I saw this meme on my Facebook newsfeed and it triggered a desire to write a more in depth article about this from a metaphysical perspective.

Some of us are such advanced souls that we did not come here to be supported, but we came to be the support system for many. If you've had a challenging life and feel you never had proper support or love, that is because YOU are the love and support.

The above meme brings to mind a group of souls who have VOLUNTEERED to incarnate into a 3D human body and are here to help the rest of us. These are called MISSION SOULS. They are mid (mature) - to old souls in education, experience, hundreds, if not thousands of incarnations, possess many skill sets, and are here presently to ASSIST, SUPPORT and remain grounded in order to aid energetically/physically to usher in the Age of Aquarius into our tottering, out-of-harmony, 3D world. MISSION SOULS number about one billion here on Mom Earth right now. And every last one of them is on the FRONT LINES of this war between Light and the smothering, killing Patriarchy, as well as aiding in the TRANSITION PHASE from the 4th world to the 5th world.

The Quechua Indians of Peru, which pre-date the Inca by thousands of years, are rejoicing. In their belief system they have told us that the “5th world of the Heart” will be emerging in the 21st century. And indeed, it is happening right now. The Hopi prophecy has said that this world we live in now, will be destroyed by FIRE. And then, the 5th world of the heart will arise and take its rightful, welcomed place. And that is when we will finally have peace among all beings globally. It is something worth being a part of us, to be a Warrior for the Light, for “all our relations.”

These uniquely qualified souls are here to INFLUENCE those humans who remain “asleep.” They are here to send new ideas, perspectives and usher in the creation of the 5th world of the Heart into our 3rd dimensional world. They are of all genders, ages, skin colors and you can tell when they walk among us, their unbelievable LOVE is palpable to those who are "awake" and self-aware. Those who are asleep (young and immature souls which are five billion in body presently, here on Mother Earth), may not notice per se, but they can still FEEL the uplifting energy. Even a person who is asleep, will respond a little or a lot to the kindness, generosity, care, support, etc., in that soul’s aura, and the person will appreciate it on either an unconscious or conscious level of themselves. In the cosmos, it is the energy of LOVE that chips away at those incarnated humans who are still asleep, and it helps the young soul to awaken and take a step toward the Light.

See the example of Mari, in this obituary below, as an example of a Mission Soul:

Mari earned a PhD from Harvard University in 2000. At Harvard, Mari studied primarily under Alice Jardine and Barbara Johnson and worked as a full-time lecturer until being appointed to the University of Toronto as an Assistant Professor specializing in critical theory, psychoanalysis, continental philosophy, phenomenology, poststructuralism, and feminist and queer theory.

Mari holds degrees from Brown (BA), Harvard (MA, PhD), and the University of Paris (DEA), where she studied with philosopher Julia Kristeva. Students flocked to fill her classes and work with her. Within a short period, Mari developed into one of the preeminent theorists of our time and was granted the position of Distinguished Professor. The number of students that Mari inspired and encouraged is immeasurable.

The act of writing brought Mari great joy and fulfillment. Her work particularly allows complicated concepts to become accessible and the most difficult thinkers to become approachable. Mari's work on notions of sublimation and desire emphasizes how upholding one's singularity through a creative act allows one to be true to one's authentic self and dispel the pressures of conformity coming from the social order.

Her books are wildly popular, not just with scholars whose work ranges from queer antinormativity to ethics, but in communities of clinicians, analysts, artists, and creative writers who find transformative insights into the experiences of love, loss, hardship, and how to live an ethical, examined, and meaningful life. Her many books include Reinventing the Soul: Posthumanist Theory and Psychic Life (Other Press, 2006), A World of Fragile Things: Psychoanalysis and the Art of Living (SUNY Press, 2009), The Case for Falling in Love (Sourcebooks, 2011), The Singularity of Being: Lacan and the Immortal Within (Fordham University Press, 2012), The Call of Character: Living a Life Worth Living (Columbia University Press, 2013), Between Levinas and Lacan: Self, Other, Ethics (Bloomsbury, 2015), The Ethics of Opting Out: Queer Theory's Defiant Subjects (Columbia University Press, 2017), Penis Envy and Other Bad Feelings (Columbia University Press, 2018), and Distillations: Theory, Ethics, Affect (Bloomsbury, 2018). She has left behind a number of unpublished manuscripts that will appear posthumously.

