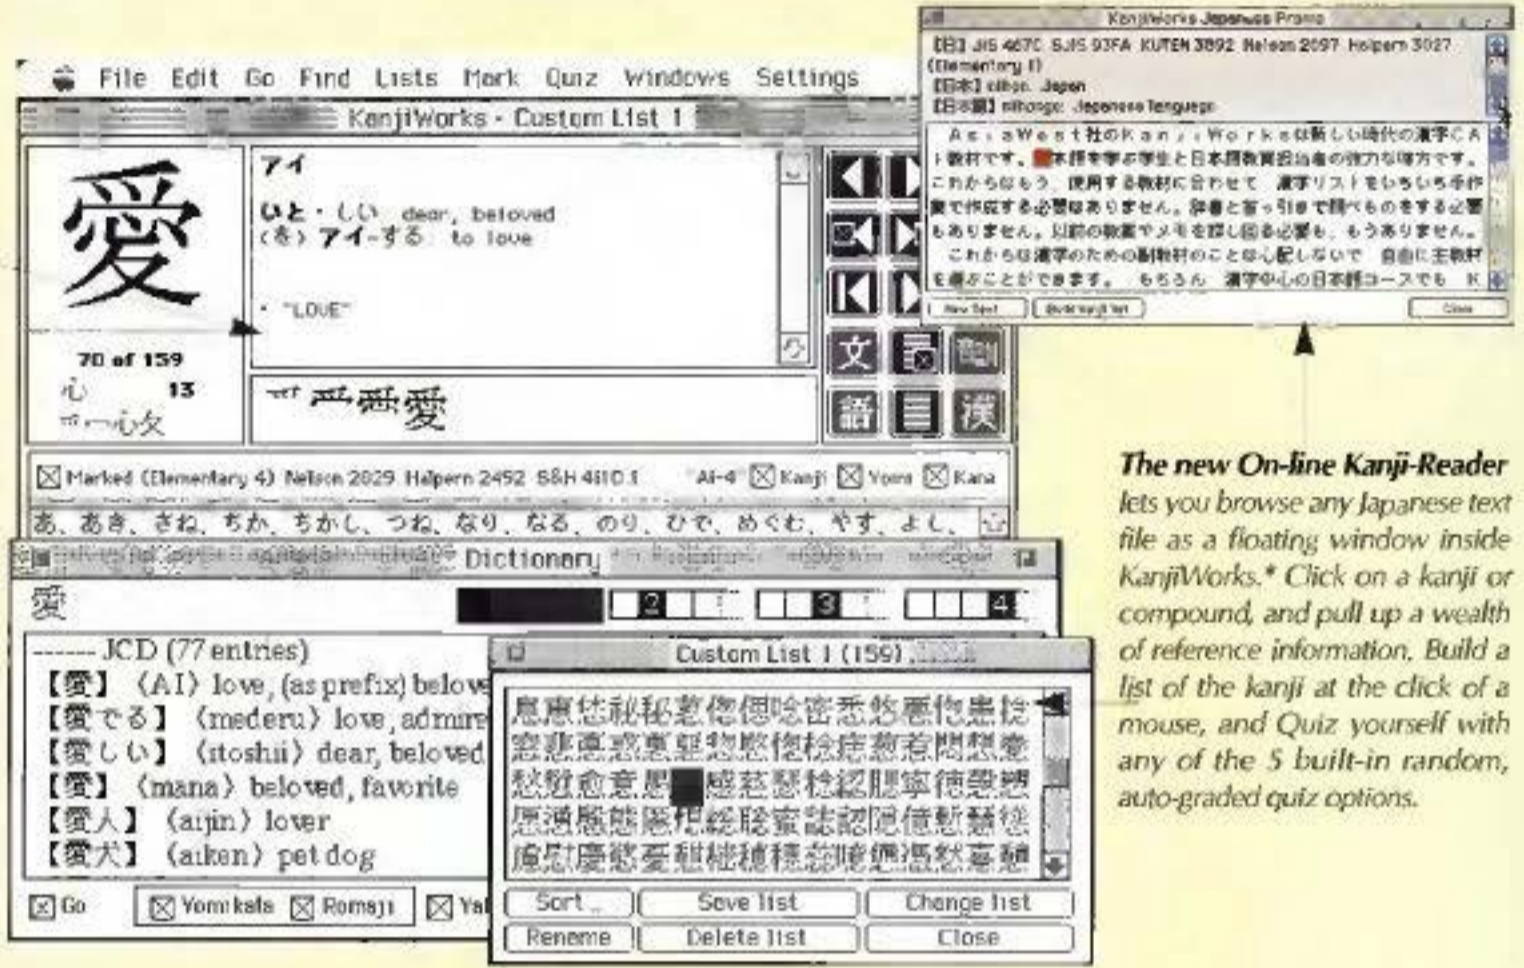

At Toyota we're committed to more than just building cars—we're also committed to people. People like Richard Woodroffe and our 500 other R&D staffers spread out across the U.S. and Europe. We believe in investing in their future, investing in the communities where they live and work. We think that the energetic spirit of these people, and their dedication and enthusiasm, are a pretty good return on that investment.
