The stretch on the Pine Lake road between the lake and the Okemos school and two miles on Columbia road west to the Pink school was scarified and new materials added to make the road bed as perfect as those laid earlier in the season of 1930. Maintenance records at the office of the road commission show that the amount required to be expended on the other roads laid last year has been very slight, much less than the cost of continual scraping and dragging necessary on loose gravel highways and necessary also even when chloride treatment is given.

The entire stretch between Mason and Pine Lake is now in fine condition for travel while the mile east on the Brickyard road and the mile north on Jefferson road is still slightly loose satisfactory surface. Six miles of Colis now in process of construction.

The Rural School

One of the greatest problems which Michigan faces is that of the district school. Accordingly the most perplexing factor in our entire taxation problem is that of the school tax and its varying rate. There are school districts where the tax has already become unbearable and practically confiscatory in its application. There are other school districts where the tax upon the indivdual has been so small that gross extravagancies have resulted merely because some corporation, or mine or lumber mill is there to foot the bill. In other districts the character of the property is such that it is exempt from taxation at the same time being such that the school population becomes a real problem to house and educate. In others the taxable property is so meager that the school is far below any proper educational standard.

It is becoming more and more a certainty that the school district is too small a taxation unit to be economic or equitable. On the other hand to place the entire cost of public school operation and maintenance in a centralized state bureau is to open wide the doors of extravagance and subject the taxpayer to the evils of remote Notwithstanding this the responsibility of providing equal educational opportunity for the children of all classes rests squarely-upon the shoulders of the commonwealth, the problem being to hold to proper standards without extravagance and waste.

That the large industrial centers are enjoying advantages under the present system of distribution of primary school money is admitted. That these same centers have great responsibility and a vital interest in the education of the rural pupil is equally obvious. .

A recent survey made in one of our central state cities showed that thirty per cent of the adult population of that city had migrated there from rural sections. These men and women then are the product for the most part of the one room district school. What they are, what their educational advantages have been, what they have been trained to do, and what their social outlook acquired during their school years is, of vital concern to the city. Other surveys have shown that more than fifty per cent of the children born and reared in the country find their way to the cities.

If the training of these children has been neglected, the cities will have vast numbers of uneducated men and women among their citizens. Without training or education this rural surplus will drift into the cities, take up residence in the slums, and in many cases become social problems instead of useful citizens.

The single obstacle to the adoption of an equalized system of public school support in Michigan at this moment rests in the hands of legislators representing Detroit and a few of the larger industrial cities of Michigan. Sufficient opposition arises from these sources to make the adoption of the New York system of equalization difficult in Michigan.

These cities should learn now, if they have not learned it ere this, that they must pay in school training or in the dole. Detroit, Lansing, Flint, Grand Rapids and other cities can best control the character of future citizens by taking an interest in the school training afforded the country boy and girl.

What Should Distribution Cost?

The investigation now under way to determine the proper spread of the cost of delivered milk as between the producer, the distributor and the consumer is an interesting topic. A great deal of so-called expert testimony will be heard. The outcome is problematical but out of it all it is hoped there will come a degree of knowledge as to just what the cost of getting the milk from the udder to the bottle on the doorstep should be.

In this connection a recent survey conducted by Cornell University is of interest. The survey referred to is published in an index of food prices and covers six periods of time. The period of 1910-14 is taken as 100 and the deviation from this point of farm prices, distribution costs, and retail prices for all food commodities is graphically shown.

All three lines run closely parallel during this period. They spread slightly during the next period of 1915-19 but almost meet again in 1920. During the period 1920-24, all drop considerably, cost of distribution least, retail prices somewhat but farm prices most. During 1925-29 they are shown to draw slightly apart each in diverging directions until 1930 when farm prices settled to the same position they held in 1910, retail prices holding about 50% above 1910, and distribution costs clinging close to the 1919 level or approximately 100 per cent above 1910. During 1931 to date distribution costs and retail prices of all commodities have followed a steady parallel course while farm prices have plunged downward to new low levels.

