INTRODUCTION

This publication contains a listing of known surface water irrigation organizations in New Mexico - 721 acequia or ditch associations, seven irrigation districts, two ditch companies and five conservancy districts.

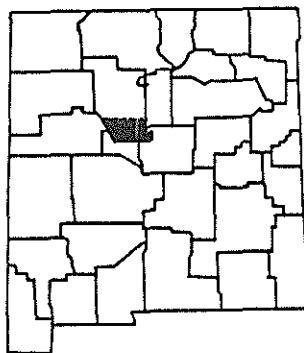

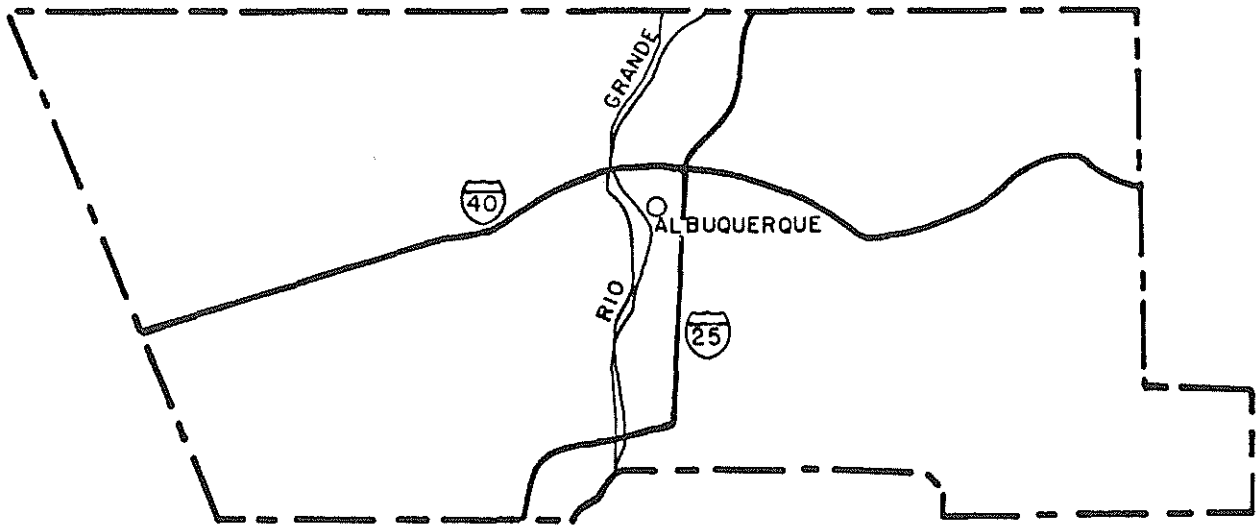

The list includes information on the number of irrigators, total acreage irrigated, and largest and smallest farm unit, measured in acres, for each organization. Also provided is the name and address of a contact person, as well as data on whether organizational bylaws have been filed with the New Mexico State Engineer Office. The information is organized alphabetically by county and then by stream system. A county map showing major streams and landmarks precedes each county section.

Irrigation ditch systems play an important role in the agricultural economy of New Mexico, where rainfall is inadequate for dryland farming. Irrigation was already being practiced by the pueblo Indians when early Spanish colonists came to the region. To irrigate small farms, the Spanish developed a system of acequias which remain in existence today. Irrigation districts and conservancy districts were developed as a result of federal reclamation laws adopted in the early 1900s. These districts operate mainly for the irrigation of large commercial farms, but also serve other purposes such as flood protection.

It is estimated that there are close to 1,000 ditch associations in the state; however, information is currently not available for all of them. This publication will be updated when additional data becomes available. It should remain current until at least December 1987, when most ditch organizations will hold elections for new commissioners and some of the contact persons listed will change.

This document updates a previous State Engineer Office publication entitled "A Roster, by County, of Organizations Concerned with Surface Water Irrigation in New Mexico," published in 1969 and reprinted in 1978. Acknowledgment is given to the U.S. Soil Conservation Service for its assistance in preparing the publication.