In 2018, Mari received a breast cancer diagnosis. Mari will also be missed terribly by a large circle of friends, students, and colleagues all over the world who adore her. Relationships were of paramount importance to Mari, and she had a remarkable ability to attract kindred souls wherever she went, building community and family around her. She was especially adept at seeing and connecting with the children in her life.

Mari loved and celebrated being alive. She found places with which she connected, and she made them home. She found pleasure and beauty all around her, and she had a knack for truly relishing life. She thought deeply, wrote brilliantly, spoke honestly, loved earnestly, laughed easily, and lived with glorious vitality. And she never met a piece of chocolate she didn't like.

Mari approached her illness and treatment with tenacity and determination. She advocated for herself with ferocity, never losing her belief in herself or her instincts. To her last days Mari's courage, incandescent vibrancy, and intellectual rigor was matched only by her kind-heartedness. Mari lived by her theoretical ideals in that she faced the existential crisis of life and treated each new decision as a creative act."

Mari, Mission Soul. Mission accomplished.

You can tell a Mission Soul who has incarnated by:

Their focus is on a specific mission in life – and it can be on a local, regional or global level in influencing others who are asleep or just starting to wake up to begin the process of becoming self-aware. They are usually found in a specific skill and they are usually in the peer group over time, a leader, not a follower. They could be a school teacher, a professional caregiver, a police person, a ditch digger, an engineer, a pilot, a grocery store clerk, a field hand, a jockey, a farmer, a secretarial assistant, a dog walker....they come in all types of careers or jobs that they take.

The nature of the job is only important in that the energy of their aura touches people who are around them, day in and day out. It is a silent ‘commingling’ when auras meet and move through one another. An aura can each influence the other, if the person unconsciously decides to accept or reject the other person’s auric energy. Every person has a choice when this glancing contact occurs. Just think about being squeezed into a subway! How many auras are overlapping, meeting and moving through one another?

The Mission Soul’s “job” in this incarnation is one of, to borrow the term, “an influencer,” by just being in a human body. They also may have a lot of leadership abilities as well and frequently rise to the top of whatever their ‘job/profession’ is over time. It is an invitation and subtle persuasion going on at the energetic/vibrational level. In today’s world, it’s easy enough to share with the world, literally, via written/ebooks, PODcasts, the Internet, giving a webinar, a local talk to a group of people, or at a conference. Getting the ‘word’ out has never been easier or faster. There are websites devoted solely to metaphysics and mysticism and spirituality, such as Gaia.com. Whether people who are asleep ever visit them, is a wholly different situation. That is why so many souls have incarnated, to be ‘available’ in a local sort of way, to let those who are asleep to be gently be grazed by one of these healing, transformational auras. Many Mission Souls are in the ‘trenches’ with those who are asleep.

Take for instance, as an example, a food distribution center where one of the many volunteers who give the free food, is a mission soul. They have close contact with the client, helping, explaining, carrying or doing many other jobs to bring needed food to their basket or their car. Perhaps a smile. A kindness. A thoughtful gesture to those who are deeply stressed by life, almost always is welcomed by the client. Just that simple moment of human care, can work wonders and is very healing and awakens such an individual. Becoming awake is a process and can take many incarnations to accomplish. That is why Love energy, in all its many layers of meaning and expression in all our lives, is so important to the overall health of humanity rising its collective vibration together, rather than sinking into an abysmal, daily hell or this world ending in eventual destruction.

These incarnated souls are very mature adults and do a lot less “projecting” of their own wounds they’re working on to heal, than the rest of the population who is asleep, immature, and blames everything on everyone else. Those who refuse to take RESPONSIBILITY for their decision and choices they have made always blame others for their situation they CHOSE to get into in the first place. The old adage, “You made your bed, now lay in it,” is alive and well in today’s victim world order. It is a dark choice to always blame others.