Wages in the industries are held by Cornell economists. as responsible for the high cost of distribution and retailing. If these deductions be true then are we to understand that the only hope for fair return to the farmer lies in lower wages in industry and business? And if this be accomplished will such a course change the trend of corporation profits as disclosed in a New York banking circular? In this tabulation it is shown that amusements, automobiles, drugs and the manufacture of food specialties pay highest returns while steel, textiles, shoes, clothing and household goods bring the manufacturer least profit. In fact the group first mentioned shows satisfactory profits while the second group is far below the point of safety.

The way back to normalcy may be longer than any have yet estimated.

Every Generation, Its Sucker Quota Another story of frenzied finance comes from a southern Michigan county where tens of thousands of dollars of savings have been lost principally to wage earners. It is the story of the Raisin Brook Rabbit Packing Company. The scheme by which hundreds of small investors hoped to gain riches is almost identical with the old Bohemian oat swindle of the eighties.

Breeder rabbits were sold to small farmers and backyard fanciers at extreme prices, the concern promising to buy all stock produced at a stated price, far in excess of any possible utilitarian value, just as the Bohemian oat peddler promised to buy back all oats grown at fancy

Co-incident with the establishment of a packing plant near Chicago, advertisements appeared in Chicago papers offering liberal rewards to smart salesmen. These ads read: "Here is a virgin sales field, rich in profits. Make $50 to $200 per week selling this proposition to the morning.

One hundred per cent profits never come except to the salesman who offers the glittering reward. It is a comeon game and only those who are used as bait for the less fortunate ever gain their promised rewards. Every year sees some new scheme. Every generation furnishes

No Mystery About Wheat

There is no mystery about the wheat situation. The wheat markets of the United States hold more than half a sheaf of petitions presented to the the opinon that many of them would a billion bushels more than the people of this country can possibly consume. This wheat must be sold in a world market which holds the largest carry-over ever some of the persons who circulated the kitchen economy. In the past year known. We have a fine, modern, beautiful building, an experienced corps of teachers, the equipment is of the best. The classes are small enough so that every student can profit by the individual attention and interest of the teacher. Special training is given in debating, oratory, commercial work, physical education, music, including band, orchestra and glee clubs, agriculture and many other courses besides the usual academic work. Hundreds of men and women have profited by the wonderful opportunities offered by the Mason schools.

Look over the popular Chevrolet models illustrated here before you make a motor car investment. Study them from every viewpoint-style, performance, dependability and economy. You'll be convinced that your money buys more in a Chevrolet. You'll understand why, month after month, Chevrolet has been leading in sales.

practically all cars today. Nothing less than six cylinders gives the fine engine-balance that produces a really smooth flow of power and completely eliminates objectionable vibration at its source. Six-cylinder smoothness is built-in, quiet, economical smoothness. Drivers of sixes never want less!

SPORT ROADSTER . . .

In addition, these six-cylinder Chevrolets provide a long wheel-base, parallel-mounted springs, smart bodies and unexcelled economy. Owners write that Chevrolets definitely cost less to operate and maintain! Yet with all these quality features, Chevrolets are offered at prices among the very lowest for which motor cars are sold. No wonder that the Chevrolet Six is called the Great American Value.

My Experiences in the World War By General John J. Pershing

Copyright, 1931, in all countries by the North American Newspaper Alliance. World rights reserved, includi Scandinavian. Reproduction in whole or part prohi

This was the first and only time that I ever sensed any misgiving in the mind of this resolute man. Not withstanding our occasional rather heated discussions on the use to be made of American troops, I admired him greatly. It always seemed to me he represented the true spirit of confidence and courage of the French people.

