IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 83-46: COMMON-MODE VALVE FAILURES DEGRADE SURRY'S
RECIRCULATION SPRAY SUBSYSTEM

Addressees:

All nuclear power reactor facilities holding an operating license (OL) or a construction permit (CP).

Purpose:

The primary purpose of this notice is to inform licensees and holders of CPs of the apparent common-mode failures that affected the valves which admit service water to the recirculation spray coolers at the Surry Power Station. Seven of eight motor-operated, 30-in. butterfly valves (four on Unit 1 and three on Unit 2) failed to open during surveillance tests of the recirculation spray subsystem. (See Figure 1, "Service Water System" for the valves that failed to open). The recirculation spray subsystem not only cools and depressurizes the containment following a postulated loss-of-coolant accident (LOCA), it also removes heat from water which is injected into the core by the low pressure safety injection system. These failures, therefore, jeopardized the plant's ability to mitigate the effects of a LOCA. (See Figure 2, "Engineered Safeguards Systems" for the interfacing of the recirculation spray subsystem with the emergency core cooling system.)

A secondary purpose of this notice is to alert licensees and holders of CPs of the susceptibility to common-mode failures of other components or systems using brackish and/or silty service water. Such service water can cause components to fail by plugging resulting from marine growth or silt deposit, by leaking resulting from corrosion or erosion, or by a combination of these effects. Failures of components using such service water have been experienced at several facilities. For example, Salem has experienced about 75 service water related events since 1980. In addition, the issuance of IE Bulletin 80-24 was precipitated by an Indian Point 2 event in 1980 which flooded the containment building with service water. (See Table 1 for a partial listing of LERs issued since 1980 involving failures or degradation of components attributed to hostile service water systems.)

System Description:

The recirculation spray subsystem at the Surry Power Station is designed to mitigate the effects of a postulated LOCA during the recirculation phase of the recovery (i.e., after the water in the refueling water storage tank has been nearly depleted). This is accomplished by returning the containment pressure to a subatmospheric value following a LOCA and by providing for long term heat removal and maintaining the containment at subatmospheric conditions. The extended loss of the recirculation spray subsystem subsequent to a LOCA, therefore, could result in the loss of the ultimate heat sink.

Primary coolant water and emergency core cooling water spilled from a postulated LOCA and the water from the containment spray system would collect in the containment sump. While in the recirculation mode, the containment sump water would be diverted to two subsystems: (1) the low head safety injection subsystem, and (2) the recirculation spray subsystem. Water from the low head safety injection subsystem would be returned to the reactor to cool the core. Water from the recirculation spray subsystem would cool and depressurize containment by the heat removal function of the four recirculation spray coolers. The recirculation spray coolers would not only cool the containment spray water but would also cool the water being returned to the reactor. However, before these coolers can cool the containment and remove the decay heat, at least one of the four normally closed valves that admit service water to the coolers must be opened.

Description of Circumstances:

On February 9, 1983, the Surry Unit 1 recirculation spray subsystem was being tested while the unit was shut down with the reactor coolant temperature and pressure less than 350°F and 450 psig. This test involved the flushing of the four recirculation spray heat exchangers by opening four normally closed motor-operated valves. Opening these 30-in. butterfly valves permits service water to flow through the recirculation spray heat exchangers. However, during this particular test, all four valves failed to open. Because of these failures, the Unit 2 valves that admit service water to the recirculation spray coolers were also tested on February 9, 1983 while Unit 2 was operating at 100% power. Three of the four normally closed motor-operated valves failed to open during this test; however, since opening of only one valve will provide service water to all four coolers, the recirculation spray subsystem was operable.

After the four Unit 1 valves failed to open, each was manually opened by using the valve's hand wheel. Significant torque was required to lift the butterfly discs off their seats. The fact that each valve's failure to open resulted in the tripping of its motor overload device indicates that significant torque would be required to open the valves. After the valves had been manually opened, two responded to the electrical signals from the control room and two failed to respond. As a consequence, the licensee was unable to determine the exact causes of the initial failures for those valves that subsequently responded to the electrical signals. The cause of failures of those that did not respond to the electrical signals was listed as corrosion (one had a corroded motor, the other a corroded torque switch). Although the exact cause or causes for these failures has not been determined, they have been attributed to several factors, or a combination thereof, including:

- Marine growth - barnacles, shells, silt and seagrowth were found on the valve seats and discs;
- Corrosion - two valves failed to open because of a corroded motor and another because of a corroded torque switch. The corrosion appears to be due to either the flooding of the valve pit area that occurred several years ago or to the high moisture content in the valve pit area;
- Infrequent testing - these valves had been only stroke-tested during refueling outages (i.e., approximately every 18 months);
- Low torque switch settings - two Unit 2 valve operators "torqued out" when tested; and
- Marginally sized motors and/or improperly geared valve operators.

Corrective actions taken by the licensee include:

- Cleaning the piping and valve internals;
- Applying marine inhibitor paint on the valve discs;
- Testing the valves quarterly rather than during refueling outages. (Note: The Unit 1 valves operated properly during subsequent testings, but one Unit 2 valve failed to open during subsequent testing because of a low torque switch setting.);
- New motor operators having increased torque output have been engineered and one such operator is being tested at the plant before installing eight such operators. In the interim, the torque switch settings of the installed operators have been increased; and
- Administrative controls - responsibility for the proper operation of these valves has been specifically assigned to a knowledgeable person on each shift. This person is responsible for ensuring the proper operation of these valves during accident conditions by going to the valve pit area and manually opening the valves, if so required.

In addition, prior to this event but subsequent to the above mentioned flooding of the valve pit area, metal dikes had been constructed around the valve pits and water level detectors had been installed to prevent or detect flooding of these valves.

No written response to this notice is required; however, it is suggested that licensees and holders of construction permits review this information for applicability at their facilities.

that subsequently responded to the electrical signals. However, the licensee postulates that the initial failures of these valves may have resulted from a combination of marginally sized motors and higher than normal breakaway torque requirements due to low water temperature and possible seat creep. After examining the two valves that failed to respond to the electrical signals from the control room, the licensee determined that one failure was due to a corroded motor and the other to a corroded torque switch.

The results of the initial tests of the four service water valves for the recirculation spray coolers at Unit 2 are as follows: (1) two valves failed in an intermediate position; (2) one valve failed to respond; and (3) one valve functioned properly. As in the case for Unit 1, the valves that failed were manually opened after which an attempt was made to operate the valves remotely from the control room. The two valves that failed in an intermediate position responded successfully to the electrical demands from the control room after they had been manually opened and their torque switch settings had been increased. Except for the effects of the low torque switch settings, the licensee was not able to determine the exact causes of the initial failures of these two valves. The valve that failed to respond initially also failed to respond to the electrical demands from the control room after the valve had been manually opened. Upon examination of this valve and its operator, the licensee determined that the failure was due to a corroded motor.

The short-term corrective actions taken by the licensee included replacing the failed valve motor on Unit 2 (the operating unit); increasing the torque switch setting on the two Unit 2 valves that failed in an intermediate position; and testing the operation of all Unit 2 valves to assure their operability. Interim corrective actions taken by the licensee to prevent recurrence include cycling the valves on a quarterly basis (they were previously cycled during refueling outages); implementing administrative procedures to assure timely operator action in the event of future valve failures (the valves are accessible during a postulated LOCA); and conducting an in-depth investigation of possible modification to the valve operators.

No written response to this notice is required; however, it is suggested that licensees and holders of construction permits review this information for applicability at their facilities.