A Mission Soul is NOT PERFECT. But a hallmark of them is that they are extremely SELF-AWARE, which stops them from taking or making a dark choice, versus a Light choice, for the good of all. They WORK constantly at being non-judgmental toward every human being, and instead, try their best to see them in a compassionate state that they are doing/trying the best they can. Mission Soul’s make mistakes, too...but they will speak up or “do the right thing,” to equalize their poor choice/behavior and most importantly, learn from that mistake and not repeat it. They can admit a mistake. They can say “I’m sorry.” Or “I was wrong.” They can rectify the wrong choice as much as possible once it is out into the 3D reality and turn it into a positive.

They are humble, have humility, do not seek the spotlight or to hog a conversation of: “me, me, me” instead of listening to the other party (you). They are excellent listeners because they see/perceive and hear with the ears and eyes of their HEART. Their 3D Ego is well in check and does not run them at all. It is put in its rightful place as part of the “container,” i.e., the physical body/home our spirit lives within during an incarnation and it is secondary in that individual’s life.

One of the qualities a Mission Soul possesses is of being a CATALYST. The energy contained within their aura possesses the ability to ‘share’ with someone else’s aura. It’s normally not a conscious sharing, and usually not thought about beforehand; it simply happens. Why? Because Mission Souls are aligned with the advanced souls who are our higher teachers, but it could also be a master or an archetype(s) that they are working with, also. They have chosen and volunteered for “Earth Duty.”

For example, a lot of the Mission Souls come from the SERVICE path who are in body right now, to hold the energy of Light against the darkness that began decades ago here on Earth. Those who walk a dark path have now ripped off their masks to show who they really are: greedy, controlling, desires power over others, demeans/subjugates/suppresses women, the LGBTQ, and color of a person’s skin, their religion or belief system – you get the idea. We see it around us every day. It is a Civil War between people of the Light and people of the Dark, and its worldwide at this point.

Because we all (whether asleep or awake) have a Chief Guide (CG), she/he/it knows when a certain time/place is set up so that when the mission soul comes into the area, let’s say, a movie theater, and their auras come together with one another. This is an everyday occurrence that may occur, but even at that, the healing energy, the love from the Mission Soul’s aura brushing and moving through another’s aura does affect them on a positive level. And some of that Light energy may be absorbed by the asleep person’s aura. This is why Mission Souls are called a catalyst.

A Mission Soul's aura is usually larger and brighter than a normal person's aura, who is asleep. Because the aura is expanded, people around this individual are constantly moving through it when in proximity of them. It could be while riding on a subway, on a plane, in a grocery store, in a doctor's waiting room...anywhere. The other person may feel better for a while, happier, have more energy than usual, as an example, when this trading of energy occurs.

When a person is touched by this higher vibration of energy, their aura will absorb that higher frequency from the Mission Soul, if they allow it. They can reject it because in 3D, everyone has free will choice. Usually, the asleep person experiences an uplifting of their energy on some level, a sense of peace, calm, or even feels less stressed and perhaps, feels their own burdens to become less heavy to carry. Chances are, they will not know one another during this commingling, but sometimes, they do. The person on that receiving end has a choice as to whether or not to accept this connection and trade of energy, or not. The Mission Soul does not interfere with the process — ever. It will be what it is to be from the asleep person's decision. It's always up to the receiver to decide on their unconscious level whether they want it or not. The Mission Soul never feels drained or weak because her/his aura moves through another person's aura. The one who benefits here is the receiving asleep soul, if they choose to go that route.

Mission Souls are "fed" from a higher, interdimensional source. There is a certain type of energy in the multiverse that is like 'food' for one's aura. The Hindu word for it is "prana." It is an energy that feeds everyone's aura, just as food put in our mouth, feeds our physical body. Every human on Mother Earth 'eats' it, or metabolizes the energy into the energy of their aura. The higher the vibration of their aura, the more prana that person consumes, digests and utilizes to eventually share with those around them, who are asleep. Anyone in a physical body holds only so much energy which is predicated on how much and type of food they consume. In an aura, the cosmic food, the prana, feeds the fields of our aura as well as the rest of our spirit system, including our chakras.

In every changing of the guard, from one age to another every 2,500 years, it is the buffer known as Mission Souls, who come in to assist the 'birthing' of our next age. We live in perilous, exciting times as we are now fully, energetically, locked into the transformative process. Helluva time to be alive! Bring it on! Heart to heart!

Blessed are the old souls, for whom the earth
has longed.