I then motored to General Foch's headquarters at Bombon. We considered my proposal to form an American corps near Chateau Thierry, to which he readily agreed. He spoke especially of the fine work of our

I asked how a German drive which threatened or perhaps captured Paris would affect the armies and the people. His reply was almost word for word like M. Clemenceau's. They had evidently discussed the possibility of losing Paris. He, too, was certain the armies would go on with the war. Foch spoke so positively and with such evident feeling that I was moved eighth divisions, en route from the British front to the northeast of France were stopped at General Foch's request in the vicinity of Villers Cotterets, the object being to concentrate several of our divisions on the west of the Marne sallent, primarily as a precaution against anoth er German offensive there, but ultimately for possible use on the offensive. The Second, Third, Twentysixth and Forty-second were in that area and with the Fourth and Twentyeighth there was a force equivalent to twelve French divisions, although some of these units were without artillery.

An encouraging circumstance at the moment was the success of the French n holding Von Hutler's attack on the Montdidier-Noyon front, This fourth phase of the German offensive was an effort not only to widen the vulnerable Marne pocket but to secure the railway between Compeigne and Soissons and open the way to Paris.

The anniversary of the arrival of our advance contingent in France was the occasion of many congratulations on the part of the French.

CHAPTER XLVI The dentands for American divisions were pressing. The First, second and Third had already become actively engaged, the First being slated to go to the reserve near the Chateau Thierry salient when relieved from Cantigny. The Second was still in line at Belleau wood, and the Third south of the Marne. General Foch had asked for five of the divisions recently arrived that were training with the British, Of these the Fourth and Twenty-eighth, while en route to the quiet Vosges sector to relieve French divisions, had been diverted to the reserve near the western face of the Marne sallent. The Thirty-fifth moved to the vicinity of Epinal and the Seventy-seventh was about to enter the trenches in the Baccarat sector to replace the Fortysecond, which was to reinforce Gouraud's army east of Rheims. The Eightysecond had started for the Toul sector to relieve the Twenty-sixth, which in turn was soon to relieve the Second. Thus there were three American divisions in quiet sectors and seven either in the battle line or held in readiness to meet any eventuality which might result from further ac tivity of the Germans in the great wedge they had driven toward Parls.

British Displeased. The British were displeased at the transfer of our divisions from their area, claiming priority to retain them by reason of having brought them over. When General Foch inquired of the conditions under which these troops were serving with the British, my renly made it clear that he had entire authority to direct where they should go in the emergency, as without it the theory of a supreme command would fail.

TRUCKING - Stock hauling, furniture moving, grain hauling and general trucking. Prompt service offensives had seriously crippled the allies, and not only materially reduced their powers of resistance but had depressed their morale and caused the darkest misgivings among them. They grew more and more fearful lest the enemy might still have untold reserves ready to swell his forces. That the morale of the ailies was low was shown by the conclusions of many of their soldiers returning from the front to the rest areas.

Reports from the British front were no better. Their troops continuously told our men who were with them for training that we had some too late and that our entry into the battle would only postpone ailled defeat. This attitude seemed so alarming that I took steps to prevent such a spirit from affecting our army by promptly reporting the facts to allied authorities. The presence of such sentiments was another important reason for opposing any form of amalgamation.

Vastness of Request Unrealized. Far short had we fallen of the expectations of the preceding November, when Foch, General Robertson of the British, and I had/Joined in an urgent appeal for twenty-four trained American divisions by the following June, It is small wonder that the allies were now so insistent in urging increased and continuous shipments of men, trained or untrained. So serious was the situation regarded that it was no longer a demand for twenty-four divisions but for one hundred. It is probable that the vastness of this request was not fully realized, or else the allies had greatly exaggerated ideas of our power of accomplishment, surprising as it actually proved to be

A brief calculation of these demands of the prime ministers showed that they were asking more than 2,500,000 combatant troops by the following spring, which, augmented by those required for the services of supply, conservatively calculated for a well-balanced force situated in a foreign country under the circumstances that surrounded us, would amount at least to 4.000.000 men.

The American combatant force would thus have equaled 200 divisions of the allies, and their apprehension may be imagined when we realize that this was greater by one fourth than the combined allied armies of 162 divisions then on the western front.

.Saw 3,000,000 as Limit. Although no such number as this could have been considered feasible, trol over them. as it is unlikely that it could have over all we could. After giving the question careful study, it seemed to effects of the war.' me that 3,000,000 men would be the limit we could hope to reach by the spring of 1919, This, poughly, would provide at least sixty-six or possibly over seventy conbatant divisions, the rest being necessary for the noncombatant service, As we had hitherto made estimates based was quite imperative that calculations should be made on the increased basis and that work everywhere in the A.

E. F. should now have that end in A cable I sent June 21 set forth the reasons for fixing the program for the future definitely at 3,000,000 men as a minimum, and urged upon the War department the utmost effort to meet our immediate requirements for the expansion of port facilities and railroads. A detailed study of the troop shipments and tonnage required was included. My cable closed: "There is nothing so dreadfully important as winning this war, and every possible resource should be made inmediately available. Mr. Secretary, the question is so vital to our country and the necessity of winning the war is so great that there is no limit to which we should not go to carry out the plan I have outlined for the next ten months, and we must be prepared to carry it on still further after that I inspected these troops June 19-22, 1918, and my impressions were favorable, although a number of officers were found unfamiliar with the principles of tactical leadership. In such hastily trained units this was hardly surprising, especially in view of the known defects of the instruction at

My predilection for detailed instruction in minor tactics, growing out of my personal supervision of training in both small and large units, led me quickly to discover deficiencies.

My diary notes the establishment of the military board of allied supply at at the Mason hospital or at her this time, June 22, 1918. It was exhome at 311 East Columbia after pected to study questions of supply 32w2 and adopt proper measures for the coordination of allled resources and Laude Courage of Negro Troops. Cables from the War department June 22 stated that the colored people at home were being told that negro soldiers in France were always placed in the most dangerous positions, being sacrificed to save white troops. and were often left on the field to die without medical attention. It was not difficult to guess the origin of this sort of propaganda. As a matter of fact, none of these troops had been in line except in quiet sectors. Those I had recently seen were in fine spirits and seemed keen for active service.

The only colored combat troops in France were those of the Ninety-second division, then in a quiet sector in the Vorges, and the four infantry regiments of the Ninety-third, each attached to a French division. Several individuals serving with the French had already received the croix de guerre for conduct in raids.

Clemenceau at Chaumont. Prime Minister Clemenceau, General Foch and M. Andre Tardieu, with Generals Weygand and Mordacq, came to Chaumont June 23, 1918, for a conference on the increase of American man power.

M. Clemenceau's popularity in France was probably at its height. As this was his first visit to Chaumont the people turned out en masse, crowded into the plaza and gave him a rousing welcome. His reception within the hotel de ville by the officials, civil and military, was marked by eloquent speeches. In his remarks M. Clemenceau gave the people every encouragement, making special reference to the increasing forces the Americans were sending over. As we were leaving the widowed mother of a missing soldier, her only son, came up in great distress and told M. Clemenceau of her sorrow. He spoke tenderly of her patriotic sacrifice, put his arm gently around her and kissed her cheeks, mingling his tears with hers. The pathos of this touched every heart. As General Foch and the others were not arriving until later, M. Clemenceau and I, driving together, accompanied by Generals Wirbel and Ragueneau in a separate automobile, went to the headquarters of the Eighty-third division, Major General Glenn commanding, which was billeted at Montigny, not far from Chaumont. situation of the various allied countries and their relative standing after the war. M. Clemenceau went to some length in his conjectures. Thought Britain Finished. "Great Britain is finished and in my opinion she has seen the zenith of her glory," he said. "What makes you think so, reminded him. He replied: "The Germans are a great people, but Germany will not reupon a total force of 2,000,000 men, it gain her prestige and her influence for generations."

Discuss Troop Shipments. Shortly after our return to Chaumont. Generals Foch and Weygand arrived and after lunch we all went into conference. The continuation of shipments up to one hundred divisions, as already recommended by the prime ministers, Lloyd George, Clemenceau, and Orando, formed the basis of French argument,

The whole subject was thoroughly discussed, and, considering the then shortage of man power claimed by the French and British, to say nothing of the possible increase of the German armies from Russian sources, the main question was to get over as many Americans as possible. It was finally agreed that we should propose an eighty-division program to be completed by April, 1919, and add to it the larger program of one hundred divisions to be completed by July, 1919.

Hospitalization and completion of three corps headquarters and staff organizations occupied my attention the last week of June, 1918. Twelve of our divisions were then either in line or in reserve hehind the French, five were in training in rear of the British army. Of those with the French, seven were concentrated in both staff and line in anticipation in the vicinity of Villers-Cotterets and Chateau-Thierry, between the French front and Paris. The British seemed to think the French unduly nervous about the safety of Paris, and that Foch was holding a greater proportion of American troops behind the French lines than necessary. They believed there was a strong probability of another attack against their front, and felt General Foch was not paying enough attention to their situation. However, they probably did not realize that a counteroffensive was contemplated on this front should the occasion present it-

Corps Headquarters Organized. The First corps headquarters, organized in January under Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, with Col. Malin Craig as chief of staff, had become a smoothly working machine ready for active service anywhere, but events had moved so swiftly there had been no opportunity for the assembly of divisions. With the increasing size of our army it was evident that a greater number of divisions would be able to take part in operations at earlier dates than we had thought possible. Consequently, the organization of the Second, Third and Fourth corps headquarters was at once completed,

The Second corps, Maj. Gen. George Read commanding, with Col. George

Education and Savings

In a few short weeks the school bells will be ringing and the children will be gathering in groups about the school houses discussing with youthful enthusiasm their teacher, books, vacation or any of the subjects that lie nearest to their interest. They are a carefree lot, concerned only about the immediate present.

Parents, stop and think of the educational problems of these same children who are now in the grades. It will be only a few years before they will be grown into young men and women. Are they going to be sufficiently educated to fit them for the life of useful citizens?

Now, while they are small, is the time to prepare for their future education. Start a savings fund with which some day you may send these children on to school. Prepare now.

Although they had given us every assurance that hospital arrangements for those operations would be complete, and without question did their best, it was only through the mobile hospitals

we had organized that we were able to give our casualties proper attention. In extenuation of the French failure to take care of our casualties properly it must be said that when the Germans swept over the Chemin des Dames to Chateau-Thierry the French lost 45,000 beds, included in some of their best equipped hospitals. We had no hospitals on that front and with limited transportation found it difficult to supplement the scant French facilities. In fact, the situation as to hospital accommodations for our troops was about to reach a critical

At the fish hatcheries of the West "mother" fish, kept in the rearing ponds are caught and stripped of their eggs during spawning season. The glass jars, about 8,000 to the quart, and water at an even temperature runs through these constantly for from 90 to 120 days. The infant fish are returned to the pools and carefully reared to planting size. The pools are watched night and day, often by "bomb" or flare lights, to guard against poachers and to attract insects.

WHERE YOUR MONEY IS SAFE

A first mortgage on homes has aptly been termed the backbone of a safe investment. The Standard first mortgages on 5711 homes, amounting to $14,-265,850.00 an average of $2,500.00 on each are all homes appraised at $33,655,561.12 and insured against fire or loss for $36,051,486.25 showing a safety factor of over $2.00 for every dollar loaned, with the further security that Standard loans are repaid monthly, thereby further increasing the safety as each payment is received.

In 38 years Standard investors have never lost a penny and have received 5% for every day their money has been invested.
